BREECH-LOADERS.
WE have this opportunity of informing sportsmen and friends that the first installment of our full stock of these goods (guns exclusively designed for Breech Loading Shot Guns alone) has arrived, and is ready for inspection. The Breech Loading Shot Guns alone our assortment includes comprises upward of 30 different styles and patterns, ranging through every obtainable grade. Those wishing to purchase can be profitably assisted here as they never before, owing to present low cost of gold and sterling exchange, while all our old stock has been marked down to suit the shrinkage in value from depreciation of gold. Don't take our word for it, but call and see for yourselves, and then you will do business with us. FOLSOM BROS.,

The Camel.

The camel is an awkward, ugly, unclean, stupid and ill-tempered animal, and looks like personified misery and discontent. But it is truly "the ship of the desert," and admirably adapted for its use on the boundless ocean of sand from the Nile to the Euphrates. It has needed no repair since the days of Abraham, and could not be improved by any invention in navigation. No horse or donkey would answer the purpose. The camel has the reputation of patient endurance and passive submission, which some, however, deny, or regard as mere stupidity. It carries its heaviest burdens on its single or double hump, which is its natural pack-saddle. Its very name means burden-bearer. It can travel five (some say nine, or even fifteen) days in scorching heat without water, and resort to its inside tank or cistern, which at the sacrifice of its own life has saved the life of many a traveler. It lives on barley, dry beans and chopped straw while in camp, and on the prickly thistles and thorns of the wilderness, which much to the annoyance of the rider, it snatches from the wayside and leisurely chews as a positive luxury. It supplies its master with milk, fuel, sandals and garments, and, having done its duty, it leaves its bleached skeleton to the arid waste as a landmark to future travelers.

With peculiar gurgling growls or sighs of protest, unlike the sounds of any other animal, the camel goes down on its knees by four distinct motions, till it lies on its belly. Growling, it receives its burden; growling, it gets up by several jerks, first on the hind, then on the front legs, so that the rider is violently jerked forward, and then as violently jerked backward, and must hold fast to the saddle or be thrown down on the sands. Once started, the beast moves with long strides, on its soft, spongy feet, steadily and undeviatingly forward, as under a painful sense of duty, but without the least interest in the rider. A primitive wooden frame serves as saddle, and the mattress or pillow on which we sleep at night is thrown over it as a seat. The swinging motion high in the air is disagreeable, and makes us a little sea-sick, but we gradually get used to it. To break the monotony and the fatigue, we change our position; now riding on horseback, now crossing the legs like the Arabs, now sitting on one side and then on the other.—Dr. Philip Schaff.

FOREIGN AT LAST.—The Rev. Dr. Broaddus, in a recent lecture to the students of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, referring to the Jews, said: "Notwithstanding the presence of Brother Jaeger (a converted Jew), I must say they have always been noted for their inordinate love of money." Mr. Jaeger immediately retorted: "Then I have found the lost tribes—they are the Yankees."

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The camp meeting on Seashore Camp Ground for 1878 will commence on Wednesday, the tenth day of July, and continue from eight to ten days.

To strangers who have never visited the encampment, we may say that it is situated and fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, midway between the cities of New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala., and is readily reached by the New Orleans and Mobile railroad, on which two trains run daily from and to either city, stopping at the Camp Ground station, only a few hundred feet from the encampment. Trains leave New Orleans, at the depot, head of Canal street, at 7.30 A. M., 3.30 and 5 P. M.; and Mobile, at foot of Government street, at 2.20 A. M. and 8.45 P. M.

The fare on the above road, from New Orleans to camp ground, the round trip, is $3 20; and from Mobile, the round trip, $2 65. Freight at one-half the usual prices.

Tickets will be on sale at the offices and depots, in both cities, on and after Monday, the eighth of July, and continue good to return up to the twentieth of July.

On the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans railroad, at all important points from Canton southward, tickets for the round trip to the camp ground and back, via New Orleans, can be had during the above dates for one and one-fifth, the usual fare.

On Morgan's Louisiana and Texas railroad, from Morgan City to New Orleans, one fare for the round trip, going and returning.

On the Mobile and Montgomery railroad round-trip tickets will be put on sale at Montgomery and local stations to Mobile, Ala., for visitors to the Seashore Camp Ground, at the rate of six cents per mile, on and from July 9 up to July 15. Tickets good to return up not later than July 22, 1878.

On the Mobile and Ohio railroad tickets will be sold for visitors to the Seashore Camp Ground, at Carlin and stations south, to Mobile and return, at three cents per mile. Tickets on sale on and from the fifth up to the fifteenth of July, and return coupon good to July 25, 1878.

The restaurant will be under the management of a committee of the trustees, with the assistance of an experienced caterer, where visitors can be furnished with good and satisfactory board at the reasonable price of fifty cents for breakfast, seventy-five cents for dinner and fifty cents for supper, or $1 75 per day.

Comfortable lodging accommodations are provided at fifty cents per night.

A limited number of wooden tents are prepared for renting to householders or families, at prices from $4 to $8, according to size and position.

Cots, with pillow and sheet, will also be rented at $1 50 for the term of the meeting.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make their own arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any member of the board of trustees, to wit: William Otis, H. L. Hopper, Price Williams, William March and Edward H. Gpuhl, of Mobile; E. F. Griffin and John Potter, of Mississippi; W. H. Foster, George W. W. Goodwyn, Philip Hallaran, John H. Keller, H. O. L. Rayne, W. B. Thomson, Charles M. Fish and W. G. Tonner, of New Orleans; or to James Tuarp, the keeper of the grounds.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
PHILIP HALLARAN, Secretary. 27

THE time for holding the camp meeting at the Trenton camp ground, in the Trenton circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, embraces the third Sunday in September, commencing on Thursday night before. This meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan. Provision will be made for the preachers and their horses; also conveyance to Morton, on the twelfth of September to convey the preachers to the camp ground. They are invited to attend this camp meeting. (4) R. A. SIGLEY, Pastor.

THERE will be a camp meeting near Hickory Station, Newton circuit, beginning on Thursday night September 5, embracing the second Sunday. The ministers of Meridian and Brandon districts are hereby invited, also all others who can come. Conveyances for ministers will be provided from a point in the camp ground. 4 ROBT. H. DOWSER, P. C.

MAMRE CAMP GROUND is located on the Selma, Rome and Dalton railroad, three miles south of Randolph, in Talladega district, Alabama Conference. The time for holding the Mamre camp meeting will embrace the third Sunday in September, commencing on Friday night before. (27) J. B. ANDERSON, P. C.

THE Eufaula District Conference of the Alabama Conference will convene in Cheyford, Barbour county, Ala., July 10, 1878. Upon arrival the delegates will report at the courthouse to be assigned to their homes.

MORNING TWILIGHT.

BY ANNIE R. STILLMAN.

A pause upon the edge of day,
When Nature seems to kneel and pray;
The hush that precludes coming song;
The drought which makes the world more strong;
The fly-leaf of an unread book;
The bridge that spans the sleeping brook
Which separates the hills of night,
And day's refulgent mounts of light;
The vestibule all dim and stilled,
The palace chambers, music-filled;
The gates which part, and yet unite,
The Land of Dreams, the Realms of Sight;
Time's brief parenthesis between
The star's decline, the sunrise sheen;
The essence of a holy psalm,
Embodied peace, and pictured calm.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, July 2.—The Anchor line steamboat Capitol City, while lying at the elevator, was totally destroyed by fire at two o'clock this morning. The elevator also took fire and was entirely consumed.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—Henry J. Montreal is appointed internal revenue special agent for Texas.

Much interest is felt here among scientists in the total solar eclipse to take place on the twenty-ninth of July. All arrangements have now been fully perfected, and five parties of astronomers from the United States Naval Observatory will shortly leave for their points of observation.

The parties are in charge of Prof. Simon Newcomb, Prof. William Harkness, Prof. J. R. Eastman, Prof. L. S. Holden, and Prof. A. Hall, the distinguished discoverer of the marsial planets, who will locate near Los Animos, Arizona. A number of independent parties of observers from the Signal Bureau and elsewhere will be in the field, and many distinguished astronomers from Europe are coming over to observe the eclipse.

GALVESTON, July 4.—A special to the News from Concho says Sheriff Archer, of El Paso county, reports to Judge Blocker that one thousand Mexicans are en route and drilling at El Paso, Mexico, and have petitioned the Chihuahua government to cross over and rescue Desidalo Apodaca and disperse the Texas State troops. The prisoner, Desidalo Apodaca, has implicated some prominent Americans in the December riots.

PITTSBURG, July 5.—Yesterday's storm was the most destructive one in the loss of life and property for several years.

In the city the lightning struck several houses, and the flood did great damage, but no lives were lost. In the rural districts the greatest loss occurred. Houses and bridges were washed away and crops greatly damaged. At Sandy Creek, a village twelve miles above this city, the water rose to a depth of four feet, and carried everything before it. The house of Abner Conner, containing himself, wife and child, Ira Long, and a man named Boyd, a stranger who had stepped in during the storm, was carried away and all were drowned.

ROCHESTER, July 7.—Prof. Lewis Swift, of this city, discovered a comet in the constellation of Hercules, at 9 o'clock this morning, in the right ascension, about seventeen hours four minutes; declination north, eighteen degrees. It is large, but faint, and is moving very slowly in the southward.

NEW YORK, July 8.—Communication by telegraph between Key West and Havana has been restored by the repair of No. 3 cable of the International Ocean Telegraph Company. It is expected that duplicate cable No. 2 will be repaired in a few days.

MERIDIAN, July 8.—A fire to-day at Enterprise, Miss., destroyed twenty-four business houses. Loss, $50,000. Insurance, $20,000.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, July 2.—The Pan-Anglican Synod assembled to-day at Lambeth palace. Ninety bishops were present at the first meeting. The archbishop of Canterbury presided over the conference. He urged that the question of maintaining the faith against infidelity be the principal subject of the thoughts of delegates.

A debate on the best mode of maintaining union among various Anglican churches followed. The Bishops of Pittsburg, Louisiana, and several English and colonial bishops spoke. The matter was finally referred to a committee.

LONDON, July 5.—At Thursday's sitting of the Congress some secondary questions were settled, as well as those already mentioned. It was settled that monks of all nationalities inhabiting Mount Athos should have equal privileges.

The only reservation as to the Danube is that Russia, while acknowledging the entire freedom of navigation of that river in time of peace, does not admit of such freedom in time of war.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times bases his supposition as to the probable settlement of the Batoum question by Russia receiving Batoum on condition of never fortifying under any pretext, on Bismarck's utterances at Tuesday's interview, and believes that if the question is not settled privately, but it is brought forward at Saturday's sitting, Bismarck will resolutely take Russia's part, and declare that, while she should applaud any compromise, he cannot but consider binding the signatures of Turkey and England to the San Stefano treaty, and the Anglo-Russian agreement respectively.

BERLIN, July 5.—The Greek question was settled in the Congress to-day. A resolution was adopted that the Congress invites the Porte to come to an understanding with Greece for the rectification of her frontiers, and is of the opinion that the line should be from the Valley of Salambria, on the Egean, to the mouth of the Kalamos river opposite Corfu. In the event of difficulties arising in the negotiations, the powers are ready to render their good offices as mediators.

An official bulletin announces that the Emperor's wounds are healed.

BERLIN, July 6.—The fourteenth sitting of the Congress was prolonged from a quarter past two till half-past five. The Batoum question, which had been previously discussed from noon by the commission over which Prince Hohenlohe presides, was the subject of deliberation, but no conclusion was reached. This is not surprising, as the question of Batoum as a fortress was bound up with the question of the Dardanelles.

The Congress has agreed in principle to the three points namely: To maintain the Dardanelles closed, as at present to ships of war; to cede Batoum to Russia, and make of it a free port. There remains the question of dismantling the fortifications, and forbidding the Russians to fortify the coast. These conditions were conditionally present to the minds of several of the plenipotentiaries but none uttered words which would have appeared as a stor encroaching upon the sovereignty rights of a victorious monarch. The anxiety to finish and the desire to maintain the present agreements, however, are so strong that no doubt is felt that some compromise will be found to-morrow by Prince Hohenlohe's committee snuffling to calm the apprehensions of the powers without infringing the Czar Alexander's dignity. There are frequent interviews between Lord Beaconsfield and Prince Gortschakoff, who openly pays tribute to Lord Beaconsfield's statesman-like qualities. The relations of plenipotentiaries are excellent, and the prospects of a happy termination of the Congress next Thursday are most hopeful.

LONDON, July 7.—Various special correspondents confirm the report that the Batoum question is virtually settled. Gortschakoff declared at the opening of Saturday's sitting that the Czar, as proof of his desire to satisfy legitimate interests, had resolved to make Batoum a free port. Beaconsfield announced that England could not but be satisfied with the Czar's reassuring resolve. Salisbury warmly advocated the claims of the Lizis to be protected from annexation. Private negotiations are now proceeding on this subject, Russia objecting to having a warlike and independent people in the immediate neighborhood of his new possession. There are also some slight difficulties in regard to the dismantlement of fortifications, the Russians claiming that some of them are natural features of the ground.

The Times' special dispatch from Berlin states that the treaty will be signed on Saturday next. Negotiations between Austria and Turkey relative to the occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina have commenced. The Turks desire Austria to sign a document acknowledging the Sultan's title to the provinces.

VIENNA, July 7.—The occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina has been finally postponed until August, in order to give time for the restoration of the railways and for the organization of the future administration of the provinces.

BERLIN, July 7.—It has been decided to grant autonomy to western Roumania, Epirus, Thessaly and Crete, to be secured by European control.

LONDON, July 8.—The following are the features of the convention between Great Britain and Turkey: It is stipulated that if Batoum Kars and Ardahan are retained by Russia, and if an attempt is made at any future time to annex a portion of the Sultan's territory in Asia, not ceded by the definitive treaty of peace, Great Britain engages to join the Sultan in defending his territory by force of arms.

The Sultan in return promises to introduce the necessary reforms to be agreed upon later.

In order to enable Great Britain to make necessary provision for executing her engagement, the Sultan agrees to assign the Island of Cyprus to be occupied and administered by Great Britain, who agrees to pay the Porte the present excess of the Island's revenue over its expenditures. Finally, Great Britain engages to evacuate the island and terminate the convention if Russia restores Batoum, Kars and Ardahan to Turkey. The convention to be ratified within a month.

A dispatch to the Times from Calcutta reports 1,700 houses destroyed by a conflagration in Mundalay.

The Daily Telegraph this morning has the following:

BERLIN, July 7.—England and Turkey have concluded a defensive treaty.

England occupies Cyprus immediately, and guarantees integrity of Asiatic Turkey.

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent also says: This defensive treaty does not necessarily come within the scope of the deliberations of the Congress. It is an independent contract between the powers concerned, the validity of which could not be called in question except at the cost of war. The arrangement will, however, be announced to the Congress on Monday.

The position of Cyprus will give England absolute control over the Euphrates valley. A line of railway having this object in view is to be constructed.

No further Russian encroachment in this direction will be possible so far as Asia is concerned. England and Turkey will practically form one power.

The Wesleyan Missionary Society.

The Wesleyans of England look upon Dr. Coke as the father of their missions. When he was designated by Wesley to the superintendence of the missionary enterprises of the new and growing denomination America was the most important field. In this country and in Canada, in the Hudson's Bay territory and in British Columbia, there were extensive and promising fields, which Dr. Coke did his utmost to occupy, crossing the Atlantic eighteen times on his missionary tours, and giving his personal attention to the collection of funds. A storm in one of his voyages drove his ship to the West Indies, and the religious work which was begun in these islands soon became fruitful, and great results sprang from it. It is well known that Dr. Coke closed his career at sea, on his way with six young men to found a mission in India. Out of these early missionary efforts came the Wesleyan Missionary Society, in 1813—almost half a century after the first foreign missions had been begun.

The society occupies the third place in the list of English missionary societies in the amount of its income; but it is the only one of the eight foreign societies that has been compelled to report a decrease in receipts. All the others have made some gains—some small and some very large. The Wesleyans, however, have fallen short of their contributions last year by only about $1,000. The receipts were $730,085, which is almost two dollar to each member in England. American societies would be very glad to have their income reach this proportion. The Methodist Society, for instance, would have an income which would be larger perhaps than it could handle right away. Where it has now half a million or so it would have more than three millions. About one seventh of the income of the Wesleyan Society was raised by the Australasian Conference and by the missions.

William Newborn, of Banbury, presided at the annual meeting. The annual report which was read by Dr. William Morley Punshon, stated that there were in the employ of the society 878 missionaries, who occupy 632 central stations or circuits, and over for 143,345 full members and 19,892 probationers. It should be remembered, however, that these statistics include missions in Ireland and Europe. The Irish mission, which are the oldest, employ 38 ministers, who despite many hinderances, have gathered together 3,519 members. There is little that is encouraging from the Conference in France. This mission has been in a stationary, if not declining, condition several years, and the report says a new agent has been appointed for it—the Rev. W. Gibson—and new measures are to be taken. The other Continental missions are in Spain, Portugal, Austria, Italy and Germany. In the former missionaries are stationed at Barcelona, Gibraltar, and in the Balearic Isles. The Bible sellers have prosecuted their work amidst much persecution, but there have been fruitful revival services and the schools are well attended. One of the missionaries writes that 'Catalonia seems to be specially visited by God. Missionaries of fifteen years' experience never saw such promises as they see to-day.' In Portugal the missionaries have met with encouragement, and in Italy the outlook is promising, both in north and south Italy. The German mission has suffered a decrease of members; but Methodist literature has had a large circulation, and the society in Vienna is in a prosperous condition.

The missions in India, though disturbed by the famine, are growing steadily, and won, rather than lost, by the great calamity. It has afforded many opportunities for preaching, and disposed the minds of many to hear the gospel. A zenana mission is to be opened in Calcutta, and an improvement has been made in the system of training native agents. In Bangalore 65 adults were baptized during the year, and in both districts of Ceylon there is a grand awakening. The work was never so full of life. Villages and cities are alike being moved. The vernacular and high schools and the native pastors are stimulating this movement.

The China missions report 300 converts—an increase of 43—with 72 on trial. There are 14 European and 3 native missionaries, who can now "trust themselves more to the good will of the populace, and venture upon tours beyond the bounds of the treaty ports." Little has been done in the way of providing schools, the missionaries giving their time almost wholly to preaching. The "great opium difficulty" still stands in their way.

The missions in South Africa have been affected somewhat by the wars; but none of the native members have joined the rebellion. In addition to war, there has been drouth, which has caused much suffering. Notwithstanding these hinderances, there has been an increase of 680 members, with 5,000 on trial. In the West Indies 100 missionaries are working successfully. They report an increase of 1,000 members, with 2,000 or more on trial. In conclusion, the report refers to the fact that Australia and Canada have missionary societies of their own, of whose operations it gives no particulars. The report says the church must take the alternative of retrenchment or add $100,000 more to the funds of the society. This amount is needed to conduct the operations of the society on the present scale.

Among the many speeches which followed the reading of the report was one by the Rev. Silvester Whitehead, missionary from China, whose theme was the magnitude and difficulties of mission work in China. Among the difficulties the greatest was the opium trade. "Oh! I wish I had an hour to speak about that accursed opium trade. Wherever we go to preach the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ in China, we are met with the cry: 'How about the opium trade?' It is the most terrible question that can fall upon the ears of missionaries in China. We do our best to teach them that, if they refuse to smoke it, by and by our ships will not convey it; but they tell us that we have taught them the habit, and that they are unable to break it off. And that, I am bound to say, is in many cases true." Then we are told to "go home and exhort your own people not to send the opium to us."—Independent.

Paris Exhibition.

BIRMINGHAM PENS AT THE EXHIBITION.

We have already had occasion to notice several cases of exhibits which have been sent to Paris by our leading pen manufacturers, and it would seem that this extremely important branch of our local trade will be well represented. There is no town in the world upon which those who write—and that, of course, means the vast majority of the intelligent—are more dependent than upon Birmingham, and it would be a grave omission if among the industries that will be exemplified at the forthcoming Exhibition, we did not show every one how it was that we attained and kept our superiority in the making of these weapons, which, in Lord Lytton's oft-quoted words, are mightier than the sword. If the Birmingham manufacturers have, as a body, acquired such a reputation there are none the less several among them whose names are individually familiar all the world over to hundreds of thousands who may not have the slightest idea where pens are made, or even how they are made. In English-speaking countries, at all events, there must be few who do not recognize in "Joseph Gillott" an old and well-tried friend. The firm of Gillott & Sons have, in common with many of their brother manufacturers, prepared a special case in which to show off to the best advantage the goods which they intend to represent them in Paris. It is of strikingly elegant design, and is formed in the shape of a kind of book case, with a lower case of about twice the depth. The upper portion is divided into three compartments. In the center is a semi-circular niche, which is occupied by a pen and holder of Brobdignagian dimensions. The metal part is an exaggerated copy of the ordinary barrel pen, and has had lavished on it all the careful workmanship and elaborate finish of a veritable work of art. It is polished and split at the nib in the ordinary way, and has been ornamented with pierced work of elegant design. The holder is composed partly of Coromandel wood and partly of ebony, both highly polished, and the whole, which is no less than six feet in length, bears the name of the great founder of the firm. The two side compartments are devoted to tasteful arrangements of pens, which have been made for the purpose of showing how great is the variety and how influite the style of treatment in which an article which can only be used for one purpose is capable of being made. In the center is a royal cushion or bank, upon which are arranged, side by side, rows of pens of different colors and graduated sizes, and round these are extended arrangements of lines, rows, circles and stars, made in a similar way, in pens of a hundred different shades, a hundred different makes and a hundred different sizes. The exquisite skill bestowed on some highly-finished specimens of polished pencil work is particularly noticeable, and a cujdal effect is gained by the introduction of small stars made of pens so small that it is difficult to believe, until they are very closely examined, that they are actually made in the same way and subjected to the same processes as the monster we have already described. Upon the sides of the upper case are two long and narrow strips of leather upon which are shown, with explanatory remarks in English and French, the different stages which have to be gone through before the plain sheet of steel can be transformed into the thing of which it can be said that, looking at its size, nothing can surpass it in utility. Messrs. Gillott do not boast themselves the largest manufacturers of pens in Birmingham, their specialty being quality, and we cannot see how workmanship can do more for their productions than it has done. Durability, smoothness and pliability, with such an enormous variety as can satisfy the demands of the most exacting penman—beyond such qualifications the manufacturers can only be distinguished by some apparent novelty which adds nothing to their intrinsic value. The test of years of ever-increasing demand has proved beyond doubt the firm have got to a pitch at which they need not fear the possibility of being surpassed; and even if they were simply to go on producing those pens which have now for years been recognized favorites, they would not in any way lose the position they have gained. Of these well-known pens they show twenty-one different kinds, distinguished by names which are as familiar as household words, and by numbers which show how very great is the variety which the firm are producing. The effect of the different colored pens—gold, blue, black and silver—is considerably enhanced by backgrounds of colored leather, and by the dark and massive appearance of the ebonized mahogany of which the case is made.

Our Mission Work.

The late secretary of the Board of Missions is entitled to the gratitude of the church for faithful and laborious service rendered in a great cause. He has won the affection and confidence of the church, which will be no small encouragement in his new and difficult post. Let the whole church remember that "except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it," and make prayer for him without ceasing.

Dr. Kelley, the associate secretary, deserves better return than he has received. He has given years of time and labor to the mission work without remuneration; and his devotion, inspired by no selfish considerations, has contributed in no small degree to the measure of success realized. I think I may, without transgressing the limits of propriety, in the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, render thanks at least to Dr. Kelley for his generous service.

I am now charged with the trust so faithfully administered hitherto. I cannot claim to be the equal of my predecessors in knowledge and ability. In respect of conviction of the importance of the work and interest in its success I yield to no man. I am ready, as much as in me lies, to advocate the claims of our mission work anywhere and at all times. I expect the same cordial support and co-operation which have made the labor of my predecessors a blessing to themselves and to the church. It is not unreasonable to ask for more. I ought to reap the fruit of the labors of the past in a more abundant zeal and a more liberal contribution to the cause which most fully expresses the mind and purpose of the church's Lord.

Is it not high time that the Southern Methodist Church should make ready to discharge its responsibility, in measure, under the "great commission?" It is not a question of resources. Whether we have one talent, five or ten, we have enough to meet all our Lord's demands. Have we brought out all our resources? Great and effectual doors are opened to us which we have not entered. Is it because we have not means? Or is it because many of us have our talents furled? The careful covering with the napkin is not sufficient to keep away the earthly odor which infects them. I trust in God that I shall come to reap the harvest from the seed sown in the years gone, while I sow for the reaping of others to come after me.

I desire to call special attention to the new feature in our missionary operations, introduced by our late General Conference. The Woman's Missionary Society was authorized and all necessary provision for its organization was ordered to be inserted in the Discipline. The initiatory movement was made in a convention of our Christian women at Atlanta, and matters are now in train for its successful progress. Much is expected from this branch of our work. Dr. Kelley has prepared a brief but sufficient statement of the action of the General Conference and the inception of the enterprise, which will, I hope, find its way to every congregation in the church. It furnishes a satisfactory plan of organization.

Brethren, give me your sympathy, prayers and co-operation. I will do the best I can.

A. W. WILSON.

What M. Monod Says.

We copy the following very striking facts from a speech just made by Rev. Theodore Monod before the Religious Tract Society:

A readiness to hear the gospel exists in this country to an enormous extent. It was quite a mistake to suppose that the people of Paris, who represent the average people of France, a large proportion of them having, in fact, come from various parts of the country, were very far gone in opposition to the gospel. Some of them, indeed, were so. The writers in the newspapers, generally speaking, were; but the common people were not, and a great responsibility rested upon that society in relation to them. He believed that even the most skeptical people—and, after all, the great reason for skepticism is that the people were profoundly ignorant of the Bible and the truth which it taught—might be reached, and were even being reached, at the present time. Let him give an instance or two. He held in his hand a manuscript which was given to him by a Christian lady, the wife of a Protestant pastor in France. It related to a French workman who was exceedingly intelligent, but of violent temper, a great swearer, and a decided opponent of all religion. He was a Roman Catholic, as was also his wife, to whom he said, on the day of their marriage: "We have been at church to-day; but neither I nor you will ever go there again." The lady who gave him (M. Monod) the papers one day presented that man with a New Testament. Some time after, while he was lying ill in a hospital she visited him there, and he then told her that he now understood the gospel. At last death was drawing nigh and she asked him how he felt. He replied: "My soul is at perfect peace; I am happy." These were the words not of an experienced Christian but of one who a short time before was not better, but rather worse, than the average of the skeptical people in France.

There was now a most striking movement in France in the direction of Protestantism, coming from two different quarters. One part of that movement was popular, and was connected with the Reformed Church of France. He would give one or two illustrations of what was going on. In a place in the Department of the Haute Loire there was a poor washerwoman who had become an evangelical Protestant. She openly used her Bible in spite of attempts to frighten her; and she remained steadfast, although the Romish priest told her that she could not expect to wash Christian linen in Protestant waters. (Laughter.) The American pastor in Paris, Mr. Hitchcock, had testified, on good grounds, that an extensive work was being done in that part of France. In one department 31 heads of families, representing 141 individuals, asked for an evangelist to preach the gospel, and the request was granted. Under the law on the subject, only 20 persons could be present at once, but the room in which the meeting was held being on the ground floor, and the window being opened, about 150 persons who were collected outside heard every word that was said.

Another movement was that of thinkers or philosophers, who seemed to be convinced that the future welfare of France depended on its becoming what it seemed about to become in the sixteenth century—a Protestant country. These were men with wild dreams and but little faith. Some of their views appeared to be tolerably well expressed in the recent work of M. Lavelaye, of Belgium, when he said: "Whereas the principle of the Renaissance was a return to antiquity, that of the Reformation was a return to the gospel; and the gospel being superior to antiquity must give better food." Another writer of the same class was M. Renouvier, who said that the Reformed churches might become again what violence alone prevented them from becoming in the sixteenth century, when it seemed about to achieve a pacific conquest of Europe, and who expressed disbelief in "the virtue of a pure negation to change the moral habits of a people." Further, M. Revelland, the editor of an influential newspaper at Trois, in the Department of the Aube, said he thought the ground was marvelously prepared for the spread of Protestantism, that being said in a small book which was circulated very extensively in France, Switzerland and Belgium. The same writer there said that he hoped the majority of his nation would plant their footsteps firmly on the ground which lay between the quicksands of atheism and those of clericalism.

THE MUMMY.—Atlanta, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, is considered as a stronghold of Northern Methodism by people at a distance. The Northern Church has a paper there. Bishop Haven claims it as a home. We expected to see some strength and activity among the Northern Methodists in that city. It was difficult even to find the corpse. The dry-rot had finished up what was there. It is a delusion and a snare. It is a maelstrom of Northern "Methodist dollars." Two thousand sunk yearly on that paper!

How long can such a sham continue? The Rev. J. H. Vincent, the editor of their Sunday school publications, while at Atlanta, told these people and preachers—as a Northern Methodist—Advocate (the Southwestern) reports—"that as a church they had no business there." How different is the opinion of this honest visitor from the tone of the men in the South fed by missionary money! Poor fellows! They are doing so much better than they did at home "down East," and are petted as martyrs and idolized at camp-meetings along the cool lakes of New York. The temptation is too strong.

And what would become of Bishop Haven if fraternity and common sense should prevail? His occupation would be gone. No more men in buckram to back Sir John.

In the atonement of Christ Jesus there is bread, and to spare. There is sufficient efficacy in the blood of Jesus, if God had so willed it, to have saved not only this world, but also ten thousand worlds, if they had transgressed the Maker's law. Once admit infinity into the matter, and limit is out of the question. O Lord, enable all of us to believe in the omnipotent power of the atonement, for the just shall live by faith.—Spurgeon.

Let us make our attendance on the worship in the house of God a matter of thought, and of serious, earnest purpose; let us endeavor to bring our minds into accordance with what is inculcated in Scripture, and exemplified in a variety of instances there.—Brown.

SIX LITTLE WORDS.

FROM THE GERMAN.—BY LATIENNE.

To Angruch [illegible] every day—
These words are [illegible] and

I [illegible] the law that God the son has given
The end toward which myself by self am driven.

I [illegible] the fault is wholly mine in me
My world, that sees signs of infinity.

I [illegible] the strength bestowed upon my heart,
The deed, the skill, the knowledge and the art.

I [illegible] man's highest crown adorns me lost,
'Tis freedom's seal, by spiritself impressed.

I would at once inscribe this seal, and more—
Fixes a latch on freedom's open door.

I may is final, and to all its lines
A moment's pause its unlettered defines.

These words, ought, must and can, will, would and may,
Call me to go to Angruch every day.

Yes, dearest, taught by Thee do I each day
Know, what I ought, I might, can, will, would and may.

We Begin at the Wrong End.

MR. EDITOR: I read with much satisfaction the notice, in your paper, of June 20, of a recent book, "The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional". Such exposures are exceedingly healthful to Christian morals, but as exposures of the errors of popery they all have the disadvantage of beginning at the wrong end.

The two natural aspects of popery might be classed as the logical and the practical. The latter grows out of the former. All men reason logically—making many mistakes sometimes, it is true; but dogmatizing, instead of reasoning, is not generally convincing, though it may really have the right side of the question.

Suppose I should turn papist and reply to this book, as also to Elgar, Elliott and others, in this wise: "Nothing is free from abuse. It is only in the right use of right things that advantage is to be looked for. And as to this matter of the confessional as an instrument and mode of worship, the church says so. And when you complain of priestly forgiveness, papal infallibility, holy water, etc., I reply: The church says so; and who are you to contend against the church?"

But you reply: The church—the Romish Church—is wrong. It teaches contrary to Scripture. But I remind you that according to your Protestant teaching that is impossible. I read in such books as Doddridge, Dr. A. Clarke, McKnight, Coleman, Paley, Neander, Whately, etc., that the church is a divine institution, and therefore infallible—that the church is a divine revelation of at least equal if not superior authority with the New Testament. These authors, and many others easily named, hold the doctrine of a primacy—the church is a corporation with a divinely-prescribed charter, authority and government, and therefore unerring in its teachings. You may differ with a papist as to the name of the first primate, whether it was Peter or not, but I reply that that is quite immaterial. If the name was not Peter it was something else. Have it as you will. The only question of any significance is: Was there an original primate at all? Was the church instituted—not the religion of the church, but the government and outward structure of the church—instituted at all? If so, then the doctrine of primacy is established. And if you deny that the present Bishop of Rome is the present primate, then I ask you to point him out to me. A divinely set-up institution, with a prescribed charter or rule of government—i. e., a society to have perpetual succession—is a divine revelation, different only in form from the verbal one, but having somewhat the advantage of the latter in age—that is, on this theory the church was made a little before the New Testament was.

The doctrine of a primacy—call it by what name you will, or by no distinctive name, it matters not—is as clearly set forth by the writers above named as by Milner, Bellarmin, Spaulding or Father Burke.

Archbishop Whately's "Society" certainly had a president or head either, whatever may have been the name of either the office or the man; and both the office and the man being fixed by Christ, and having perpetual succession, the successor to-day is and must be either the present papal primate or some other bishop.

I have the vanity to be fearless of loss in reputation as a writer on such subjects, however little it may be, in an attempt to sustain popery against any one in your office or among your valuable correspondents, some of the plain teachings of the Protestant writers above named to be the law governing the subject. I will not quote from a Romish writer, nor advance an argument not logically and legitimately drawn from the authors named.

I write the above in no boastful spirit, but to show that in our attacks upon Romanism we whip the branches rather than cut the tap-root. We begin at the wrong end. Begin right, and logical popery is easily demolished. But acknowledge its grand and only fundamental principle, a primacy—a new church set up at the time of the Savior—and you acknowledge all that logical popery claims. The Protestant is ruined by the logical and legitimate results of his own admissions.

I would not write so boldly, if I had ever seen the arguments of "Ecce Ecclesia" and "City of God" attempted to be refuted or seriously questioned. So far as I know, they have met a universally favorable criticism, and certainly plenty of it, and from all classes of the Protestant press. If they can stand, then, to be successful with popery, we must begin at the right end of the argument, though the hasty and inconsiderate arguments of Protestant writers may stand right in our way. Put logical Romanism out of Protestantism, and it will not be difficult to put practical Romanism out of the church. Whipping the outer branches—plenty of it—will mar the appearance of a tree, but not kill it. Its life is in its tap-root.

It may be said that papists do not use this argument. Of course they have no need to use the argument. They have need only for the assertion of a primacy among the apostles. But who does not see that a primacy necessarily supposes a new church, and a new church necessarily supposes a primacy? The two things are inseparable. They co-exist or non-exist.

The importance of this subject is so great that I do not see how we can afford to let it lie still.

H. ABNEY.

An Experience.

MR. EDITOR: I have several times thought I ought to write my experience for publication, but have heretofore shrunk from this duty, feeling that my religious life has been so checkered that it could not do any good; but perhaps an account of the mercy of God to such an unworthy creature may have a tendency to encourage some one to trust more fully in his great and boundless love.

I was brought up by Christian parents, and very early in life felt the strivings of the Holy Spirit. When about eleven years old I joined the Methodist Church, and fully believe I realized a change of heart, but after a time became careless, and relapsed into a stupid state, though often aroused by the convicting power of the Holy Ghost.

I lived the life of a formalist until some time after I was married, when I was restored to the favor of God and enjoyed religion for some time. I often read of the doctrine of sanctification, and the lives of those who experienced it, and felt it my duty to seek and find this blessing. I hungered and thirsted for it, and prayed earnestly, and often felt that I could almost claim it; but the thought that, of all the Christians I knew, none professed it, and that it would be presumption in me to claim it, would hold me back. I often looked at my husband, a faithful minister in the Methodist Church, and thought that as he, so much better and firmer than I was, did not profess it, I surely was not yet ready for it. At last I seemed to feel that I must be holy or go back altogether. Satan brought many temptations, often telling me that perhaps I was not even converted. I was so tossed and troubled that my friends thought I was losing my mind; and with shame I confess that after struggling for several months I gave way to the devil, and concluded it was of no use for me to try to be a Christian at all, and I sank down into despair, and, indeed, was well-nigh demented. I see now that my great mistake was in trusting in my own efforts, and did not submit myself to God, who is able to save, even to the uttermost. I remained in the clutches of the giant Despair for five years, persuaded that I had grieved the Holy Spirit from me forever, continually looking for that fiery indignation which should devour me at last. Eternity will not be long enough to praise God for his goodness to me for that he came and broke my chains, and enabled me once more to love and trust him. Very soon after my restoration to the favor of God I felt I must go on and seek sanctification. The same old temptations were brought up anew; but this time, though I passed through many seasons of heaviness, yet my God sustained me, and I was kept from again yielding to the tempter. Three years ago last fall I read a sermon in the St. Louis Advocate—text: "Be ye holy, for I am holy." The way was made so plain to me, through consecration and faith, that I was enabled to step into the cleansing wave. My path was very bright for several months. I was preserved and sweetly kept through a season of severe trial, feeling joyful in tribulation. I felt that I wanted to tell of the blessing I had received, but I was not instructed as to the great necessity of confession, yielded to timidity, and neglected this important duty; so in a few months the witness was withdrawn. I sought earnestly for a renewal of the precious blessing and had to begin by confessing what the Lord had done for me, and how I had forfeited it. Soon after this I was enabled again to trust in the blood that cleanseth from all sin; and, all glory be to God! I still find that he is faithful and just not only to forgive me my sins, but to cleanse me from all unrighteousness; and I find it a blessed life to live; and I am looking to him for more and more of this perfect love. Oh, may the full salvation, so graciously promised in God's word, be faithfully proclaimed all over our land, that all may know the things that are freely given to us of God.

We find, as before stated, that, according to the account current rendered by the Publishing House at Nashville, the New Orleans Depository is indebted to the sum of $85,515.32. The statement rendered by R. J. Harp, the agent at New Orleans, shows the entire assets of the Depository to be $78,887.30; total liabilities, other than the indebtedness to the Nashville house, $38,737.63; leaving balance in favor of the Depository $21,149.67, which, if ever realized, would be the property of the Publishing House, and would then show a deficiency, according to the statement of Dr. Rotford, of $65,365.65.

We are also in possession of a statement made by T. K. Johnson and A. H. Wilkins, who were appointed by the creditors, at a meeting held in New Orleans, April 12, 1878, to examine and report the condition of the Depository, from which we learn that the total assets were valued at $57,761.16; total liabilities, $38,737.36; net assets, $19,023.81—showing a discrepancy, as between this and R. J. Harp's statement, of $1,125.87. R. J. Harp claims that instead of an indebtedness to the Nashville-house of $85,515.32, it should be, on the first of April, 1878, $83,232.91, the difference being, credits the Depository should have had on the books at Nashville.

It is impossible for your committee to arrive at an accurate conclusion as to the exact condition of the accounts between the Publishing House and the New Orleans Depository, owing to the conflicting statements before us; but we are forced to the conclusion that the Depository is largely indebted to the Publishing House, yet cannot indorse the conclusion, arrived at by others, that the Depository has been one of the principal causes of the embarrassment at Nashville.

It is our opinion that the assets of the Depository will not prove sufficient to liquidate the outside indebtedness of the house; hence we cannot look to item in the agent's report of $85,515.32, as due from the Depository, as an asset; on the contrary, we are forced to the belief that we shall be called upon to pay in part the liabilities of the Depository to outside claimants.

Respectfully submitted.

J. B. MCFERRIN, Chairman.

JAMES I, 5.—The time of your greatest trial is the time of your greatest danger. If you have not yet, you will be tried beyond the strength of your flesh and spirit.—Hebrews xii, 5-8. This is an immutable law of God's kingdom. As long as the utmost of your strength is not called out you may appear, even to yourself, to be firm. But are you going to stand when your resources have been exhausted? When you have been crushed to the earth, and unable to rise, will you cast yourself upon the Lord? In that extreme hour when you feel your greatest lack, fail not to ask God for help, and he will give it thee.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

COL. JOHN ERVIN was born in Marion district, S. C., December 2, 1796, and died at his residence in Hinds county, Miss., March 6, 1878. At eighteen years of age he removed to Mississippi, and settled in Marion county. Shortly afterward he bought property in Hinds county, and was one of its first settlers, having resided at the place where he died for more than fifty years. Not long after his removal to the State of his adoption, where he spent his honored life and in whose bosom he has found a peaceful grave, he became a member of the Methodist Church. His Christianity was of an active, positive type; ever fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. The most intimate and cherished friends of his early manhood were the heroic Methodist itinerant preachers of this then missionary Southwest, with whom he often took sweet counsel. He was present at one of the early sessions of the Mississippi Conference, which was held in a private house, and was composed of scarcely a dozen members. That Conference to the last was ever a green spot in his memory, often would he call the roll of that early band of heroes, and recount pleasant incidents in their history. He always kept a "prophet's chamber." In his hospitable home for the weary itinerant. It was regarded as a matter of course that the preacher would go to Bro. Ervin's. Before his fortune was scattered by the sad casualties of war he was distinguished for his generous, well-nigh princely hospitality. The brave men of the early days, who wrought so nobly and have gone to their reward, found blue ever a friend, true and tried. To-day in the courts above, they will talk together of the warfare past and victories won. Since the war he has lived very quietly at his old home, in age and feebleness extreme. As a citizen he was prayerful, trustful and zealous. His seat in the sanctuary was rarely vacant. In public prayer he was fluent, and in younger years led in the service of song. Family worship was never neglected. Even in his last illness, when physical strength was almost exhausted, by the assistance of others he knelt at his bedside and offered fervent prayer to God. Prayer was to him his watchword at the gate of heaven. As a husband and father he was devoted and tender. His children, two sons and a daughter, long since married and settled in life, treasure with filial pride the precious memory of his name without a stain. His last wife, daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Saxon, survives and mourns his loss. He rests from his labors and his works do follow him.

CHARLES B. GALLOWAY.

IN MEMORIAM.

JESSE D. CANON was born in Anderson district, S. C., June 22, 1836; moved to the State of Mississippi in November, 1865; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1871; was passed and raised to the degree of M. M. in the Apple-white Lodge, No. 373, July 1, 1871.

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Canon the church and lodge have sustained a great loss; and though we cannot record any heroic deeds of his during his life, to gain the applause of public sentiment, yet we can say that he was a good, law-abiding citizen, a temperate man in all things, respected and esteemed by all who knew him. He was a devoted husband and an indulgent father.

Resolved, That in this severe affliction we humbly submit to him who "doeth all things well," and commend ours. We are satisfied that he has passed through the gate into the temple of our God.

Resolved, That we sincerely condole with his bereft widow, and tender her our sympathies in this her great bereavement, calling her to him who hath said that he will be a husband to the widow, and a father to the fatherless, for comfort and consolation.

Resolved, That the members of the Apple-white Lodge, No. 373, wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days from this date, and that a copy of the above preamble and resolutions be transmitted to his bereaved family, and the same be recorded in our lodge minutes, and a copy sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

F. M. WINGATE and others.

DEPARTED this life, at his residence in Beuf Prairie, on Saturday, June 1, Mr. J. F. CARRAWAY, aged fifty-three years.

Again has the inexorable destroyer entered our midst and severed from us a kind friend. For several years Mr. Carraway's health has been delicate; but although we knew that he was not robust, although we often heard him complain of debility and pain, we did not dream that his death was so near. He was taken with fever on the Saturday preceding his death, but was not considered in any danger until the following Friday, when his fever rose very high, and he complained of intense headache. On the same night he became delirious, and until his death, which took place at nine o'clock on Saturday night, he seemed to suffer excruciating pain. From the first days of his illness, ere any one else considered him dangerously sick, Mr. Carraway seemed confident that he would die. The day before his death he said to his wife: "I will go from you this time to return no more." Once or twice he expressed the conviction that he could not get well, but no unwillingness was mingled with it—no word of fear escaped him.

A devoted wife and two helpless children are left to mourn the loss of the beloved husband and indulgent father. A large circle of friends will join them in missing him, not only as a guest at their fireside, but as a watcher by the bed of sickness, and as a true friend in the house of mourning. The writer of this obituary never knew him to withhold aid or sympathy from a neighbor who stood in need. Even an enemy could never appeal to him in vain.

A FRIEND.

DIED, of brain fever, near Randolph, Ala., May 21, 1878, Mrs. MARTHA J. TUCKER.

Mrs. Tucker was a good woman. Seldom do we mourn the loss of one so favorably known and universally esteemed. She had good practical sense and great energy of character. She was mild in her manners and very affectionate in disposition. To her neighbors she was kind and obliging, visiting them in sickness and administering to their necessities. They will long hold her in affectionate remembrance. She was one of the best of mothers, and her children rise up and call her blessed. They will not soon forget her tender care for them, and her unwearied solicitude for their welfare. She was a true and faithful wife to him whom she has left in age and feebleness to mourn. Above all, she was a devout Christian. She professed religion in early life, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she lived an acceptable member through life. For nearly half a century, through all trial and trouble, she endured as seeing him who is invisible. Quiet in disposition and unobtrusive in deportment, but firm in faith and resolute in purpose, she moved steadily forward in the path of duty. And as she lived so she died—in peace and holy resignation. The religion that sustained her in the labors of life was her comfort and joy in the hour of death. To the last she was triumphant, giving glory to God.

"Oh, what a change, indeed, the death of the righteous, and may I not end be like hers!"

J. B. ANDERSON, Pastor.

WILLIAM KIMBELL died at his residence near Arizona, Claiborne parish, La., April 30, 1878, in the seventy-third year of his age. Bro. Kimbell was born in the State of Georgia, January 26, 1805. He married Miss Mary Hinton October 25, 1821, with whom he lived happily for about twenty-five years, when she was removed by death. He was again married on the twentieth of August, 1846, to Miss Judith C. Mitchell, who still survives him. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1824. He loved the church of his choice, and was faithful in his efforts to promote its interests. He was devoted to his wife and children. As a husband he was kind; as a father indulgent. He was a good neighbor, never refusing to do a favor when in his power. He did not have the privilege of saying one word to his family or friends when he was attacked, surviving only a few minutes. He seemed more cheerful for several days previous to his death than usual, especially so on the day of his death. He visited a sick neighbor in the morning, was engaged about his home affairs all the evening, and was a corpse before ten o'clock at night.

MRS. ELIZABETH C. BROWN was born July 9, 1811, in Edgefield district, S. C. While quite young she moved first to Indiana, then to Ohio, and then to Giles county, Tenn.

On the ninth of March, 1828, she was married to Nathaniel Brown. With her husband she emigrated to the State of Louisiana in 1835, and settled in Claiborne parish. In 1837 she joined the Methodist Church, then the only organized Methodist Church in north Louisiana, and departed this life May 18, 1878, having lived nearly sixty-eight years, and a member of the church forty-one years. Sister Brown was known by the writer during the last fifteen years of her life. She was a consistent Christian, a warm-hearted, Zealous Methodist, a faithful, loving mother, a kind and affectionate wife. She raised a large family of children, and lived to see them all grown, and nearly all members of the church of her choice. She was in feeble health for many months previous to her death, but bore her afflictions with great Christian patience and fortitude. Her death was calm and peace be! Long live her Christian example!

JOHN A. MILLER.

MRS. SALLIE B. LOVE was born in Pickens county, Ala., May 24, 1847, and died near Carrollton, Ala., April 8, 1878. Her maiden name was Hughes. She was converted in early life, and consecrated herself to the service of God while the light of youth's rosy morn still lingered about her pathway, gladdening her heart with joyous images of innocence and love. She was an honored and useful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Her religion was of the purest type, imparting a daily beauty to her life, and leaving its divine impress on all her actions. While she suffered no call of charity to pass unheeded by, she cheerfully supported all the institutions and aided all the enterprises of the church. The virtues of Christianity were sweetly blended together in her life and character. She finished her brief course with joy, and, leaving a devoted husband and two little boys, besides a large number of kith and kindred, to mourn their irreparable loss, she passed triumphantly up the shining way, prepared to meet her God.

J. L. BUTTARS.

MRS. LAURA C. DICKINSON, the beloved wife of Rev. Anthony S. Dickinson, of the Alabama Conference, died in Bridgeridge, Pike county, Ala., May 13, 1878, aged thirty-nine years. For twenty years she had known herself a child of God, and during fifteen years of that time had been the laborious, cheerful, happy wife of an itinerant preacher. The relation her husband sustained to the church and Conference caused her to bear more than the ordinary burdens incident to human life; and yet your correspondent, who was her pastor last year, and a frequent visitor at her hospitable home, must bear witness that he never saw her too sad to smile nor too sorrowful to sing.

She passed suddenly away from the cares of this life to the raptures of a better world. Taken sick on Wednesday, she died on the following Monday. Her husband assured me that he never witnessed a more triumphant death. He writes that "her last work on earth was to call her children and friends around her and bless them; then, praying for blessings upon the church of her love, she died in a moment." She left five children—all of them boys—to find out what sad bereavement is the loss of such a mother. May the God whose name is Love be very gracious to our Bro. Dickinson and the motherless little ones.

J. BARKER.

DIED, in Summerfield, Ala., April 16, 1878, Mrs. MARTHA A. M. LAWS (birthright), wife of Charles H. Laws, deceased, aged sixty-four years. She was born in Brunswick county, Va., and was raised and educated with her brother, Charles Mc. Holcombe, in Petersburg, Va., where she married February 26, 1834. Thence in [illegible] she removed to Mississippi, where she lost her husband, August 21, 1852. In 1870 she removed to Nashville, Tenn., and thence in 1871, to Summerfield, Ala., where she left a married son, David C. Laws, as her only surviving child.

The deceased was raised an Episcopalian, but July 11, 1873, connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Summerfield, Ala.

She was quiet, gentle and unassuming in disposition, faithful to all her relations in life, devoted to the service of her Savior, consistent and sincere in her Christian character, and endeavored to exert an influence for good upon the members of her own household, as well as upon those with whom she mingled in society. She died in the faith, beloved and lamented by all who knew her.

A. D. M.

MRS. MARTHA M. W. MOORE was [illegible] ter of the late Rev. John D. Wills, of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Monroe county, Ga., October 22, 1822; was married to E. R. Moore July 4, 1841; moved to Alabama and settled in Macon county immediately after marriage; joined the Methodist Church, at Rock Spring camp ground, September, 1840; was converted in the year of 1841; moved to Mississippi in 1850, and died in Newton county, Miss., March 19, 1878. She was truly a help meet for her husband, ordering her house well. She was a most devoted and indulgent mother. By best of all she was a child of God; and though deprived of reason during the last seventeen days of her last illness, her last moments were blissful. She died praising God, and speaking to her children who had preceded her to the spirit world.

Her husband and several daughters, with a large circle of friends, mourn her departure, but hope to meet her in heaven. May we so.

WILL H. LOTT.

WILLIAM T. EVANS was born March 8, 1[illegible], and died May 2, 1878. In the month of December, 1865, he was married to Miss Mary Lowery, who, with five children, survives him to mourn his loss.

Though not numbered among the rich, yet his is a character as an honorable Christian gentleman classed high among the officials of both Church and State. His death, caused by some falling limb, leaves the church here bereft of a zealous supporter, the community a good citizen. He was of impetuous disposition; but still his life was pure and undefiled. His private home life and elsewhere, like every one of the injunction of the apostle Paul, was diligent in business; fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. He ever trusted in God in counsel and prayer to God, who "shall direct his paths." He ever sought the sparrow tall and feeds the ravens.

W. C. PAYNE.

SAMUEL COOK, the subject of the following obituary notice, and the son of Lazarus and Adaline Cook, was born January 30, 1[illegible], professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1[illegible], died on the thirtieth of May, 1878, from his buggy. His death leaves sorrow and gloom upon the hearts of his aged father and mother and other relatives. It leaves a deeply stricken young heart in the desolation of widowhood. May they all find comfort from the great Comforter, who can cheer the deepest gloom and sweeten the bitter waters of life.

W. H. LOTT.

HENRIETTA HORTMAN, consort of Thomas Trolly, was born in Houston county, Ga., September 15, 1849, and died in Washington parish, La., December 1, 1877. She was for several years a member of the church, and as such lived a consistent life, letting her light shine in the circle in which she moved. For some time before her death she was a great sufferer, but was patient in all her afflictions. She was willing to depart and be present with the Lord, only regretting to leave behind her husband and two children.

HER PASTOR.

MRS. PHOEBE WOOSTER, wife of Nathan Wooster, died at Centerville, La., aged seventy-six years and four months. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church. She died on the nineteenth of June.

N. JAY WOOSTER.

DIED, at Newton, Miss., June [illegible], 1878, FRANK ARTHUR, infant son of Rev. B. and J. H. Bowner, aged seven weeks. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

THE OLD MAN OF THE SEA.

BY PAUL H. HAYNE.

Grievous, in sooth, was luckless Sinbad's plight,
Saddled with that foul monster of the sea;
But who of some soul-harrowing weight is free?
And though we vail our woe from public sight,
Full many a dreary day, and dismal night,
It chafes our spirits sorely! Yet, for thee
Whate'er, O friend, thy special grief may be,
Badge thou against it all thy manhood's might.

Thus, though thou may'st not smile on brow or breast
That irksome incubus, be sure some day
The load that blights shall droop and fall away,
And thou, because of torture borne so well,
Shalt pass from out thy long, hallow'd unrest
And walk thy future paths invincible!

A Turkish Lady's Cake Party.

The mistress of the harem—the Bairk-Hanum (great lady,) to give her full title—dresses much like an English lady nowadays, reads French novels and plays the piano; though she has some gorgeous Turkish costumes which she dons upon state occasions, such as the chalvas, when she entertains other ladies. Chalva means a cake, but it has come to designate a party at which that dainty is eaten, just as we say tea for tea party in England. When a Turkish lady gives a chalva her husband is perforce excluded from the harem while the strange women are in the house. These guests begin to arrive toward six, accompanied by their maid servants, and negroes carrying lanterns, and bringing their children with them. Closely muffled, they divest themselves of their furmounes and babouches in an ante-room, and put on delicate satin slippers, which they have brought with them in bags. The reception-rooms are brilliantly lighted up with pink wax candles, and scented with fragrant pastilles. There is no kissing or hand-shaking between the hostess and her guests; but each lady, as she comes in, lifts her hand gracefully to her heart, her lips and her brow, which means: "I am devoted to you with heart, mouth and mind." This mode of salutation, when smilingly performed, is very pretty. The greeting being ended, the company seat themselves on chairs if there be any. Frank ladies present; if not, they betake themselves to the divans and carpets, while the children go off altogether to be regaled and to romp in some other room. Cigarettes, coffee and sweetments are handed round; and while these things are being discussed the ladies are bound to pay one another compliments about their respective dresses, which are sure to be most sumptuous, and indeed are sometimes worthy of fortune. The right thing of Turkish women consists of a long tunic, with open sleeves, and of a wide pair of trousers; and when these articles are of costly stuff, embroidered, laced and covered with jewels, they produce a rare effect. After the coffee, dancing girls are introduced, and at this stage of the proceedings the elderly ladies generally settle down to cards and backgammon, neither more nor less than in Western countries. In some houses, where Christian manners have penetrated, a lady pianist rattles off waltz and operatic music to amuse the company; but this does not exclude the performances of the native dancing girls, whose gyrations and fantastic mimic with tambourines or castanets are much appreciated. These almees are seldom older than fifteen, and in any case no married woman ever joins in a dance. When the evening has been more or less agreeably spent amid these pastimes and conversation, it is the lady of the house who gives the signal for her guests to retire. This she does by clapping her hands and exclaiming: "Chalva yel"—i. e.: "Bring in the cake." At once the maid servants hurry off to fetch the delicacy, and soon a very aromatic, creamy and spongy pudding is produced—which having been honored as it deserves, silver basins full of rose-water are carried in for the guests to wash their hands with; and then the party is at an end. A very quaint form of salutation speeds the parting guest. As each lady comes up to express her thanks for the hospitality she has enjoyed, the hostess answers sweetly, "How happy I am that is all over," which ambiguous utterance only means: "How happy I am that no accident has befallen any of us during this delightful evening!" It is said, however, that accidents sometimes befall on the morrow to the younger guests, for that chalva is very indigestible.—Pall Mall Budget.

Sabbath Observance.

While the teaching of God's word is mainly general, yet it is broad enough to cover the whole question of human duty, and the obligations of individual conscience in every condition and generation of mankind. The Bible is a book of principles, as well as of institutions. The law is clearly stated, but at the same time, in its detailed application to the specific acts and circumstances, much has been left to the individual conscience and judgment of men. It is here that our responsibility begins. Here we must seek to know the will of God, and to cherish the spirit of obedience.

1. The Sabbath must be remembered.—Exodus xx, 8.

2. It must be hallowed.—Exodus xx, 8.

3. It must be secure from ordinary secular occupation, being, in this respect, a day of rest.—Exodus xx, 9.

4. It must be employed in divine worship—private and public—with meditation, prayer, and the preaching of the word.—Isaiah lxvi, 23; and Ezek. xx, 7.

5. It must be hailed as [illegible] as the Lord, and holiness [illegible] a day of gladness and thanksgiving.—Isaiah lviii, 13; Acts xx, 7. Burkhalter x, 16.

6. It must not be dishonored by frivolous recreation or idle pleasure.—Isaiah lviii, 13.

7. It must not be disturbed by unseemly noise and tumult.—Habakkuk ii, 20; Matthew xxiv, 20; Hebrews iv, 9.

8. It must not be outraged by gala spectacles and vain parades.—Isaiah lviii, 13; Psalms lxv, 1, 2, 4, 7.

9. It must not be profaned by traffic for gain or sordid industry.—Nehemiah xiii, 15-22; Isaiah lviii, 13; John ii, 13, 17.

10. It must not be polluted by any form of vice or dissipation.—Isaiah lvi, 2.

11. It may be used in acts of social intercourse; spent in imperative travel; visiting the prisoner, the sick or the poor; in religious instruction and deeds of charity.—Matthew xii, 1, 14; Luke xiii, 10, 17; xxiv, 13, 31.

12. It may be employed in any works of necessity or mercy.—Mark ii, 23, 28, et passim.

These conditions of Sabbath obligation apply generally to human society. They belong alike to the individual, the family, the community, the Church and the State.

Such is the Scripture outline of a Sabbath observance, which seems equally removed from that of the Jewish synagogue and that of a German beer garden. A Pharisaic austerity and a French indulgence are alike excluded. In the reaction in this country from Puritan Sabbathism, the nation has been drifting to the opposite extreme of continental license; and the danger now is that with such views as have passed current among professedly Christian teachers, through many centuries, the divine ordinance, as it was left by Christ and his apostles, may be inundated and practically swept away. Are the Christian church and this favored republic prepared for such a catastrophe?—Methodist Review.

The Angry Father.

Theon was one day reading in the Holy Scriptures, when he suddenly closed the book, and looked thoughtful and gloomy.

Hillel perceived this, and said to the youth: "What aileth thee? Why is thy countenance troubled?"

Theon answered: "In some places the Scriptures speak of the wrath of God, and in others he is called Love. This appears to me strange and inconsistent."

The teacher replied: "Should they not speak to man in human language? Is it not equally strange that they should attribute a human form to the Most High?"

"By no means," answered the youth; "that is only figurative; but wrath—"

Hillel interrupted him:

"Listen to my story. There lived in Alexandria two fathers, wealthy merchants, who had two sons of the same age, and they sent them to Ephesus on business connected with their trade. Both these young men had been thoroughly instructed in the religion of their fathers.

"When they had sojourned for some time at Ephesus they were dazzled by the splendor and the treasures of the city, and, yielding to the allurements which beset them, they forsook the path of their fathers, and turned aside to idolatry, and worshiped in the temple of Diana.

"A friend at Ephesus wrote of this to Cleon, one of the two fathers at Alexandria. When Cleon had read the letter he was troubled in his heart, and he was wroth with the youths. Thereupon he went to the other father, and told him of the apostasy of their sons, and of his grief thereat.

"But the other father laughed and said: 'If business do but prosper with my son, I shall give myself little concern about his religion.'

"Then Cleon turned from him, and was still more wroth.

"'Now which of these two fathers,' said Hillel to the youth, 'dost thou consider as the wiser and the better?'

"He who was wroth," answered Theon.

"And which," asked the preceptor, "was the kinder father?"

"He who was wroth," again answered the youth.

"Was Cleon wroth with his son?" asked Hillel.

"And what," asked the teacher, "thinkest thou is the cause of such displeasure against evil?"

"The sacred love of truth," answered his disciple.

"Behold, then, my son," said the old man, "if thou canst now think divinely of that which is divine, the human expression will no longer offend thee." From the German.

Pour Out Your Heart Before Him

We are taught in the Bible to confess our sins, to give thanks, to acknowledge God in all our ways, and then, lest in our narrowness we should think the petty cares and trials of our every-day life too trivial to carry to him who "taketh up the isles as a very little thing," he speaks through the mouth of his servant David, saying: "Pour out your heart before him."

How much we have in our hearts that we would gladly pour into the ear of some friend, could we only find one sufficiently strong and sympathetic—one who would guard our secret as his own! Yet God, who pities as a father and comforts as a mother, bids us bring all our burdens and perplexities to him.

We carry our troubles to some earthly friend; and as we receive his sympathy we feel our hearts drawn to him with new love, our affections serving as a cord to bring us closer together. So as we pour out our temptations, our weaknesses, our joys and our triumphs to God, our friend above all others, we find him "very gracious unto the voice of our cry." And as with David we say, "All my desire is before thee," we shall hear his voice saying: "I will hold thy hand, and will keep thee."

And is not this as acceptable a prayer as we can offer?

Said one who had passed through deep affliction: "I tried long to find the comfort I longed for in earthly sympathy and companionship; but God denied me comfort until I sought it of him, the source of all consolation, withholding human sympathy, giving instead divine. Now I feel that not a thought of my heart is beneath his notice."

Weary mothers, worn with a hundred anxieties that you breathe to no earthly ear, "the Father knoweth what things you have need of." Pour out your heart before him."

Man of business, perplexed with life's cares, constantly tempted from the paths of right and justice, Christ, our elder brother, was "tempted in all points like as you are." "Pour out your heart before him," that he may succor you.

To the sick-room, work-shop, wherever there are hearts longing for sympathy, come these gracious words, "Pour out your hearts before him," and he that numbereth the hairs of your head will comfort you. K., in American Messenger.

Comin' Thro' the Rye.

Some time ago a member of the bar in this city, interested in subtleties not altogether legal, undertook to verify the following bit of poetical exegesis, which had been for some time going the round:

A New York pictorial publishes an illustration of "Comin' Thro' the Rye," and blunders into what we presume is the popular misconception of the ditty, giving a laddie and lassie meeting and kissing in a field of grain. The lines, and especially the other couplet,

Comin' thro' the rye,

[illegible]
When comin' thro' the rye,

seem to imply that traversing the rye was an habitual or common thing, but what in the name of the Royal Agricultural Society could be the object of tramping down a crop of grain in that style? The song perhaps suggests a harvest scene, where both sexes, as is the custom in Great Britain, are at work reaping, and where they would come and go through the field indeed, but not through the rye itself, so as to meet and kiss in it. The truth is, the rye in this case is no more grain than Rye Beach is, it being the name of a small, shallow stream near Ayr, Scotland, which, having neither bridge nor ferry, was forded by people going to and from market, custom allowing a lad to steal a kiss from any lass of his acquaintance whom he met midstream. Our cotemporary will see that this is the true explanation if he will refer to Burns' original ballad, in which the first verse refers to the lass wetting her clothes in the stream:

OPTICAL ILLUSION.—Here is a curious optical allusion to while away an hour on a winter's night, and of interest all: Take a sheet of stiff writing paper, and roll it into a tube an inch in diameter. Apply it to the right eye, and look steadfastly through it, focusing the eye on any convenient object. Keep the left eye open. Now place the left hand, held edgeways, upward, edgeways against the side of the paper tube, and about an inch or two above its lower end. The astonishing effect will be produced of a hole, apparently of the size of the cross-section of the tube, made through the left hand. This is the hole in which we propose to materialize another and smaller hole. As we need a genuine aperture, and it would be inconvenient to make one in the left hand, let a sheet of white paper be substituted therefor, and similarly held. Just on the part of the paper where the hole equally in diameter the orifice of the tube appears, make an opening one-fourth of an inch in diameter. Now stare intently into the tube, and the second hole, defined by its difference of illumination, will be seen floating in the first hole, and yet both will be transparent. The illusion—for, of course, it is one of these odd pranks our binocular vision plays upon us. Is certainly one of the most curious ever devised. Besides, here is the actual hole clearly visible, and yet there is no solid body to be seen to define its edges. It is not a mere spot of light, because, if a page of print be regarded, the lines within the boundaries of the little hole will not coincide at all with those surrounding it, and extending to the edges of the large apparent aperture. Each eye obviously transmits an entirely different impression to the brain, and that organ, unable to disentangle them, binds us in the palpable absurdity of a materialized hole.

An English scientist asserts that flies have a speech of their own, and are not limited to the irritating buzz for which they are chiefly distinguished. By the assistance of the microphone, an instrument which magnifies sound, this fly language can be heard, and the tramp of a fly across a box is said to sound almost as loud as that of a horse across a wooden bridge. A curious sound accompanied the tramp of the fly which, it was suggested, was caused by the nejgding of its proboscis.

By dress, books and amusements, an atmosphere is formed which is not that of Christianity. More than ever do I feel that our families must stand in a kind but determined opposition to the fashions of the world, breasting the waves like the Eddystone lighthouse.

The religion that renders good men gloomy and unhappy can scarcely be a true one. Dr. Blair says, in his sermon on Devotion: "He who does not feel joy in religion is far from the kingdom of heaven."

A married couple resemble a pair of shears, so joined that they cannot well be separated, moving often in opposite directions, but always punishing whatever comes between them.

Religious Intelligence.

—During the past year there has been an unusual degree of religious interest manifested in all the stations of the Siam mission.

—R. S. Hudson, Esq., gives $25,000, to be paid in installments extending over five years, to the English Congregational Chapel Building Society.

—The statistics of Sunday school work in Germany are as follows: There is in Germany a total of 1,961 Sunday schools, with 8,119 teachers and 158,615 scholars.

—The general agent of the American Bible Society reports that the demand for the five-cent Testament had led to the issue of 1,000 copies a day throughout the month of May.

—Aroused by the progress of Christian missions, the Buddhist and Shinto priests of Japan are collecting money to send missionaries of their respective beliefs to other lands.

—A missionary paper puts this striking contrast: We spend annually in this country $700,000,000 for intoxicating drinks. All the Boards of Missions spend for the salvation of the world less than $6,000,000.

—The salaries of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South are fixed at $3,000 each, and $1,500 a year is allowed for the support of the family of the late Bishop Marvin. A sum of $27,525 is assessed upon the Annual Conferences for episcopal support.

—The Free Church Assembly, Scotland, has adopted resolutions inimical to the case of Prof. Robertson Smith. His views are regarded as unscriptural and dangerous, and in virtue of the resolutions he must be suspended from his professorship and from the ministry of the Free Church.

—The Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland is doing a good work in supplying its people with the Bible and religious literature. Within a few years it has sold there nearly 12,000,000 of books, tracts and periodicals and has received in cash nearly $500,000. It has about 70 earnest and efficient colporteurs, who are supported by voluntary subscriptions.

—A General Conference on Missions, intended to represent all Protestantism, is announced to be held in London, in October next, called by a meeting held last June, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury. The object of it will be to consider "the present position, labors and prospects of Protestant evangelical missions to foreign countries." A meeting of this kind was held in Liverpool in 1860, and was attended by 120 representatives of Christian missions and missionary societies. Much information was gathered, methods of work were compared, and altogether the results were most valuable.

—In June, 1875, Lord Penzance issued a monition to the Rev. A. H. Mackonochie, of St. Alban's, Holborn, warning him to leave off certain ritualistic vestments and practices. Mr Mackonochie paid no attention to the order, going on with the ceremonies in the church as usual. A motion has just been made to the Lord Penzance to enforce obedience to the motion. His Lordship said, even at the eleventh hour, he would give Mr Mackonochie an opportunity to conform to the law. He ordered the monition to be regarded, and stated that if it was again disregarded a severe punishment would be inflicted. This is supposed to mean incarceration in the Middlesex House of Correction.

—The Presbytery of New Orleans, connected with the Tennessee Synod of the Northern Presbyterian Church, has been reduced to pretty small dimensions by the withdrawal of the First German church of New Orleans. There were in the presbytery two churches, both German, with a combined membership of 111. The First church takes with it 97 of this number, leaving to the presbytery 14 members. The First church returns to the Southern Church, because it is satisfied its true interests and spiritual life demand a closer contact with the majority of the Presbyterian churches of the city, and because it has been almost impossible for a long time to hold the meetings of the Northern Presbytery of New Orleans.

—It seems hardly necessary that the Moravian Church in this country should be divided into two districts. The Northern district, which is very respectable in size, having 61 churches, might also include the 11 churches of the Southern district. In the former there are 8,496 communicants; in the latter only 1,455. In the former there is an increase of 175; in the latter a decrease of 12. The churches in the Northern district are scattered over the country from New York to Kansas, and as far south as Maryland. One fourth of the churches are in Pennsylvania, and of these five are in Philadelphia. About one-seventh of the membership is in Bethlehem. Sixty-four ministers do the work of the church in the Northern and eight in the Southern district. The latter is composed chiefly of churches in North and South Carolina.

—The Wesleyan Methodists have recently dedicated a new church at Durban, Natal, South Africa. In a little over a year the building has been completed, greatly to the credit of all concerned. It is 117 feet long and 66 feet wide. There are vestries and a class-room, a gallery at the end for the choir, and a suitable place behind the rostrum for an organ, which will be obtained as soon as means are available. The rostrum and seats are of pitch pine. It seats 800 persons; is thoroughly well ventilated, which is a matter of vital importance anywhere, especially in that climate; and, with care, the preacher's voice is well heard. The cost is $25,000. The impetus to the scheme for erecting this sanctuary was first given by B. W. Greenacre, Esq., member of the Legislative Council and mayor of Durban, by a gift of $2,500, and a contribution of the same amount by his partner, Thomas Harvey, Esq., of New Barnet, and half as much by Paul Henwood, Esq., of the same place.

Our Young People.

WHAT THE OWL KNOWS.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

Nobody knows the world but me,
When they're all in bed I sit up to see;
I'm a better student than students all,
For I never read till the darkness fall,
And I never read without my glasses,
And that is how my wisdom passes.

I can see the wind. Now who can do that?
I see the dreams that he puts in his hat;
I see him sporting them out as he goes—
Out at his simple old trumpet-nose.
Ten thousand things that you couldn't think,
I write them down with pen and ink.

You may call it learning—I call it wit.
Who else can watch the lady-moon sit
Hatching the hours and the long-legged fowl,
On her nest, Chaos, all night, but the owl?
When the oysters gape to sing by rote,
She erects a pearl down each stupid throat.

So you see I know—you may pull off your hat,
Whether round and lofty, or square and flat.
You can never do better than trust to me;
You may shut your eyes as long as I see,
While you live I will head you, and then—I'm the owl—
I'll bury you nicely with my spade and shovel.

Good Things.

Was He Right?

BY ALBERT PELLINGWOOD.

An advertisement such as William Henry read, posted on the fence one morning, could not fail to attract a bright-eyed boy. He would have been a marvel of goodness had he turned away, because the school-bell was tolling, from such curious and enchanting pictures of lions, tigers, real live elephants, giraffes and camels, beside wonders from African forests and Arabian plains, to say nothing of the beautiful ladies in gauzy dresses who rode prancing steeds, or the boys and men who twisted themselves into outlandish contortions to amuse the spectators.

"My!" he exclaimed, at the same time holding his fingers up to his mouth to keep them from freezing, "if that ain't the jolliest show, you may just tell me I don't know nothing. Whew! but ain't she splendid!" and while he was thus soliloquizing, along walked his chum, Thomas White, a boy about William Henry's age, and far poorer, but none the less thought of for that. The boys stood looking at the pictures many minutes, pointing out the especial attractions, and talking over to each other, in boy ways, what seemed to them the greatest feature in the performance.

"Of course you'll go, Will," said Tom White; "your mother'll give you the money, but mine unfortunately hasn't any."

"Of course I shan't," answered William Henry; "you may depend on me, Tom; not one step will I go without you."

"You don't mean it?" Tom said affectionately. "Is that really so? Why, your mother won't take me, too; and any way," he again said thoughtfully, "it wouldn't be right for me to take the money. No, Will, don't ask me, for I know I cannot go; beside, there's the wood-box to fill for mother, and the horse to harness, and my lessons to get. Oh, dear," he sighed, "I never can do anything like other boys. Sometimes I think I'll run away. It isn't much good I can be to anybody here, and nobody cares for me very much."

"I guess I wouldn't do that," Will said, rather puzzled to know exactly what was best to say in such distressing circumstances. "It seems to me, Tom, you might be some help at home."

"Don't talk that way to me, Will. You know well enough I work like ten men, and yet mother's always complaining that she has such a careless son, who never does anything but play. It's pretty hard on a fellow never to be able to go off with the boys because he must work, work, work from morning until night."

But did Tom really work so hard?

He certainly harnessed the horse and kept the wood-box behind the stove well filled, but then the former he loved to do, and carrying in the wood seldom occupied over twenty minutes. Then, again, his mother was a widow, and sewed to support Tom and herself, and pay the school bills.

But Tom never thought of that. He only remembered at this moment that he wished very much to attend the circus, and consequently he had imagined his troubles a thousand times greater than they really were.

"I tell you what, Will," said Tom, "I will do. I'll just break open my savings bank, and I need never tell mother, so she can't scold if she doesn't know about it."

"Oh, Tom, do you think you'd better?" sighed William at his friend's sad story of his misfortunes. "Ma will take you; I know she will if I ask her, and I'm sure to do that."

"No, you're not," said Tom, "for I'm not going that way; but there, the bell's stopped ringing, and we are late;" so both boys hurried on, and for a time forgot Tom's trouble.

School being over, Tom hurried home, and, bursting open the door of the sitting-room, he flung his cap on a chair and stole softly up stairs to where his bank stood on the mantlepiece, and, grasping it quickly, he ran with it to the shed, and, making a hole in the back, he counted fifty cents into the palm of his hand, all it contained, but enough and more than enough to take him to the show.

He did not return home to tea, and that evening, as he sat perched on a high bench in the great tent, his thoughts now and then were a trifle gloomy, especially when he remembered how long he had been saving fifty cents and how soon he had spent it. He began to wonder, too, how he would go home, and what excuse he would make if questioned, which he was sure to be.

He could not understand why he felt uncomfortable, and was glad when it came time to leave. "I expect she'll be waiting for me at the door," he thought; "and, dear me, what shall I tell her?" He shut the gate very softly, fearing to disturb any one who might be listening for him; but the house seemed dark, and, as far as he could judge, empty. He opened the door, but, with the exception of a lamp burning on the table, it was all still and dark.

"This is a pleasant reception for a fellow," he said to himself. "I should think she might have sat up a little later." He felt disappointed, and wished there was some one to say good-night to. He peeped into his mother's room, but she was asleep, and he did not dare disturb her; so he crept into bed feeling very queer. In the morning he was up before sunrise and made the fire, which he never did before, and waited for his mother and the scolding she was so likely to give. But, strange to say, the scolding did not come—only a pleasant good-morning in its place.

"Perhaps she never missed me," Tom thought. "My! but I'm in luck this time!" But he changed his mind afterward, when she told him how much she was disappointed last evening that he did not come home, for it was so dull generally, and they so seldom went out she thought it would be a happy change for them to attend the great show, and that they would go together, and he should take his father's place as her protector.

Tom winced and felt uneasy. He did not feel like a protector just then; indeed in his own estimation he seemed very selfish.

"And then, Tom," his mother continued, "you must have nearly fifty cents in your bank by this time, and God has given us so many blessings, I wanted to propose your giving the Moon the arithmetic he has been trying so long to buy. Poor boy! he has so little with which to buy school-books, and we ought to make it part of our lives to give to those who have less than ourselves. It is only repeating the story of the cruse of oil, told of in the Bible, and I feel that we do far less than we can do even with our small means."

In Tom's heart he thought so too, but at that moment he chose rather to keep the secret than to fail in his mother's estimation, as he had already done in his own; and what must he appear in the sight of God, who was constantly blessing him with such kindness? It is a great deal harder to learn to be generous through our own selfishness than through the selfishness of others, and Tom knew now why he did not enjoy the menagerie. Can you tell why? Surely you agree with Tom now in thinking: "It is better to give than to receive."—Christian Intelligencer.

Children's Tombs.

Westminster Abbey is full of the remembrances of great men and famous women. But it is also full of the remembrances of little boys and girls, whose death shot a pang through the hearts of those who loved them, and who wished that they never should be forgotten. Almost the earliest royal monument in this abbey is of a beautiful little deaf and dumb girl of five years old, the Princess Catherine, daughter of King Henry the Third, who loved her dearly. She was not forgotten, and her two little brothers, and perhaps four little nephews, were buried close to her, as if to keep her company. And so there are two small tombs in Henry the Seventh's chapel of the two infant daughters of King James the First. Over one of them are some touching lines written by an American lady, which all mothers should read. And to the tombs of these two little girls were brought in after-days by their nephew, Charles the Second, the bones of the two young murdered princes, which in his time were discovered at the foot of the staircase in the tower. And there is in the Chapel of St. Michael another tomb of a little child that died from a mistake of its nurse; and we know from her will that she never ceased to lament the little darling, and begged, if possible, very urgently, to be buried beside it. And there is a monument in the cloisters which contains only these words: "Jane Lister—dear child," with the dates of the child's age and the record of her brother's death. It is an inscription which goes to the heart of every one. It was in the year 1682, just a month before the great English Revolution, but the parents thought only of "Jane Lister," their "dear child."—Good Words.

While time and the things of time are uppermost in men's minds, ministers are content without knowing about their people that they are saved—content with merely "hoping the best;" and people are content without knowing about themselves, and those near and dear to them, that they are saved—content with merely "hoping the best," which hope may turn out to be a delusion and a snare; but when eternity and the things of eternity take the place which is due to them, none can be content without knowing that souls are saved. The unconverted are seen to be on the road to hell; eternity without Christ is seen to be, as God's word describes it, everlasting darkness, everlasting punishment, everlasting death; and who can believe that and remain in an uncertain state, or be content that any loved one should remain in an uncertain state?

On one occasion, when coming to church, Dr. Macknight, who was a much better commentator than preacher, having been caught in a shower of rain, entered the vestry soaked through. Every means were used to relieve him from his discomfort; but as the time drew on for divine service he became very impatient, and ejaculated over and over again: "Oh! I wish that I was dry! Do you think I am dry? Don you think I am dry enough noo?" Tired by these endless complaints, his jocose colleague, Dr. Henry, the historian, at last replied: "Bile a wee, doctor, and ye'se be dry enough, gin ye ance get into the pu'pit."

Francis the First being desirous to raise one of the most learned men of the time to the highest dignities of the church, asked him if he was of noble descent. "Your majesty," answered the abbot, "there were three brothers in Noah's ark, but I cannot tell positively from which of them I am descended." He obtained the post.

If Any Man Thirst.

Religious desire may not always be clearly defined. There is often a sense of want, a feeling of dissatisfaction, and a disturbed and restless state of mind. There is a burden on the heart and the sufferer scarcely knows why it is. There is the longing for something to quiet fear, and to fill the aching void, while the precise thing is not shaped in word or thought. The relief is in Christ, and we need not hesitate to come to him. Thousands under the influence of this deep but vague feeling of desire have sought only to find at first that their real trouble was sin, and then to find peace and happiness through faith in the Lamb of God.

We cannot doubt that the invitation of the Master on that last and great day of the feast was a challenge to all troubled souls, and especially to those who had failed to obtain rest in the prevailing religion of the time. They had carefully observed the ceremonies of the law, and listened anxiously to the discourses of the rabbis and the learned expounders of the Old Testament. They had gone through with the feast of tabernacles, and they were not fed. After all that had been offered them their soul thirst remained. There are such devout and dissatisfied people in the churches. Their teaching has been defective; the forms of godliness have yielded them no real refreshment. Inclined, as they are, to trust in the merely outward religious observance, there are many painful misgivings. There are unsatisfied desires. The cup that seemed to be full was in reality empty. It was an illusory expedient and the very yearnings of the soul led them to suspect the imposition. They have never come to the fountain of living waters. Christ's invitation is to this class of religious people—to those who feel the need of something which the form of service cannot supply.

They are welcomed to a more direct and closer relationship with the Savior himself. Heretofore they have been absorbed with a tantalizing mirage; they are now urged to come to the flowing stream of salvation. The Jewish worshiper lingered amidst the shadows of good things to come. His mistake was that he regarded them as the very image and reality. He grasped at these shadows, ignorant of Christ as the body. He dwelt amidst the types of redemption, while Christ as their fulfillment was unknown. There was something beautiful and expressive in the act of the priest who brought forth, in golden vessels, water from Shiloah, and poured it upon the altar. That Christ should turn the incident to account in directing the thirsty soul to himself heightens this beauty and exhibits the true interpretation. There was nothing in the stream of Shiloah that could meet the deeper needs of human hearts. The temple and its altars were nothing apart from him who came to seek and to save the lost. It was a joyous festival—especially the last great day of the feast—but it was all a mere shadow, empty and puerile, except as the symbols were understood to point to Christ, the true fountain—the inexhaustible and living stream.

If we only remember that it was in the midst of a throng of devout worshipers, and during the progress of the most joyous of festivals, that Christ exclaimed, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink," we shall see more clearly the import of these encouraging words. To all who are drinking out of empty vessels, to those who are seeking to find rest in the shell of religious ceremony, to the fainting and thirsty devotees of form and profession, Christ points to himself as the source of life; and beyond this to all. The penitent sick of sin, the seeker wearied with his own vain efforts, the Christian under the leadings of the Spirit crying out for the living God—each is invited to come to Christ and drink. Out of Christ the world is an arid waste, a desert parched, without a single spring. In Christ is all fullness to meet the cravings of the empty soul. In all our feasts of tabernacles he is the only real joy, and his voice of invitation is lifted up: "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink."

Centenary College Commencement.

We—that is, Bishop Keener and the editor—reached Jackson on Friday—a day or so too soon rather than be too late. The Bishop was domiciled at President Andrews', while our home was, as always, at Prof. Wiley's. The room seems to be always ready for us, and there, after a year's absence, were our spectacles and other forgotten things just as we had left them. Regaining the lost glasses, the other pair were left this time. It seems to be foreordained that we should forget something—the sure mark of approaching age, the beginning of the end. What abounding fullness there is in the hospitality of these Jackson people! Those dinings at President Andrews', Prof. Wiley's and Dr. Jones'! The long tables groaning under the apparently inexhaustible profusion of tempting viands, and the cheerful companies that gathered around them! We never see the like except once a year, when these reunions, so surpassingly delightful, are repeated. If some we wot of only knew what they lose by not being present, neither the distance nor the expense of travel, nor the thought of Bayou Sara hacks, would keep them away. The meeting of the board of trustees would be full at every commencement if the members only could realize what awaits those who faithfully discharge their duties. The feast of reason and the flow of soul, with the turkeys, sweetmeats, ice creams, fruits, confections, and such coffee as would astonish our friends in higher latitudes, along with the converse of classic men, and the smiles and sprightly talk of fair women, are things to be experienced, not to be described.

Jackson is somewhat retired—twelve miles from the Mississippi river. It is not disturbed by the profane scream of the locomotive, nor startled by the unclassical whistle of the steamboat. Its shades are purely academic. During nearly a week's sojourn there we saw no paper except the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—and was this not enough? There is nothing to distract the mind. It is a place where the student cannot easily be diverted from his text-books. Virgil, Cicero—here pronounced Kickero—and Homer are among the most modern things, although history, philosophy, science and international law are also taught. There is something restful and congruous in the quiet atmosphere of this college town, and favorable to application. For the time we felt ourselves altogether withdrawn from the every-day world, and pretty much absorbed in a society that seemed to us scholastic, unsecular, and bent upon being happy. Bishop Keener's faith in Centenary has never wavered, but it grew stronger with this commencement. The examinations, as certified to the board of trustees, were very thorough and satisfactory. The deportment of the students had been excellent. The faculty had labored hard and faithfully, and with most gratifying results. The number of students—something less than seventy—was yet an increase on the previous year, and there is promise of a much larger attendance the approaching session.

Notwithstanding it rained more or less every day, the audiences were good, and would have been much larger if the weather had been propitious. Of the annual sermon in the college chapel, on Sunday morning, we heard but little, good or bad. Bishop Keener was to have preached at the church in the afternoon, but the rain prevented. In the church at night a very fair congregation came through the mud and under threatening skies to hear Rev. C. B. Galloway, and they were well repaid. The Sunday school exercises at nine o'clock in the morning were very pleasant, and we had the pleasure of listening, at that hour, to an excellent address of Rev. R. S. Holcombe, of the Alabama Conference. Prof. Wiley is the superintendent, and has a prosperous school. The preparatory exercises on Monday night, July 1, were regarded as the best that have been witnessed for many years. They were the theme of universal admiration and praise. Rev. I. D. Wall, principal of the Preparatory Department, and also adjunct professor of modern languages, is entitled to much credit for the fine taste and excellent training exhibited in these exercises.

The programme for Tuesday is always a full one. At ten o'clock in the morning there was the delivery of diplomas and badges in the hall of the Union Franklin Literary Society. The hall is a spacious one, and is always crowded on such occasions. The trustees adjourn for the purpose of being in attendance, and a couple of hours are spent in impromptu addresses by visitors who may be called out. Last year Dr. H. F. Johnson, of Whitworth College, responded by a handsome subscription toward repairing and improving the hall, and, when called out this year, he was gratified with the sight of the work he was instrumental in starting. New plastering, new window shades, and everything as neat as a new pin. We cannot give account of the many good things that were said by Bishop Keener, Prof. Magruder, Bro. Sawyer, Kernan, President Andrews and others. It was a symposium of wit and wisdom, and a time to be remembered. At twelve M. the audience adjourned to the chapel to attend the annual meeting of the alumni. K. A. Cross, Esq., of Clinton, La., delivered an impressive and able address on "The Southern Scholar in His New Relations Induced by the War and Emancipation," and Judge Kilbourne recited a poem sparkling with humor, and delivered in his own inimitable way. Rev. C. W. Carter, of the Louisiana Conference, was elected to deliver the address at the next meeting of the alumni, and somebody is to deliver a poem. The anniversary exercises of the Literary Society took place on Tuesday night. The speeches of the young men were good, as to matter and manner. The annual address by Rev. C. B. Galloway, of the Mississippi Conference, was on the Life and Character of John Wycliffe. The history and character of this great pioneer reformer were treated in a masterly way, and their lessons were most forcibly and pertinently exhibited. The address was a perfect feast, and we judge that all who heard it were instructed and delighted.

The commencement exercises were on Wednesday, July 3, at ten A. M. The graduates were very happy in their speeches, both in the topics selected and in their treatment. President Andrews' baccalaureate was filled with sound and practical advice to the young men, and gave them and the rest of us something to think about and to practice for the balance of our lives. The degree of bachelor of arts was conferred on Jesse Bedford Shelmire, and the degree of bachelor of science on James Simrall and William H. Packwood. The honorary degree of A. M. was conferred on Rev. Thomas Armstrong, president of Mansfield Female College, and William Howard Magruder, president of Canton Female College, and the degree of doctor of divinity was conferred on Rev. Harvey F. Johnson, president of Whitworth Female College.

The following resolutions were adopted by the board of trustees in reference to Rev. J. C. Miller, late president of Soule University, Texas:

Resolved, That it is with deep regret that we have heard of the death of Rev. J. C. Miller, formerly president of Centenary College, and for many years an active member of the board of trustees, and that we hereby express and place on record our appreciation of his worth and ability as a Christian minister and educator.

Resolved, That a copy of the above resolution be sent to his family, and that it be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

We append the following report to the board of trustees by the Committee on the State of the College:

REPORT.

Your Committee on the State of the College report as follows:

The number of students has been somewhat greater during the past session than the previous one, and their attendance has been more uniform. Of these, a much larger proportion than usual are in the regular college classes. The evidences are before us of faithful work, and an improved standard of scholarship. There is very marked improvement in the character of the public exercises of the students. The young gentlemen who have appeared upon the platform have furnished evidence of care and study in the improved style of their composition and delivery.

The deportment of the students has been good, there having been no occasion for the exercise of any stern measures of discipline. Altogether we congratulate the board and the faculty upon the healthful and hopeful condition of the college. Not the least worthy of notice is the high tone of morals and of gentlemanly propriety prevailing in the college. A large number of the students are members of the church, and consistent in their Christian life, and eight are preparing for the ministry.

We feel that we can commend the college to the confidence of the public, and especially of our own church, as affording a safe and superior opportunity for the training of our young men in Christian education. In the faculty they have fine exemplars of Christian character, as well as able instructors in their several departments; and in the influences of a Christian and highly intelligent and refined community are both encouragement and incitement to good life and high attainment.

Respectfully submitted.

Mansfield Female College.

The annual commencement exercises of this institution were resumed on Friday, the twenty-first, and closed the following Wednesday.

We were present from Friday morning until Tuesday at one o'clock, when the examinations closed, and heard every class examined—twenty-two in number—and we do not hesitate to pronounce the examination thorough and satisfactory. The faculty showed faithfulness upon their part, and the pupils did credit to themselves. There were nine graduates—two classical and seven English. These, without exception, acquitted themselves well. The president was very happy in his final address, and in conferring the honors upon the young ladies of the graduating class. University influence was the theme of the literary address, delivered by Mr. Shepherd, of Shreveport. The two concerts, on Monday and Tuesday nights, were well attended, and, so far as we know, gave universal satisfaction.

As to ourselves, we confess that we were mostly charmed by the $130 they raised in the interest of the college.

During the year there were between sixty and seventy matriculates—a good school for the times. This occasion was well attended by the preachers—a good omen. We omit many of the particulars, as the impression of the occasion will be given by others. The board of managers have expended some $250 during the year in repairs on the college buildings, and still have on hand, in cash and dues belonging to the college, some $700, and have made arrangements to put a new roof on the main building during vacation, and intend to have it in good repair for the next opening session. The college is free from debt, holding its own, and anxiously waiting for the coming railroad, which will put it in numbers what it was in ante-bellum days.

A Revolution in Belgium.

The news of the fall of the Roman Catholic power in Belgium is almost as wonderful as would be the report that the Dutch had lost Holland. The Ultramontanes have had their own way hitherto in the small kingdom, and have ruled both ecclesiastically and civilly. Only once has the control of civil affairs been out of their hands, and that only for a short time. The priests, by means so well known and successful in the Province of Quebec, Canada, soon succeeded in ousting the Liberals and reinstating their own favorites. Again it has happened, to their surprise and mortification, that the Liberals have won in the elections; and the announcement of the victory has been followed by the resignation of the Ultramontane ministry and the succession of a Liberal government. In the hope of assisting the restoration of the Ultramontane power, the Vatican has summoned the papal nuncio at Brussels to return; and, without doubt, every means will be used to induce the people to return to their allegiance to the Catholic party, with what success it would be impossible to predict.

The overthrow of the ministry means the defeat of Cardinal Descramps, who had more to do with its creation, perhaps, and more influence in governmental affairs, except with King Leopold, than any other man in Belgium. He is a member of the Order of Redemption, and has secured bishops who are attached to this powerful order and to himself. Catholic Belgium, unlike Catholic Spain, has been tolerant of other religions—though not because the church wanted toleration, but because the constitution and the King, who is a liberal and intelligent ruler, demanded it. The State supports a Protestant as well as the Catholic Church, though the former has scarcely existed save in name. The great majority of the five millions of Belgians are Catholics, and Cardinal Deschamps has been careful that his clergy should have possession of all the old national church, properly renovated and in good condition.

The Protestantism of Belgium, which has been an unknown quantity for many years, begins now to awaken into a vigorous life; and the late reports from it give grounds for hopes of a brighter and more useful future. The downfall of the Ultramontane ministry, the influence exerted by M. de Laveleye and other prominent men in favor of Protestantism some unwise measures by the Catholic hierarchy, and the readiness of the people in many places to turn their backs on Ultramontanism combine to give the Protestant movement a very favorable opportunity. The foundation for the propagation of Protestantism was laid many years ago in the labors of colporteurs, who did their work so thoroughly that the Scriptures are to be found in many Catholic families. Upon ground thus prepared the Evangelical Society of Belgium has been at work and now finds itself in possession of a ripe and rich field. The society, which was organized about forty years ago, has congregations of three classes—organized churches, congregations preparing for organization, and mission stations. The headquarters of the society are at Brussels, where the reception of numerous requests for preachers shows how the spirit of inquiry is prevailing. "There never has been," says a Belgian letter in the Evangelical Christendom, "such a time for Belgium since the days when Philip of Spain and the Duke of Alva burnt out the gospel."

Some interesting particulars are given of the progress of the gospel. In one small rural village a Protestant service has been lately established, growing out of the wayside preaching, for a brief period, of two young men, sent out from Brussels. The peasants, to the number of seventy or more, gather in a small hired room and hear the gospel. They have not yet separated formally from the Church of Rome, and "the crucifix still stands on the mantlepiece." But they have learned many gospel hymns and read the New Testament. In Sart Dame-Avelines, a town of 2,000 inhabitants a Protestant church has been established, with an attendance of 300 to 400. The history of this society is a brief one. The village priest, who was greatly beloved and who taught the people much sound doctrine, was removed by his superiors for this reason. The people were so indignant at this action that, at the suggestion of a farmer's wife, who had influence among them, they sent to Bruxelles for a "Protestant preacher." The first meetings were attended by from 500 to 1,000, of whom about 300 have resisted all efforts to induce them to return to the Catholic Church. "At Charleroi," says a correspondent, "a town of 15,000 inhabitants, there is now a large and flourishing church of 1,100 persons, of whom 150 are communicants, almost all formerly Roman Catholics. This town is in the center of a district containing many populous villages, all accessible to the gospel. Services are held in nine different places by the pastor, in which he is assisted by ten Christian men of the congregation; and all their operations indicate a living, healthy church. A new building is greatly needed at Charleroi, to replace the old one, which is now too small for the congregation."

The Evangelical Society began, a few years ago, a work among the workmen at Brussels, which is yielding important results. These workmen, who have homes in the surrounding country, stay in lodging-houses in the capital during the week, returning to their families on Sunday. They have been visited by agents of the society, and gathered into Bible classes and schools, and led in considerable numbers to profession of conversion. By the labors of these workmen in their own homes the gospel is being rapidly spread, and village after village sends for an evangelical pastor. Some English missionaries have assisted the Evangelical Society in this and other schemes of evangelism, a church of 300 attendants at Spa being one of the results.

Flanders has been hitherto almost impenetrable to the agents of the society. It is intensely Catholic, rendering implicit obedience to bigoted and exacting priests. A colporteur, who has been laboring in Ostend and other towns, has been several times driven away and threatened with violence. The fact that the people can only be reached by the Flemish tongue has also been an obstacle; but two Flemish young men are now in training at Brussels, and it is hoped that others may be secured for evangelistic service in Ghent, Antwerp, Bruges and Ostend.—Independent.

Last Days of Dr. Hodge.

Rev. Charles Hodge, D. D., LL. D., the well-known Presbyterian author and theological professor, died on the nineteenth of June. From a communication in the New York Observer, concerning his last days, we make the following extract:

The dying of this illustrious divine was well worthy of his life and doctrine. It was emphatically putting off his tabernacle more than dissolution of his nature. Death seldom finds at fourscore a soul so strong, or a faith so invincible.

The recent death of Mrs. Harriet Woolsey Hodge, of Philadelphia, and, one week after, that of Mrs. Alice Van Rensselaer Hodge, of Burlington, N. J., two beloved and favorite nieces, followed quickly by that of Prof. Henry, an intimate friend for half a century, crushed his usual cheer and buoyancy of spirit. With much difficulty he returned from the funeral of Prof. Henry in Washington to his family, and the hands of his family physician, Dr. Wikoff. Within a few days, at the request of Dr. Wikoff, his nephew, so eminent in the medical profession, Dr. H. Lenox Hodge, of Philadelphia, was sent for. All that skill and fidelity and watchfulness could do was done to retain his precious life. But the ruin of that body was inevitable.

For months and years he had secured to covet living here till the completion of fourscore years, and last summer he would say with a smile that he would like to be eighty, but the eighty-first he did not care for. The eightieth year was finished in December last. Yet no one at Princeton could see either failure or decay in anything but his step and his voice, and a slight dullness of hearing. In his class-room four times a week, and in the conference of professors and students on Sabbath afternoon, he was punctual; interesting and impressive as he had ever been, and that until the end of the term in April last.

Even through the last hours of his illness, when freedom from pain and from torpor was gained for a little, he was alert and inquisitive, with his usual interest in events around him, and events of the day—the Presbyterian Assembly, the Congress at Washington, the Congress at Berlin, the college at Princeton, and the minutest concerns of his own children and grandchildren, here and elsewhere. This rapid and wide synoptical vision was that of a consciously dying man; for he had been busy in setting his house in order, and wisely making the most exact arrangements, in view of his final demise. He knew that death was at hand, and though it did come sooner than he looked for, he repeatedly spoke of its approach being "slow."

Need we say that he was ready for the great change? There was not a cloud, nor doubt, nor faltering fear. It was the serenity of the sun in its strength, declining only to go down no more forever. Never did mariner meet "the last enemy" with truer courage or sublimer assurance. He said but little of his religious experience; but that little was wonderfully comprehensive and significant. "To be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord. To be present with the Lord is to see him, to be like him." This was about the last articulate expression and the crowning of that sagacious logic, in which he had no superior through Christendom.

Bishop McTyeire, writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate of his recent tour in Mississippi, says:

"Our educational interests in southern Mississippi are represented by Centenary College, under the presidency of Dr. Andrews, and two female colleges at Meridian and Brookhaven. The former of these is under the care of Bro. Adkisson, and I regretted that, his vacation having begun, I could see only the empty halls. Tasteful trees without grass promise of what is within. The buildings are not large, but new, and well adapted. The presiding elder, Bro. Ellis, did excellent work for the church when he took the agency in hand, and put this institution on a safe basis. We need just such a school here as the worthy president is building up. He has southern Mississippi largely now, and he will after will reign and triumph there for the benefit of all concerned.

Whitworth College, since the presidency of the Rev. H. F. Johnson began, eleven years ago, has paid a debt of $5,000, and added three times as much in value to its real estate and facilities for instruction, and is now out of debt, with a larger number of boarders and pupils than have been elsewhere. The financial result is from the income of the institution—not of subscription, gift or agency. Several days spent in the delightful college family at Brookhaven left me in no doubt as to how this success has been achieved. The location is good, and the management better. The order is exemplary in the commencement exercises. The crowded audiences receive the speech and other performances with pleasure, but without boisterous applause. This rule was violated once only, when President Johnson took occasion to express his intention to go with the college, and conduct it forward to still larger success. I know not where a station of equal influence for good could be found; and his loss would be irreparable.

Long will I remember the morning hymns at chapel prayers. The musical performances were grand, when under Prof. Eckhardt's wand, pianos were going at once, two pairs of hands to each—in accord. Oh, these girls can do better than that, my liking. Besides "Zumps," "Dames de Seville," and "Fra Diavolo," and "Puritani," they will give you "Sweeping Through the Gates," and "The Old Ship of Zion" in real camp meeting style.

Another fact noteworthy was the plainness of dressing—neat, tasteful, but plain. Calico was the style of the haut, and not much fringe or furbelow with that. Day after day I looked for the evil of the time crop out—extravagant dressing; it came not, and is by rule regulated.

I enjoyed the essays, musical recitatives more than the [illegible] and charade performances, the latter seemed to be slightly in excess of popularity. These things, even when well done, are easily overdone; and it is well to guard the tendency in that direction.

The Society of Alumni (which, like the written debate of the first evening, was admirably presided over by a lady) held its annual meeting on Monday evening, the twenty graduates having read their essays in the morning. Among the items read by the secretary was the list of privileges of members during the year concluded with the naive remark that she was sorry the list was no longer!

There was a unique and capital address from one of them—Miss C.—on the experience of a school teacher, in which noble work she had been engaged. And then—the part most unpleasant to me—a speech, of which I may furnish an extract for next week's Advocate of half a column.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate of Macon, Ga., has come out in a new form and a new dress. It is now an eight page paper, about the same size as our own, and in every way very attractive and tasteful. We wish to congratulate Dr. Haygood [illegible] on the improvement which honest have made.

The Everlasting Arms.

The following eloquent passage on alking by faith is from a criticism Mr. Spurgeon's Pulpit, on Canon rrar's book, "Eternal Hope:"

When are the everlasting arms un- neath us? The only answer is: w and forevermore. Now, at this ment, beloved, the everlasting ms are underneath us. The life of Christian is described as walking faith, and to my mind walking faith is the most extraordinary racle ever beheld beneath the sun. alking on the waves, as Peter did, type of the life of every Chris . I have sometimes likened it to ending an invisible staircase far into the clouds. You cannot see tep before you, but you wind up ard the light. When you look nward all is dark, and before you nothing visible but cloud, while neath you yawns a fathomless s. Yet we have climbed, some us, now for years up this perpet ly ascending stair, never seeing inch before us. We have often ed almost in horror, and asked wonder: "What next, and what ?" Yet what we thought was d has proved to be solid rock; kness has been light before us, slippery places have been safe, ery now and then, when the dark s has been denser than usual, a kness which might be felt, when the past behind us has vanished, nothing has been seen but the step we stood on, we have said: w did I come here? What a ge, mysterious life mine has n!" We have almost wished our- e down on the level among the dlings, who can always see their and know what is underneath ; but faith has come to our help o; we have believed, and, be ing, we have seen the invisible grasped the eternal; and then have gone on, have put our foot n again, and anon have run up joy the shining way. What air t we have sometimes made on dder of light, so that we have panied with angels, and left the d far down beneath our feet! and then we have enjoyed a pse, through the thick darkness, he jeweled walls of the eternal which needeth no candle, ther light of the sun; we have I say, its brightness, and de- ined still to climb the myste- s way. Well, believer, at this ent, though thou canst not see way, yet since thou art walking aith," underneath are the ever- ng arms."

To the Methodisms

OF THE UNITED STATES, THE CANADIAS, GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND: GREETING.

At the late General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, held at Atlanta, Ga., U. S. A., May 1-21, 1878, the following resolutions were heartily and unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in General Conference assembled at Atlanta Ga., May 9 1878, indorse the Wesley Monumental Church at Savannah, Ga., and commend it to the Methodists the world over, as an enterprise eminently proper, and meeting our hearty approval.

"Resolved, That the Bishops be and are hereby authorized, when they deem it expedient, to appoint an agent to represent this Memorial Church to Wesley, and to solicit the aid of Methodists everywhere to bring it to an early completion."

Know, therefore, that, by the authority of the General Conference, and with the consent and approval of the College of Bishops, I, as the Bishop presiding in the South Georgia Annual Conference, have appointed the Rev. J. O. A. Clark, D. D., LL. D., agent for the Wesley Monumental Church at Savannah, Ga.

Dr. Clark's commission extends to the several Methodisms of the United States of America; and the Dominion of Canada; to the Irish Conference, and to the Wesleyan Conference of Great Britain—"the mother of us all."

Dr. Clark is an effective member of the South Georgia Annual Conference, a brother worthy and well beloved, and is hereby commended to your confidence, sympathy and co-operation. Receive him in the name of our Lord; and for the sake of our common Methodism, and the name of the great and good Wesley whom we venerate as you do—help him in the work to which he has been appointed.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you.

Signed by the authority of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the College of Bishops authorizing and approving. GEORGE F. PIERCE.

The Plymouth Brethren.

A sect of Christians, says the New York Observer, claiming to be no sect, but to be Christians in general, and to have nothing in particular, are known in England and on the Continent of Europe as Plymouth Brethren—from the place in England where they first became known. They include very many excellent people. But they are disorganizing, and often divisive. They have recently on the Continent, divided themselves, if division can be where there is no unity. At a recent meeting of Baptist ministers in Philadelphia, Rev Mr East gave this outline of their views:

"The body originated in Dublin in 1828, and was composed at first chiefly of persons from the Anglican Church. It soon spread to other lands. The Brethren believe that all disciples have a right to teach, and that even recognized teachers should receive no stated pecuniary support. They believe in eternal justification and imputed sanctification; in the identification of the believer with the perfection of Christ; that Christianity is in ruins, as appears from the separate sects; that believers should withdraw from the churches; that there is a complete abrogation of the law, and entire deliverance from sin, so far as the believer is concerned; that sin is not essentially evil; that repentance is not a requirement of Scripture; that regeneration and progress in holiness are not to be insisted on, and that ere the end of all things shall have come there shall be a secret meeting of the Lord with his disciples previous to his manifestation to the world. They deny the proper humanity of Christ, the vicarious character of his righteousness. They deny that the law is to be regarded as the rule of life, so far as the risen child of God is concerned. They deny that they are under obligation to keep the Sabbath. They believe that the confession of sin is all that God requires."

The present hour is one of serious pressure upon the majority of our schools of learning. Harvard seems to enjoy, even in these hard times, a perennial flow of tens of thousands into its capacious treasury. Three hundred thousand dollars were bestowed upon it, in specific gifts, or general contributions to its funds, last year; but nearly all the remaining colleges (perhaps Amherst should be excepted) have found themselves quite embarrassed by the falling off of their incomes. The personal sacrifices, in some instances, on the part of officers, trustees and patrons have been very severe; but the vision of the assembled alumni from all portions of the land, showing the vast influences of these institutions of Christian learning, and also of their gathered inmates, giving promise of wider usefulness in times to come, affords a rich compensation for, and a high inspiration in, the self sacrificing work incident to their establishment and support. No gifts that are laid upon Christ's altar are of more immediate service to the church and to the world than those consecrated to the support of these higher Christian schools of learning. Zion's Herald

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, STAUNTON, VA.—We take pleasure in directing attention to the advertisement of this popular seminary. It is located in one of the healthiest climates in the world, where every breeze contributes to the general vigor of its pupils. It presents attractions unsurpassed in the South. Its buildings are home like and elegant; grounds attractive—every grand.

This school is attended by one hundred and fifteen boarding pupils from seventeen different States. It has acquired this widespread popularity under the efficient management and direction of President Harris, whose thorough scholarship and long and successful experience has caused him to be regarded as one of the first educators of the Union. This school will require its pupils to practice economy, especially in dress. With these advantages we are not surprised that this popular institution draws its patronage from Maryland and Pennsylvania to Texas. See advertisement.

THE card of Rev. D. L. Mitchel, a Methodist local preacher, appears in another column as business agent of the Religious Book Depository, 27 Camp street, of this city, where may be found the largest and best assortment of standard Religious books suitable for ministers, libraries, Bible students and home reading. Prizes for day and Sabbath schools, and Sunday school supplies a specialty. Books for the different evangelical denominations constantly in stock.

A TRAVELER who has been "everywhere" says: "I find the Grand Hotel, located on Broadway and Thirty-First street, in the heart of New York, one of the finest and best of hotels. Its patronage is of the best classes, and its prices are as moderate as at any good European plan hotel." New York Hotel Gazette.

WE ARE glad to see the change which has taken place in the appearance of the New Orleans Price Current, a change for the better. It now appears in a neat and handsome quarto form—an improvement on the four-page edition.

MACHINERY.—B. J. West, 115 Magazine street, keeps everything in the machinery line for plantations. See advertisement.

THE GREAT JACKSON ROUTE is the shortest, quickest and best Northern line to New York and the Eastern cities. During the heat of summer the greatest comfort in traveling is found on the route by Chicago or Louisville, and along the shores of the great lakes, or through the grand scenery of the Alleghany mountains. To pass through these regions there is no route so direct, so quick or so good as the Jackson, with its through cars, steel track and short line, enabling its trains to leave New Orleans one hour later than any others, and make the same time.

Excursion tickets are now on sale by this route, good till October 31, to all the attractive and famous summer resorts of the Northwest best known among which are Waukesha, with its celebrated springs; Oconomowoc, the center of the delightful lake district of Wisconsin; Green Lake, Grand Haven, St. Paul, Niagara Falls, Montreal, Quebec, etc. The rates are as low or lower than to watering places in other parts of the country, and living, both at hotels and boarding-houses, cheap and of the best kind, the country around being highly cultivated and furnishing everything desirable for the table.

All are invited to call at the ticket office, 22 Camp street, under the City Hotel, where guide-books, descriptions, routes, rates, etc., will be furnished, and the fullest information given.

VANDALIA LINE.—The attention of our readers and the traveling public is called to the merits of the above line. For parties going East by way of St. Louis there is no better road. Comfortable, commodious and elegant palace cars, gliding noiselessly, swiftly and safely along over a track so smooth that one is almost unconscious of motion unless he chance to look out of the window, offer for the time a home unequaled in splendor and luxurious ease by anything the most fastidious traveler of the past generation ever dreamed of. The popularity of this old and reliable road is constantly and steadily on the increase. The efforts of the well-known and highly-respected general manager, Col. Simpson, are fully appreciated by the traveling public.

COMMISSION MERCHANT.—Send in your fruits and poultry to J. A. Bourg, 147 Decatur street. He gets the best prices and is perfectly honorable.

A HIGH REPUTATION.

For years the firm of Steele & Price have deservedly had a high reputation for the excellence of their Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder and Special Flavoring Extracts. They have now added a line of strictly Unique Perfumes, rivaling in excellence the perfumes of this or any other country.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

TO THE CONSUMPTIVE.—Let those who languish under the fatal severity of our climate through any pulmonary complaint, or even those who are in decided Consumption, by no means despair. There is a safe and sure remedy at hand, and one easily tried. "Wilbor's Compound of Cod Liver Oil and Lime," without possessing the very nauseating flavor of the oil as heretofore used, is endowed by the Phosphate of Lime with a healing property which renders the oil doubly efficacious.—Remarkable testimonials of its efficacy shown to those who desire to see them. Sold by A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, and all druggists.

WILBOFT'S TONIC!—A Safe, Sure and Scientific Cure.—The unprecedented sale of this world renowned medicine proves incontestably that no remedy has superseded the use of this reliable tonic. No spleen has been found so hard as not to yield to its softening influence, and no liver so hypertrophied as not to give up its long retained, noxious secretions, and no Child or Feverish as yet refuses to follow line. WHEELER K. EISLAY & CO. Proprietors, New Orleans. For sale by all druggists.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, crop blister or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

STONE IN THE BLADDER

RELIEVED BY THE

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

AFTER THE LIFE OF THE PATIENT WAS DESPAIRED OF BY HIS MEDICAL ADVISERS. THE STONE DISSOLVED IN THREE HOURS IN A GLASS OF THE LITHIA WATER.

POINT COUPEE, LA., April 3, 1878.

MR. THOMAS F. GOODE: By request I give you the following history of my case: Two years ago I began to suffer with severe pain in my kidneys, and to have periodical attacks—about two a week—which caused the most excruciating agony, from which I was habitually relieved by the discharge of a stone from four to seven grains in weight. There was never more than one stone from the pair in the kidneys. In eighteen months I discharged seven large stones, besides quantities of smaller stones and sand. As the result of this protracted and great suffering my general health was reduced to so low a condition that my physicians advised me that I had nothing to hope for from dissolving, that my case was a hopeless one, and I looked for relief only in death. In this state of things, about a month ago I was advised by Mr. I. L. Lyons, a druggist of New Orleans, to try the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, Spring No. 2. A week after I began to use it I had a slight attack, in which I passed two small stones. Pouring upon these in a glass of the Water, in three hours I found them dissolved to a fine dust, which gave me no pain whatever, and I persevered to its use. I have had no attack since. The pain in my kidneys has entirely disappeared. I have regained my usual weight, and my general health is perfectly restored. I very cheerfully acknowledge my indebtedness for my life and the comfort which I now enjoy to this great health-giving Water. Respectfully, C. WOLFF.

This Water, in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, can be had at the Springs, and of I. L. LYONS, Wholesale Druggist, 32 and 34 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

CROWS.

A Maine farmer, says a correspondent of the Portland Advertiser, is sure, from numerous experiments, that crows can count three, and no more than three. "In the center of the corn-field was a small board shanty, and the farmer noticed that whenever he was in this building, although he was quite concealed from the crows; they would never come down to be shot. As soon as he left the field, however, they would come down by hundreds. They could evidently count one. The idea occurred to him to test their further skill in mathematics. The next day he took his son to the shanty, and after a time sent him home, thinking that after the crows had seen one person leave the field they would suppose the danger past, and come down. But they wisely kept aloof, and not until after he had himself started for home did they venture to alight in the corn. The next day he took two persons with him, with the same result: first one person left the field, then another, the crows cawing their approval, but remaining in their safe position, and not until the third person had been seen to depart from the field would the cunning creatures trust themselves within gunshot of the little building. The next day half a dozen persons entered it. Presently one of them went back across the field. The crows mentioned the fact among themselves, but kept their distance, among the trees. Another person went away, with the same result. Directly a third emerged from the building and disappeared. The unhappy crows, having reached the end of their mathematical rope, came down in platoons to their deferred breakfast, unaware of three armed enemies still remaining in the building, who at once opened fire upon the poor birds, whose great misfortune was that they were unable to count more than three. This experiment was tried repeatedly, with six, seven and eight persons; but the crows never failed to take the position that there could be no more than three, and when three departed they invariably descended to their doom."

A VICIOUS HORSE CURED BY KINDNESS.

At a recent meeting of the Farmers' Club of the American Institute, in New York city, a letter from President Ely was read, as follows:

I have received a communication containing a story about a horse, which I think ought to be read and published in the report of the club meetings: "A horse in Farmington, formerly driven in a meat cart, was bought by its present owner at a very low price, because reputed vicious. He would bite, fear, kick, run away; was utterly uncontrollable. Soon after changing masters the people who had called the purchase a foolish one were surprised at the difference in the horse's conduct. He would go fast or slow, as desired; stop instantly at 'Whoa;' follow his master, come at his call and rub his head on his shoulder. What had made the change? Not force; the poor horse had been beaten, kicked and starved before, and grown more and more stubborn. No; he was well fed, well bedded, well watered; not over-driven or over loaded; never whipped, kicked or scolded. Kind words were given him, and now and then an apple or a lump of sugar. No gentler, safer, more faithful horse went on the road. But, Indian fashion, he forgot neither benefit nor injury. Occasionally, when in harness, he saw his former master. Then, invariably, all the fire of his nature was aroused. His eyes rolled, he champed his bit and showed an intense desire to get hold of his enemy. Only the voice and caressing hand of his kind new owner could quiet him. What a power is kindness—the power that even the Almighty loves best to use!"

ONIONS SOWN IN FALL.

Last year we published an article by Peter Henderson, in which he gave the experience of a Long Island market gardener who sowed his onions in autumn. We gave the plan a trial in our own garden last fall, but the sowing was not made until the very end of September, and the young plants did not make sufficient growth to stand the very severe winter, even though they were well covered. Still the success, though only partial, was sufficient to show that this method is worthy of consideration, and from the amount that came to maturity on our bed this summer we have no doubt it will answer wherever sets are used; but where onions can be raised directly from the seed there will be no advantage from fall sowing, except for such as are to be marketed green or very early. The idea is to sow the seed in the fall at such a time as will allow the plants to form a bulb large enough to stand the winter, and yet not so large as to run up the flower next season. In fact, to raise onion sets which, instead of being harvested, are to be left in the ground, where they will be ready to grow as soon as spring opens. On Long Island the middle of September is found to be the best time to sow; farther south it should be later, and north of that earlier. Success will largely depend upon the time of sowing; and this, for any particular locality, can only be ascertained by experiment. The covering should not be put on before cold weather has stopped the growth of the bulbs, and may be of leaves, straw, marsh hay or other litter.—American Agriculturist.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.—It should now be ascertained what we want for every flower-bed all at the place—how many plants and what kinds, whether annuals, or such as have been raised from cuttings. Knowing what we need, next see how many we have, and, if deficient in any, get up what is wanted. I have often asked gardeners in the spring about how many plants they required for bedding purposes, and have been told they "did not know;" and still they would be propagating great quantities of different things. This looks to me like groping in the dark, and is the reason why so often a good deal of bedding is seen with very little effect. They have many easily-propagated plants, but few of such things as are a little more difficult, but which, if a few more had been grown, would have imparted a greater effect to the others.

Every gardener and amateur should keep a diary, and note everything which will prove of any service in the future. The extreme cheapness of most of the horticultural periodicals now-a-days gives us every facility for getting the practice of others to assist us with our own, therefore giving us a chance for succeeding in every branch. What we do not know, some others do; what we have failed with, some one who has succeeded tells us. The poorest work on horticulture I have ever seen told me something I did not know, or had forgotten.—Western Rural.

BRINE THAT WILL PRESERVE BUTTER A YEAR.—Among the many devices for keeping butter in a manner that preserves the fresh, rosy flavor of new, with all its sweetness, is the following from the Dutchess Farmer, which is said to be entirely successful:

To three gallons of brine, strong enough to bear an egg, add a quarter of a pound of nice white sugar and one tablespoonful of saltpeter. Boil the brine, and when it is cold strain carefully. Make your butter into rolls, and wrap each separately in a clean white muslin cloth, tying up with a string. Pack a large jar full, weight the butter down, and pour the brine until all of it is submerged. This will keep really good butter perfectly sweet and fresh for a whole year. Be careful not to put upon ice the butter that you wish to keep for any length of time. In summer, when the heat will not admit of butter being made into rolls, pack closely in small jars, and, using the same brine, allow it to cover the butter to the depth of at least four inches. This excludes the air, and answers very nearly as well as the first method suggested.

THE GLADIOLUS.—The gladiolus is the most beautiful of our summer bulbs, with tall spikes of flowers, some two feet or more in height, and often several spikes from the same bulb. The flowers are of almost every desirable color—brilliant scarlet, crimson, creamy white, blotched and spotted in the most curious and interesting manner. The culture is very simple. Set the bulbs from six to nine inches apart and cover about three inches. If set in rows they may be set six inches apart in the rows, and the rows one foot apart. The planting may be done at different times from the middle of April to the first of June, to secure a long session of bloom. Keep the earth mellow, and place a neat stake to support the spikes in storms. I have never known a case where the gladiolus failed to give the most perfect satisfaction, opening a new field of beauty to those unacquainted with its merits.—Vick's Floral Guide.

HOW TO COOK OATMEAL.—First, be sure to get new, fresh oatmeal; as if it becomes damp or old it is bitter. Put one quart of water into a tinned stewpan; salt sufficient to be palatable; stir in carefully, so as not to have it lumpy, three or four handfuls of oatmeal. Put it over the fire and stir continually until it has swollen all it will, using care not to have it burn on the bottom. When it has swollen all it will, add more water, and leave it cooking for several hours—the longer the better—and the longer it is cooked the softer and more jelly-like it becomes. Having the stewpan in another kettle of hot water prevents it burning on the bottom, and you are relieved from constant stirring. It is good with milk, syrup or sweetened milk, or even with butter alone.

JAPAN QUINCES.—(Cydonia Japonica.)—These are well-known showy ornamental plants, producing very tough, hard, fragrant fruit, not generally considered edible. There are several varieties, mainly differing in the color of their flowers, which vary from a pure white to a deep brilliant scarlet. Of late years the Japan quince has been recommended as a hedge plant, and it answers the purpose admirably, except that cattle will browse off the leaves if afforded an opportunity, and therefore it should not be used except for ornamental hedges and screens. It is readily propagated by cuttings of the roots made in the fall, and kept where they will not freeze during the winter, but not warm enough to induce them to sprout and grow.

TO REMOVE FRUIT STAINS.—If you have been picking or handling any acid fruit, and have stained your hands, wash them in clear water, wipe them lightly, and while they are yet moist strike a match and shut your hands around it so as to catch the smoke, and the stains will disappear. If you have stained your muslin or gingham dress or your white pants with berries, before wetting with anything else pour boiling water through the stains, and they will disappear. Before fruit-juice dries it can often be removed by cold water, using a sponge and towel, if necessary. Rubbing the fingers with the inside of parings of apples will remove most of the stain caused by juicing.

If you want to keep your hogs, horses, cattle and sheep healthy, give them salt regularly. There is no better vermifuge than salt. Much of the so-called hog cholera is due to intestinal worms. Plenty of salt would prevent the accumulation of these worms. All animals desire salt, showing that it is a want of their nature, and undoubtedly for a wise purpose.

HOLLOW-HORN.—The symptoms of what is called hollow-horn are: Eyes dull and sunken, horns cold, eyes and head swollen, the animal standing with head low down against the barn or fence, staring coat, and sometimes bloody urine. It is the result of exposure to cold and low condition, and affects the sinews of the head at the base of the horns. Turpentine rubbed on the top of the head and around the horns, and warm fomentations, with hot wet cloths wrapped around the horns, are useful. Carbonate of ammonia, with warm, stimulating drinks, should be given, and nourishing food, and the patient be kept warm.—American Agriculturist.

Plants sleep at night, as is well known, but their sleeping hours are a matter of habit, and can easily be disturbed. A French chemist recently exposed a sensitive plant to a bright light at night and placed it in a dark room during the day. The plant at first appeared much puzzled. It opened and closed its leaves irregularly, in spite of the artificial sunbeaming upon it at night, and in the daytime it sometimes awoke. It finally submitted to the change, unfolding itself regularly at night, and closing in the morning.

Thaer recommends, in his "Principles of Agriculture," that in the spring, when the wheat is just beginning to vegetate, the field should be thoroughly harrowed, so that there shall be no sign of a green leaf. He says: "When wheat is sown in a good soil, and the weather is favorable to its growth, it yields the largest amount or produce of any kind of grain, in nutritive matter at least, if not in bulk; and then oats is the only kind which equals, or much less surpasses it."

If milch cows be fed upon dry hay it cannot be expected of them to give full supplies of milk; for without succulent food the udder cannot, except upon a limited scale, carry on its milk-secreting operations. In view of these facts every farmer should make it a part of his business to raise a sufficient quantity of beets, carrots and parsnips to give each milch cow on his farm half a bushel daily during the winter and early spring.—Germantown Telegraph.

FARINA PUDDING.—Five ounces of farina stirred gradually and boiled in one quart of milk, then let it cool; separate the yolks and whites of five eggs; beat the whites to a stiff froth, and stir the yolks and sugar together; then stir all into the cool boiled farina, flavor and bake. It will be light, like a suttle, if made in this manner.

A Chinaman in California, whose life was insured for a large amount, was seriously hurt by falling from a wagon. There was some doubt of his ever getting better, and at length one of his friends wrote to the insurance company: "Charley halt dead: the half money."

WHY IS IT

that cheap, adulterated baking powders are warranted equal to Dr. Price's, when it is known that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is the purest and healthiest made. It is because the adulterated kinds are bought for less, and give better profit.

Steam COTTON BAND PULLER

AND BUCKLER.

THE ATTENTION of the Compress owners in the United States is called to this

NEW AND IMPORTANT INVENTION.

This STEAM PULLER has been thoroughly tested, and has demonstrated the fact that we can apply to Cotton Bands any required tensil strain and BUCKLE THEM AT EXACTLY THE HIGHEST POINT REACHED; and no slipping of the bands through the buckle, all the bands being drawn taut and buckled at the same instant, turning out a perfect bale and without regard to the size, weight or shape of the bale.

THE BUCKLE is simply perfect, is cheap, an ustrong, and can be furnished on the order of a day by the million. The old bands are used as they come off the bales, and Scrupulosity is Lost.

THE PULLER can be attached to any style of styled press, and at an expense that is slight compared to the benefit to be derived by the Compress. It is simple, and can be operated by regular compress men without danger of getting out of order. The speed is equal of greater than any hand-pulling.

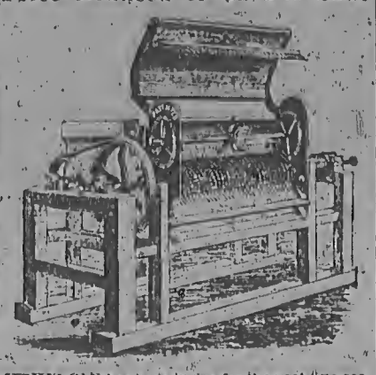
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while each mule, flag-team or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every bale ginned. MILK OF MAGNESIA
IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and light, lifting influence of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates; in fact, perfectly dissolved.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

BREECH-LOADERS.
WE take this opportunity of informing customers and friends that the first installment of our fall stock of these goods, direct from the manufacturers, has arrived, and is ready for inspection. In Breech-Loading Shot Guns alone our assortment in store comprises upward of 30 different styles and patterns, ranging through every desirable grade. These fresh importations can be profitably afforded lower than ever before, owing to present low cost of gold, and sterling exchange, while all our old stock has been marked down to meet the shrinkage in value from decline in gold. Don't take our word for it, but call and see for yourselves, whether you wish to buy now or not. FOLSOM BROS.,

THE JESUITS AT ROME.—By a pontifical brief of Pius the Ninth a college of writers of the Society of Jesus, "to exist in a house set apart for themselves," was established for the purpose of writing the periodical termed the Civilta Cattolica. It was constituted not for a term, but in perpetuity, and is therefore proclaimed to be an organic institution of the Church of Rome. It is in all things "to depend absolutely on the general of the Jesuits." Whatever it publishes, therefore, is not the fanciful caprice of individuals putting forward with freedom their private sentiments, but is the carefully weighed and deliberate utterance of the Jansissaries of the Romish communion. What an important part this periodical played at the time of the Vatican Council is well known. When the Pope, as was the late wearer of the tiara, was completely subjugated by the Jesuits, he spake as they spake—they were the power behind the throne. He filled the role of the speaking roods demolished at the Reformation, through which, as through a tube, fraudulent priests deceived the people. When, as now, the Pope has to a certain extent emancipated himself, the views of the Civilta are those which the Jesuits wish to be carried out. The intimations given are as much intended to enlighten the Pope as the rest of mankind. The state of the world and of the church is presented to him so as to indirectly sway his policy.—London Record.

ORIGINALITY IN WRITING.—Even Seneca complains that the ancients had compelled him to borrow from them what they would have taken from him had he been lucky enough to have preceded them. "Every one of my writings," says Goethe, "in the same candid spirit, has been furnished to me by a thousand different persons a thousand different things. The learned and the ignorant, the wise and the foolish, infancy and age, have come in turn, generally without having the least suspicion of it, to bring me the offering of their thoughts, their faculties, their experience; often have they sowed the harvest I have reaped. My work is that of an aggregation of human beings, taken from the whole of nature; it bears the name of Goethe." It is in the power of any writer to be original by deserting nature, and seeking the quaint and the fantastical; but literary monsters, like all others, are generally short-lived. "When I was a young man," says Goldsmith, "being anxious to distinguish myself, I was perpetually starting new propositions; but I soon gave this over, for I found that generally what was new was false." Strictly speaking, we may be original without being new; our thoughts may be our own, and yet commonplace.

St. Bernard puts it well when he says: "Humility is, of all graces, the chiefest when it doesn't know itself to be a grace at all."

Religious Notices.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—The camp meeting on Seashore Camp Ground for 1878 will commence on Wednesday, the tenth day of July, and continue from eight to ten days.

To strangers who have never visited the encampment, we may say that it is situated and fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, midway between the cities of New Orleans, La., and Mobile, Ala., and is readily reached by the New Orleans and Mobile railroad, on which two trains run daily from and to either city, stopping at the Camp Ground station, only a few hundred feet from the encampment. Trains leave New Orleans, at the depot, head of Canal street, at 7.30 A. M., 3.30 and 5 P. M.; and Mobile, at foot of Government street, at 2 20 A. M. and 3 45 P. M.

The fare on the above road, from New Orleans to camp ground, the round trip, is $3.20; and from Mobile, the round trip, $2 65. Freight at one-half the usual prices.

Tickets will be on sale at the offices and depots, in both cities, on and after Monday, the eighth of July, and continue good to return up to the twentieth of July.

On the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans railroad, at all important points from Cantoo southward, tickets for the round trip to the camp ground and back, via New Orleans, can be had during the above dates for one and one-fifth the usual fare.

On Morgan's Louisiana and Texas railroad, from Morgan City to New Orleans, one fare for the round trip, going and returning.

On the Mobile and Montgomery railroad round-trip tickets will be put on sale at Montgomery and local stations to Mobile, Ala., for visitors to the Seashore Camp Ground, at the rate of six cents per mile, on and from July 9 up to July 16. Tickets good to return on not later than July 22, 1878.

On the Mobile and Ohio railroad tickets will be sold for visitors to the Seashore Camp Ground, at Corinth and stations south, to Mobile and return, at three cents per mile. Tickets on sale on and from the fifth up to the fifteenth of July, and return coupons good to July 25, 1878.

The restaurant will be under the management of a committee of the trustees, with the assistance of an experienced caterer, where visitors can be furnished with good and satisfactory board at the reasonable price of fifty cents for breakfast, seventy-five cents for dinner and fifty cents for supper, or $1.50 per day.

Comfortable lodging accommodations are provided at fifty cents per night.

A limited number of wooden tents are prepared for renting to individuals or families, at prices from $10 to $30, according in size and position.

Cots, with pillow and sheet, will also be rented at $1 50 for the term of the meeting.

Persons desiring to attend the camp meeting are recommended to make their own arrangements for their comfort, before the date of the camp meeting, by application to any member of the board of trustees, to wit: William Otis, H. L. Hopper, Price Williams, William March and Edward H. Gould, of Mobile; E. F. Griffin and John Poltevent, of Mississippi; W. H. Foster, George W. W. Goodwyn, Philip Hallaran, John H. Keller, B. O. L. Rayne, W. B. Thomson, Charles M. Fush and W. G. Toomer, of New Orleans; or to James Tharp, the keeper of the grounds.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
PHILIP HALLARAN, Secretary. 27

GREENSBORO DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Bishop Keener will hold the above District Conference at Belmont; including the first Sabbath in August, the meeting to begin on Thursday before, with preaching at eleven o'clock. McDowell is the nearest depot on the Alabama Central railroad. Trains pass there about seven o'clock in the evening and about half-past four in the morning. Conveyances will be there on the arrival of the trains, going both ways, to carry delegates a distance of four miles. It is very desirable that the attendance be full and prompt.

11 A. H. MITCHELL, P. E.

THE camp meeting at Sims' chapel, St. Stephen's circuit, Alabama Conference, will begin on Thursday night before the third Sunday in September. (11) W. H. MORRIS, P. C.

THE District Conference for Selma district will begin at eight o'clock P. M., with a sermon by Rev. G. F. Pills in Uniontown.

(1) J. W. RUSH.

THE time for holding the camp meeting at the Trenton camp ground, in the Trenton circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, embraces the third Sunday in September, commencing on Thursday night before. This meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan. Provision will be made for the preachers and their horses; also conveyance at Morton, on the twelfth of September, to convey the preachers to the camp ground. They are invited to attend this camp meeting. (4) H. A. SMILEY, Pastor.

THERE will be a camp meeting near Hickory station, Newton circuit, beginning on Thursday night, September 5, embracing the second Sunday. The ministers of Meridian and Brandon districts are heartily invited, and all others who can come. Conveyances for ministers will be provided from the pot to the camp ground.

4 ROBT. H. DELWEEN, P. C.

MAMRE CAMP GROUND is located on the Selma, Rome and Dalton railroad, three miles south of Randolph, in Prattville district Alabama Conference. The time for holding the Mamre camp meeting will embrace the third Sunday in September, commencing on Friday night before (27). J. B. ANDERSON, P. C.

EARLY PANSIES.

BY KATE HANSON.

Out of your face, sweet pansies,
Glad thoughts look unto me,
Thoughts for the coming summer
And all its revelry;
Its bounty of birds and blooming,
Its bounty of love and praise,
The waking and the dreaming,
The glory of its days.

The pleasure of your perfume,
O pansies, early blown,
A thought of quiet rapture
Across my day hath thrown!
Hath lifted me up higher
Toward heaven and the light,
Hath made the grace of goodness
More lovely to my sight.

Hath covered in the darkness
Of sins that come and go,
Hath wakened springs of gladness
Ye do a gift bestow
More tender to its meaning
Than any spoken word.
O dainty, winsome pansies,
Though like to you are stirred
Truth, love in untold measure,
Are beaming from each face:
To look upon you, pansies,
Is still to gain some grace.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, July 10.—A Chinaman to-day made application to Judge to become a citizen of the ited States, and the judge verbally ied the application under a de- ion of the United States Circuit rt of California in the case of Ah which was a test case.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—General ward's official report from Oregon ws that the Indians were routed pursued by our troops. Five isted men were wounded, and ally twenty horses killed. The my's loss in killed and wounded ficult to tell.

expressed belief that with the of the shipments of coin from ope, which are looked for during year, the gold premium would ually disappear before the time the Treasury Department ld be able to redeem legal tender s, and perhaps before Congress mbled in December.

herman said he had on hand in treasury $137,000,000 in actual coin, $121,000,000 of which had umulated since he became secre- y, for the special purpose of re- eming outstanding legal tender es. He said that the coin on hand mply sufficient for the purposes resumption, and that he would ue no further sales of bonds on t account.

COAL BLUFFS, July 11.—Trou- and tramps continues. Parties, ding about fifty each, boarded ight train on the Iowa Central road at Dillon last night, and the cago, Rock Island and Pacific morning, at Atlantic. Armed ds of citizens in both cases com- d them to leave the train, threat- g them with summary punish- t.

NEW YORK, July 12.—Dispatches Montreal, Canada, dated two state that when the Orange- came out of their hall they tried rm in procession, but experi great difficulty and confusion. y were surrounded by an im- mob. The military, with fixed nets, formed across the street divided the mob. The mayor's ff dashed among the Orange- and arrested several, whereupon Orangemen returned to their portly after the mayor entered asked the Orangemen if they prepared to submit to the prop- constituted authorities? He was ered: "Yes." He then forbid procession as illegal, and ordered rrest of the grand marshal and al others. The Orangemen then ded to adjourn.

LOUIS, July 12.—The weather ng the week was intensely hot. erous sunstrokes occurred, eight which were fatal.

CINCINNATI, July 12.—There were sunstrokes to-day, two of which e fatal.

NEW YORK, July 13.—Delegates the United States to the World's ference of the Young Men's istian Association, to be held at eva on the fifteenth of August, d this afternoon on the Ettiopia. party consisted of about fifty ons, of both sexes. They expect travel through England, France Scotland before going to Geneva

NEW YORK, July 14.—Yellow fever appeared at this port, there being mber of cases in the quarantine pital. Four patients were taken the steamer Niagaria, which ved here from Havana a few days o. One (a fireman) died yester- There are altogether about eight in the hospital. The health er says there is no cause for ap- ension.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 15.—A da Walla dispatch, relating to es' fight with the hostiles at the atilla reservation, says: The ps numbered 300 regulars. The t occurred about eight o'clock in morning, within a short distance eryn's station. The savages were ween 400 and 500. Getting his into position, Miles opened fire, the hostiles returned it without , neither side sustaining any y.

This continued without intermission until twelve o'clock, when the Indians attempted to charge Miles' line but were driven off, being unable to stand the fire from the howitzers. In the charge the Indians sustained considerable loss, those present estimating the dead at fifteen. Miles' casualties consist of two wounded—one in the arm and one in the leg.

Shortly after one o'clock the Indians fell back toward the mountains. This is the first time in this campaign that the hostiles have attempted to charge, and shows that they are driven to desperation.

During the whole of the fight they shot wild. Miles' object, in view of the overwhelming number against him, was to prevent the advance of the hostiles, and, if possible, hold them in check till reinforced. This he did, although his force was afoot and the savages well mounted.

During Friday the Indians completed the destruction of Cayouse station, which on the day previous they partly destroyed. It is feared Meacham's has met a similar fate. Among the interested spectators of Miles' fight were a large number of Umatillas, who took sides with neither party, but appeared to relish the sport.

NEW YORK, July 15.—A Norfolk dispatch says: The first white man whipped under the new law which has just taken effect in Virginia occurred at Hampton on Saturday. The sentence was executed by a negro constable. The party whipped was a sailor from Baltimore, who was convicted of stealing an anchor.

ST. LOUIS, July 15.—The heat is frightful. There were one hundred and fifty prostrations to-day. Between forty and fifty are fatal. Many persons were overcome in their homes and places of business. No signs of an abatement of the heat. Serious apprehensions are felt for the result.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, July 9.—The Daily Telegraph believes that the British flag was hoisted at Cyprus on Monday, by Lord John Hay, commander of the channel squadron, who had sealed orders to that effect.

LONDON, July 10.—Beaconsfield's coup has thrown into the shade all other topics, but it is yet too soon to judge what direction the current of public opinion here and on the Continent will take.

The Times' Berlin correspondent says that when the Anglo-Turkish convention was first announced there the English diplomacy enjoyed a prestige such as it had not enjoyed for a long time, but later some dissentient voices were heard. The compact, he says, is undoubtedly clever, but it is questioned whether in the long run it will redound to the honor and interest of England. Others still speak of the event with unqualified admiration.

The Vienna Presse says: "We cannot but hail with sincere satisfaction this victory, even without bloodshed, by English policy over the Eastern question, for the existence of Turkey, so frail when she herself is her sole support, will, under the energetic protection of England, be able to be maintained for long years."

BERLIN, July 11.—Hoedel was sentenced to be beheaded. His demeanor was insolent and defiant. He continued to smile even after sentence had been pronounced. Numerous witnesses swore to his socialistic principles and his threats against the Emperor.

The Emperor's physicians have issued another long statement in regard to his condition. They ascribe his majesty's relatively slow progress toward recovery to the great loss of blood and appetite, to the shock to his system and to mental depression.

His attainable degree of strength is not yet regained. His power of locomotion is small. His hands are helpless, and he cannot eat without assistance. The physicians, however, are confident of his recovery by the influence of time and exercise.

BERLIN, July 11.—The session of the Congress to-day lasted four hours and a quarter. Beaconsfield was absent. The reading of the treaty was completed. Only a few immaterial points are left for settlement, etc. Saturday. There will be no sitting on Friday, in order to allow time for preparation of the copies of the treaty.

An official statement announcing the conclusion of the Anglo-Turkish alliance is published in Constantinople to-day. The statement says: England has engaged to pay the Porte $750,000 yearly, whereas the present revenue of the Island of Cyprus is only $500,000 per annum.

The Congress yesterday resolved that urgent recommendations, virtually amounting to a command, should be made to the Sultan to institute an international finance commission to guard the rights of holders of Turkish bonds, and to regulate the finances.

HAVANA, July 12.—A decree has been promulgated concerning the election of deputies to represent the Island of Cuba in the Spanish Cortes. It provides that Cuba shall have a deputy for every forty thousand free inhabitants. The deputies must be Spaniards and laymen not under the age of twenty-five years.

Any Spaniard over twenty-five years of age, who pays annual taxes to the amount of five dollars and over, may be an elector. The governor general has the same power to settle all difficulties that may occur in the electoral question as the supreme government.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 12.—Mr. Baring, of the British legation here, took possession of the Island of Cyprus to-day in the name of Great Britain.

BERLIN, July 13.—The Congress held its last sitting to-day. All the plenipotentiaries and other members were present in full dress, as at the opening of the Congress. The proceedings commenced at half-past two and ended at four o'clock. The treaty was signed by all the plenipotentiaries alphabetically.

The secretaries attended previously at one o'clock in the afternoon to affix the plenipotentiaries' seals to each copy. After signature Andrassy warmly eulogized Bismarck's presidency. Bismarck thanked the plenipotentiaries for their indulgence. The proceedings terminated with a grand court dinner this evening at Whitehall palace.

VIENNA, July 13.—The Political Correspondence reports that Gortschakoff and Beaconsfield have drawn up a basis for future Anglo-Russian understanding.

BERLIN, July 14.—Bismarck, in closing the Congress on Saturday, declared that he did not hesitate to affirm that this Congress deserved well of Europe. The plenipotentiaries would have the consciousness of having, as far as was possible, restored an assured peace.

He entertained a firm hope that the European understanding would remain durable, and that the cordial relations established among the plenipotentiaries would consolidate good relations between their governments.

Bismarck incidentally remarked that his health was such that he had scarcely hoped to preside over the Congress until its conclusion.

Andrassy started for Vienna yesterday. Beaconsfield left for home to-day.

LONDON, July 15.—The press favorably comments on the results of the Congress, the Daily News alone excepted. The Times' leading editorial in summing up the labors of the Congress, says: "It has made changes which transform an empire; it has removed long-standing causes of discontent; it has pacified; we may hope, provinces which were torn by dissension and misrule, and it has placed barriers between rival forms of implacable bigotry; it has stopped many avenues of foreign intrigue, and if it has abridged the power of the Porte, it has given peace to Europe."

The Times' dispatch from Constantinople says: It is reported that a convention has been arranged between Austria and the Porte. The latter accepts the occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Austria engages to prevent any future alliance between Russia and Montenegro and Servia, and to preserve order in Bulgaria between Mussulmans and Christians, even, if necessary, during Russian occupation.

All accounts confirm the reports that opposition to Austrian occupation is giving way.

HAVANA, July 15.—The steamer City of New York arrived from Vera Cruz with the following intelligence:

CITY OF MEXICO, July 7.—McKenzie's invasion of Mexican soil caused considerable excitement. The people believe he acted upon a wide construction of his orders, and that the object was to raise a border war for annexation purposes.

There was no celebration on the fourth of July by Americans except a picnic for families.

The treasury is now said to be depleted; consequently much complaint is made by government employes and claimants. Fears of coming disturbances continue to create uneasiness and impair business.

It is reported that a famine prevails in Sonora and Sinaloa. At Mazatlan there was absolutely no flour, and people were emigrating.

THE COMING ECLIPSE.—Extensive preparations are being made to observe the total solar eclipse of July 29, and in a short time several well-equipped parties will leave Washington for the far West, where the phenomena, in its totality is visible. This is the first total solar eclipse that has been visible in this country since that of 1868, which received the attention of astronomers, and was fully observed. The eclipse of 1878 may be regarded as a return, or rather a completion, of the cycle of the eclipse of 1868. The dark shadow of the moon will first strike the earth in Siberia, and, crossing Behring's Straits, the line of totality—which will cover a space about one hundred and sixteen miles wide—will strike the United States at the northwest corner of Montana Territory, and, moving in a southwest direction, will sweep over the Yellowstone Park, through Wyoming Territory, Denver, Colorado, northern and eastern Texas, and, entering the Gulf of Mexico between New Orleans and Galveston, will cross the Islands of Cuba and San Domingo, and then leave the earth. As the line of totality remains so long in this country there will be abundant time to observe all the many curious and important phenomena connected with it. Much interest is attached to the eclipse by scientists, who look upon it as the means for determining many vexed questions.—Washington Post.

What is the only pane of which every one makes light? A window-pane.

The Will of the Late Pope.

The Popolo Romano has published an authentic copy of the last will and testament of Pope Pius the Ninth, of which the following are the principal portions:

Dispositions and last will of Mastai Ferretti, Pope Pius the Ninth, formerly Giovanni Maria of the Counts Mastai Ferretti of Senigallia, son of Girolamo.

TESTAMENTS.

Last Will.—In the name of the most Holy Trinity, I recommend my soul to thee, most Holy Trinity—Father, Son and Holy Ghost; three persons in one God. I implore most holy Mary, always immaculate, and her spouse, St. Joseph, the holy apostles, Peter and Paul, St. Michael the archangel, St. Louis Gonzaga, my holy guardian angels, and all my holy protectors and advocates to aid me in the great passage from time to eternity, as they have aided and protected me during the course of my life. My body, having become a corpse, shall be buried in the church of St. Lorenzo extra muros, and precisely under the little arch standing against the so-called gridiron (graticola) or stone on which may still be traced the marks caused by the martyrdom of the illustrious Levite. The cost of the monument shall not exceed four hundred crowns.

Upon the monument shall be sculptured a tiara with the keys; then an epigraph conceived in the following terms:

OSSA ET CINERES PII P. IX SUM. PONT. VIXIT AN. ..... IN PONTIFICATU AN. ..... ORATE PRO EO.

The coat of arms shall be a Death's head.

I leave my library to the Seminario-Romano-Pio. The smaller library, consisting in most part of ascetic books, I leave to the Convent of Passionists by me erected at the Scala Santa.

The sacred relics to the two Pinacoteces of the Vicariato and of Monsignor Sacristan, with the following modifications: The silver reliquary representing a small altar, inclosing the wood of the true cross, with other relics, I destine to the Vatican Basilica. To the Lateranense a great reliquary from Hungary, and which is in a black leather case. A reliquary representing by a little temple supported by three children, which contains the precious relic of the Holy Thorn, is destined for the Collegiate Church of St. Maria in Via Lata. A little temple with small columns of rock crystal, containing relics of St. Peter and St. Paul, to the Cathedral of Senigallia.

To the two Cathedrals of Spoleto and Imola, two reliquaries—to the first the wood of the true cross, supported by a silver trunk, with base of silver, the whole ornamented with diamonds; to the second a small urn, within which is a relic of St. Damasus.

To the Cathedral of Gaeta an ivory crucifix upon a black cross and base, which stands on the floor of the little upper chapel.

In the same place, and likewise standing on the floor, another great medal crucifix on a marble base, which I destine for the Cathedral of St. James of Chili.

To the two cardinals surrogated to the defunct Cardinal Antonelli, I leave a box set with brilliants to Cardinal Mertel, and a crucifix to Cardinal Simeoni—the crucifix upon a cross of metal. The crucifix and the two statuettes of the most holy Mary and of St. John are in ivory. It stands in the salon of the private library.

To Cardinal Monaco a picture hanging in the little upper room—the Madonna della Seggiola in enamel.

To his royal highness the Comte de Chambord, the Madonna called Del Destino (mosaic.)

To her highness the Duchess Dowager of Modena, Madonna (mosaic.)

In token of paternal benevolence, I leave to his majesty the King of Naples a group in silver representing the holy family.

To her highness the Princess of Thurn and Taxis the trunk of the cross in silver ornamented with diamonds, with two small angels having in their hands symbols of the passion, and containing a relic of the holy wood.

PIUS P. P. IX.

Where our road through life is rugged, it softens its asperities by quiet temper or forbearance, and amidst the sullen silence of the brooding tempest; whether a storm of the elements over us, or the more furious and destructive hurricane of man's bosom, it is most wonderful of what importance is this courteous urgency. It steals a sunbeam over the most gloomy parts of nature and society, and adds a ray to their brightest splendors. It is everywhere of inestimable price. Like the divine quality of mercy, it is twice blessed—It blesses him that gives and him that takes.

Giving to the poor increases the store.

Chinese Literature.*

If the immense mass of books piled up at the British Museum appalls the official mind and paralyzes the publication of a general catalogue, attempts have been made by the authorities to present the public with an index of some of the minor sections. There is an excellent catalogue of Hebrew books by the late and learned Zedner. Dr. Haas has compiled another catalogue of Sanscrit works, and now one of the vast and varied literature of the Celestial Empire has been completed by Prof. Douglas and issued by the trustees.

Till the last half century the language and literature of China were very imperfectly known in this country, and then only through the publications of foreign writers. It was not till the advent of the late Sir George Staunton in China, followed by that of Dr. Morrison, in 1807, that any serious studies into the subject had been made by English inquirers. Since then a host of missionaries and civilians has incessantly toiled at the task, while interpreters and consuls, forced to speak and obliged to read Chinese, have explored without cessation the different portions and recesses of the language and literature.

Emerging from an ideographic into a syllabic system, the written language stands apart from all others as to sound, but is constructed on principles offering some affinity to the Egyptian and Cuneiform scripts. It has consequently suffered the vicissitudes fated to pictorial writings. At a remote period one Tsang Kie invents the character, and knotted cords were used to refresh the memory or keep accounts, as among the Quipos of Peru. Some, indeed, of the earliest inscriptions on bronze vases of a sacrificial character are supposed to ascend to B. C. 1100, if not, indeed, to the time of fabulous antiquity. Part of the literature dates from the dynasty called Chow, or the third century B. C., but even the work of Confucius, an extract of the Leke, or "Book of Rites," is doubted, and the preservation of the writings of this sage, who lived about two centuries before, is due to the memory of his followers, who had learned his compositions by heart. A despot, about B. C. 221, endeavored to destroy all books, and this futile experiment to annihilate the thought of opposition was repeated B. C. 130, but the proscribed works or fragments of them were covered on walls, and memory again restored the loss. Five times in China the flames have devoured the bamboos, the silk and the paper of which the books were made, yet the ancient literature has survived. Paper was not invented till the fifth century A. D., and wood block printing in the tenth century, so that the earliest works were manuscripts, written with ink and a deer or goat's hair pencil. Neither manuscripts of the fifth nor printed works of the tenth are in Europe, if they have survived, and with a free press came the restrictive index. Long prior, indeed, Chinese librarians had catalogues of royal or imperial collections, one of which contained the respectable number of 18,010 works.

The immense quantity of Chinese literature is divided by the Chinese into four sections, comprising history, philosophy and the arts, poetry and polite literature; but their idea of literature excludes from its ranks the drama and romance. Five classical books hold the first rank in national estimation, and the "Yih King," the Book of Mystical Combinations, a mystical form of writing on divination, belongs to a fabulous age. The "Shu King," or the Book of History, descends from B. C. 2400 to B. C. 281, and the "She King," or Book of Songs and Odes, collected by Confucius, contains odes of an unappreciable antiquity. The rituals of Chinese morals and manners are assigned to B. C. 2000, but only one of these five classes, called the "Spring and Autumn Annals," is said to have been written by Confucius, and embraces the history of his native State for three centuries and a half, closing at B. C. 481. Four other classics, better known as the "Four Books," rank next in Chinese orthodoxy. They are mostly Confucian, and named the "Ta-heo," or Great Study, the "Chung Yung," or Invariable Mean, the "Lunyu," the "Miscellaneous Conversations," with which are allied the works of Mangtze or Menelus, who flourished in the fourth century A. D. These works are ethical and philosophical, and intimately connected with political morality, the principle being that the family, not the State, the individual, not the mass, is the point to which the eye of the statesman should be directed. The classics are the pole-star of Chinese literature, and round them revolve a host of commentators and expositors, the most important of these scholars being Choo-He, or Choofootze, who critically examined the classics and explained them according to his views; so that his comments are the usual companions of the texts. So numerous, indeed, are the works on the classics that a modern scholar is said to have collected 10,000 volumes in this branch of literature alone. The older books, in fact, are only intelligible through these later scholiasts; their style is so curt and their language so ambiguous that they require an Ellpus to convey to the mind these oracles of wisdom of a distant past. They have been translated and retranslated into European language—the last that have appeared being those by Prof. Legge, of Oxford. Besides the classical works, and in connection with the comments on them, are the dictionaries, of which there are, fortunately, many. They are arranged according to radicals, called also keys, or the determinative part of each character, or else according to final, not critical, sounds, and for poetical purposes in the order of tones, so as to form a kind of gradus. Without an extensive suite of dictionaries the European student can make little progress, and the one most in use, the "Kanghe-tzeiten" or, as it is called, the "Kanghe Dictionary," is quite inadequate for difficult points. The most extensive of these lexicons is the "Pei-wan-yun-foo," or Girdle of Literature, a general index to the principal authors, published in 1711, and usually bound in 110 thick volumes, a rare and valuable work, of which the museum possesses two copies, with the drawback that it cites passages, but does not explain their meaning. Dictionaries have been compiled for the last seventeen centuries in China, and kept pace with literary requirements.

Chinese dictionaries are difficult to consult and many characters hard to find, so that these lexicons cannot be placed in the same rank as those of the Aryan languages. The tonic dictionaries are more than usually intricate, while the numerous vulgar and incorrect forms of the characters abounding in the imprints of novels, plays, romances and minor works require the consultation of several to identify an obscure character or its more obscure meaning.

Histories abound, both dynastic and individual, official compilations, of course, partial, and others annalistic; for although speeches real or imaginary, are introduced, they are short, and pass on with rapid transition to events; while general histories of an extensive nature, with error, the usual vice of compendiums, abound and in the last century swarmed; but contemporary history is forbidden, or else passes into the Index, and the European student finds that historical novels are the best vehicles for the general features, and individual tales for the more minute traits of Chinese history. Biographies, family and dynastic, also exist, from which, however, the wicked are excluded. Tolerably acquainted with its own geography, China has produced many geographical works, provincial histories and general treatises. These are classified by sections, giving the old names of States, the cities and towns, streams and hills, products and local worthies; but their knowledge of foreign nations, which did not extend far beyond the frontiers, was greatly improved by the Jesuits. One of the last native works, called the "Hae-kwo-too-che," compiled by the celebrated Commissioner Lin, in 1840, endeavored to bring down the knowledge to the latest period. The constitution, laws and archæology have each their series of works, and treatises are, as in Europe, embodied in collections and encyclopedias. So have medical works, which show erroneous notions of anatomy, and a very limited surgery, and a pharmacy more singular than efficacious. The Chinese claim in this branch the priority of the invention of trepanning and the use of inoculation for 1,000 years. It was not, however, till European works had been translated, and that Dr. Hobson had published several works conveying to the Chinese the knowledge of European surgery and medicine, that any real progress was made, and that the Chinese made any serious advance in surgery, although the native practice is especially good for fevers. There are works on divination and geomancy, but they have less charm for the European mind than mediæval witchcraft. In the exact sciences, Chinese astronomy, geometry, mathematics, algebra and arithmetic are only interesting as illustrating the history of the development of Chinese notions. Correct ideas on the more abstruse branches have, indeed, been introduced by the Jesuits, and brought down to the present day by the missionaries; the swan pan, or calculating board, has been more praised than adopted into the systems of European tuition. Although not entirely deficient in works upon the arts, these are comparatively few, and the most interesting are those relating to music, which has a notation, the cultivation of tea, the raising of mulberries and silk-worms, and the manufacture of porcelain. The cultivation of shrubs and flowers has produced some treatises. The Herbal is descriptive and pharmaceutical, and there are monographs on individual animals and a few plants. Encyclopedic collections were commenced as early as the sixth century A. D., and a large one of the class was planned and carried out by Ching-tsoo, of the preceding dynasty, A. D. 1409. Nearly 3,000 literati were employed in compiling 22,877 chapters, some of which were afterward lost. But this was exceeded by the largest of these collections, called "The Imperial and Authentic Collection of Ancient and Modern Literature," printed about A. D. 1648, under the present dynasty. This work is in 6,109 volumes in 520 cases. Half of this monster production was printed from movable copper types, but the font was spoiled, and the Emperor Keen-lung returned in 1773 to his old wood blocks to complete the undertaking. One or two copies are saved, and the British Museum has secured one since the issue of the catalogue, and this literary rarity is already on its travels from Pekin to London.—London Times.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

CASSIE ADELE.

I am passing away, and life's closing day
Brings me nearer eternal rest;
And I look to go, from this world of woe,
To the mansions of the blest.

Lay, passing away, and this feeble clay
Shall soon return to dust
But I feel no fear, for my Savior's near
And to his love I'll trust.

I am passing over to the other shore,
But the waves I will not fear,
For Christ will guide me o'er the tide—
He speaks "Be of good cheer".

I shall soon be there in that haven fair,
O land of real glory!
Of the victor's palm, and the spirit's calm,
I have heard in sweetest story.

There are angels bright in robes of white,
Washed in that holy fountain,
As Jesus stood—ere he shed his blood—
Transfigured on the mountain.

Oh! that shining band, on the golden strand,
Are waiting there for me
And the throne of white, with the Lamb its light,
I soon, I soon shall see.

Oh! the glad, sweet song of the happy throng,
I'll sing when I reach my home;
My Savior's voice bids my heart rejoice—
"O Lamb of God, I come!"

Mansfield Female College.

MR EDITOR: It was my privilege to be present at the recent commencement of this college, closing another of its many years of usefulness. I noticed everything closely, mingled freely with the citizens and visitors, and am prepared to say that perhaps no one of its many past glorious commencements surpassed this one in any particular. I was impressed with the thoroughness of the training given to the pupils.

The home-like, quiet rule in the college, outside of school hours, is simply charming. It is the picture of a large, orderly, well-trained family circle.

I was pleased with the character of teachers employed. Beginning with our Rev. J. M. Brown, professor of languages, and including Miss Hill, of New York, Miss Bettie Scott, daughter of Rev. S. S. Scott, formerly of our Conference, and Miss Hattie Randel, daughter of Richmond Randel, of precious memory, all led by the clear-headed, well-poised president, Rev. Thomas Armstrong, and the college has a corps of instructors hard to excel anywhere.

The commencement sermon was from our young brother, Rev. T. J. Hough. An appropriate text (Psalms cxlv, 12, latter clause,) well presented, delighted the large audience. Our dear Dr. Thweat, to whose devotion, skill and energy the college owes its existence, now sorely afflicted and prematurely old, was present, listening, delighted, to the young preacher.

The college concerts on Monday and Tuesday nights were well arranged and finely executed, not only giving pleasure and instruction to the unusually large audiences, but also of great benefit to the young ladies themselves.

Wednesday (commencement day) came in bright, cool and beautiful. The people began to gather at an early hour. By nine A. M. the large concert hall was crowded. The platform was occupied by the board of managers, the faculty, special guests, the senior class, their parents and friends. The opening prayer was offered by Rev. Joel T. Daves. I cannot go into particulars. It is enough to say that the programme was well arranged and perfectly executed. Perhaps in all the history of this college she never sent forth a larger or more brilliant senior class. Time would fail me to speak particularly of each of this group of bright, lovely daughters, in number answering exactly to the "sacred nine." In their spotless robes they seemed indeed the embodiment of the pure and angelic. Miss May Armstrong, of Pleasant Hill, and Miss Ines Williams, of Mansfield, divided the honors. The one delivered the Latin salutatory, the other the valedictory. These were well written and well read.

President Armstrong's farewell address to the class was a splendid effort.

Mr. J. H. Shepherd, of Shreveport, followed the presentation of diplomas in a fine address. His theme, "The College," was well developed. The progress and power of college education was finely brought out.

All happily closed. All were well pleased. It was a grand day for the college. It was a grand occasion for Mansfield.

After a careful and prolonged examination into all matters pertaining to their office, the following paper was adopted by the board of managers:

Whereas, There being apparent to all unusual merit attaching to the general management of Mansfield Female College, and an honest thoroughness manifest in all departments of instruction; And whereas, In the large senior class there was most unusual brilliance and perfection, reflecting great credit upon the college; therefore,

Resolved, That we tender to President Armstrong our hearty thanks for his wisdom, discretion and earnest work in filling his responsible and delicate position.

Resolved, That we hereby tender to him assurances of our full sympathy, of our personal and official good will, as well as assurances that we will use all laudable means to maintain Mansfield Female College.

Members of the board present: Revs. John Pipes and Joel T. Daves, Maj. Baynon and Israel Brown.

I was glad to learn through the board that the college finances are in fine condition. The extensive repairs already made and now being made, including a new roof, are all either paid for or the funds in hand to meet the bills as they fall due.

The college does not only not owe one cent, but by its charter cannot contract debt.

Mansfield Female College is on a high plane. It is our college. It belongs to the Conference. Let the church rally to its support.

Little Things.

Doubtless man never makes a greater mistake than when he supposes that the almost innumerable catalogue of every-day delinquencies in duty, improprieties in behavior, and in many instances actual transgressions of God's law, will be passed over by the Supreme Judge, as by us, as matters of too little importance to require attention or justify investigation. But when we remember that a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without the knowledge of God, and that sins and virtues alike are little or great only in comparison, and when beheld by a finite observer, these every day sins and little shortcomings will appear in quite a different light, and, instead of being looked upon with indifference and carelessness, they will appear as characters of momentous weight and importance.

Among the many other dangers attendant upon indulgences in what are called little sins is the fact that they are in their nature progressive. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump." A little aperture in a dam confining water, through which water may pass, will, if let alone, increase so rapidly as in a short time to overflow the neighboring country, and perhaps spread devastation and ruin over all in its course; and an evil temper unrestrained, or a little sin indulged in with impunity, will in a short time grow to so alarming an extent as to take up almost the whole of our time, and darken almost the whole of our better natures. This is the more to be deprecated when we remember that frequent indulgences in sin deaden the sensibilities of man's nature, and that the further he goes in sin the further he is from being aware of the imminence of his danger. The commission of a crime now may give him less pain of conscience than the omission of a small duty would once have done. Again, the greater portion of our lives is made up of little things, and by indulging in sins upon small occasions we misuse opportunities given us for practicing little virtues, and in consequence most of our lives is devoted to sin. When we look back upon the events of a year at its close, how few of them will appear worthy a place of prominence! How few of its days brought with them either extraordinary joys or sorrows! Yet each one had its proportionate share of each, and quite enough for the time. Indeed these little joys, little sorrows, little trials and little sins seem so only because we know of some of more importance and greater prominence. A moment of time compared to a year seems little—next to nothing—yet in it sometimes are transacted tragedies that shake the whole world; and, again, it is a necessary component part of the grand stretch of eternity itself. Take it away and there is a void, small as it may seem, that the world cannot fill.

And, again, a single word of kindness spoken or one small favor bestowed may be used as an instrument in the hands of God in winning some soul to Christ. Oh, may God send the day when the church and the world may become afraid of little sins, may appreciate little blessings, and be zealous in practicing little virtues.

Vicksburg District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The District Conference of the Vicksburg district was held at Natchez, June 27, 28 and 29, Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt in the chair.

The success of the work upon the different circuits and stations has been various. In some charges the church is growing, and the interest in the several religious exercises maintained and quickened; but in many others there has been a sad want of spirituality and religious zeal among the members.

The Sunday schools are in a healthful condition and progressive.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The Methodist Episcopal Church South has ever felt a deep and abiding interest in the salvation of the colored people living among us; since the great commission of our blessed Master embraces them alike with all others; and deploring, as we do, the estrangement that has existed for some time between the races, in a matter so vital to the well-being of us all—one of the bitterest fruits of civil war—and since a way seems to be opening in the willingness of the colored people to receive such spiritual aid as we can give them; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge upon our pastors, as far as practicable, to preach to them the word of life, and render them all needed aid and counsel, and that our laity be requested to aid them in Sunday school instruction in every possible way.

Resolved, That this action of the District Conference be published in every suitable way to all the colored people within our bounds, and be published also to our own people and in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

FINANCIAL SYSTEM.

There is a general lack of effective system throughout the district, and the majority of the circuits are considerably in arrears in consequence. Some churches use the envelope system to advantage, but the majority make assessments on the members, and the amount is paid monthly and quarterly.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That hereafter, when pastors or lay representatives from any cause fail to attend the annual session of the District Conference, they be required to send up a full report of their charges, embracing all the disciplinary questions, and a failure to do so shall be a sufficient ground of complaint against such pastors before the ensuing Annual Conference.

One parsonage has been purchased and one built during the year. Natchez station and several circuits have none. The church buildings are generally in a good state of preservation.

Port Gibson was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

The following were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: Dr. C. K. Marshall, G. W. Humphreys, G. J. Bahn and J. D. S. Davenport. Alternates—T. L. Melleu and E. S. Drake.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Brookhaven District Conference, Mississippi Conference, was held in Brookhaven, June 20 and 22, 1878. The Conference was opened by Dr. W. E. M. Lindsey, P. E. Bishop McTyeire arrived on the evening train and presided to the close.

The spiritual state of the church was reported as in a very fair condition. Infant baptism, the Lord's Supper, Church Conferences and prayer meetings are very well attended to.

Financial matters, we are sorry to say, were reported in a very bad condition.

The Sabbath school interests of the district are in a very flourishing condition using our own literature almost exclusively.

One thing of importance I must not fail to mention. There is a prospect of having several new parsonages at an early date.

The educational facilities of our district are excellent. We have within our bounds one of the leading female colleges in the South—Whitworth College, presided over by that eminent and successful teacher, Rev. H. F. Johnson. The Conference had the pleasure of attending part of the closing exercises, and to see its thoroughness was our delight. Female education here is raised to a very high standard. Twenty-five young ladies composed the graduating class this session. This school is patronized by many of the Southern States.

The following were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: Dr. J. Sample, R. C. T. S. Hilliard, J. F. Enoch and B. H. Catching. Alternates—J. H. Thompson, Wills Barnes and D. McRee.

Our next Conference will be in Hazlehurst. You are cordially invited to attend.

B. H. CATCHING, Sec.

WINONA DISTRICT CONFERENCE. Mr. Editor: The District Conference for Winona district, North Mississippi Conference, was held at Vaiden, commencing June 21, 1878, Bishop J. C. Keener presiding.

I suppose the general condition of the district will compare favorably with other districts. In the answers to the direct and pointed questions put to the preachers in charge by the Bishop, the fact was developed that family worship and class meetings are alarmingly neglected by the membership of our church.

When we left Vaiden I think we all felt that the Bishop had done us good by his constant admonitions and exhortations. When he asked one of the preachers in regard to his collection for missions, he said: "I have done nothing, Bishop; but you have stirred me up on this subject; you have stirred me up on several subjects; in fact you have stirred us all up generally." The Bishop urged upon the Conference the great importance of sustaining our district school, located at Black Hawk, which is now in a prosperous condition, under the management of E. W. Tarrant, A. B.

The next District Conference is to be held at Durant.

The following were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference, viz.: James B. Streater, G. E. Critz, W. P. Ratcliff and J. T. Lockhart. Alternates—O. J. Moore and Rev. Stephen Johnson.

JAMES B. STREATER, Sec.

MR. EDITOR: The Meridian District Conference met at Shuhuta, Miss., at the appointed time. Bishop McTyeire was with us. It passed off, I suppose, about as the average District Conferences. It was very interesting to us, but of no special interest, I suppose, to the great majority of your readers, save in this particular: that it was protracted, resulting in much good to our membership, giving us nine accessions and seven or eight conversions. We are thankful.

T. S. WEST.

SHUHUTA, Miss., July 3, 1878.

Rev. W. H. Morris, writing July 1, says that the work of the Lord is going on in St. Stephen's circuit, Alabama Conference. We have had no extensive revivals nor any protracted meetings this year, but have had some accessions to the church, and are pushing forward our work under our every-day banner with encouraging results.

The Missionary Spirit in Seashore District.

MR. EDITOR: We are happy to inform the members of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the deep interest the churches in the Seashore district are taking in our missionary enterprises. If preachers want their families supported, let them work to educate the people whom they serve in the missionary spirit. It has a wonderful reflex influence. A church that will help our missionary cause will support their preacher. We have one brother in the field whom we are trying to support without the aid of the Conference collections. The brethren are working for us. The preachers in the cotton-growing districts should be very diligent, or the "gopher" district will report more money. There is a society in Columbia for aiding in the support of Rev. F. D. Villegas, of the city of Mexico. The society has about sixty members, who pay five cents per month each. Bro. Villegas was my room-mate at the university, and the love I have for him will ever make me diligent in collecting for his support. I suggest to the dear brethren of the Mississippi Conference that we make glad the heart of Bishop Keener by supporting the Rev. F. D. Villegas besides our regular collections. We can do it. Bro. Galloway's letter on "specialty" in giving should be read by every minister. Columbia circuit has already paid to the missionary cause nearly as much as it paid their pastor a few years ago; and yet there is room.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."—Revelation xiv, 6. Let members, by their liberality, make the Methodist Church that "angel."

Another Death.

MR. EDITOR: I see announced in the ADVOCATE of May 2 the death of a prayer meeting. It becomes our painful duty to announce the death of the Sunday school in Sardis. Unlike the little prayer meeting, the health of this Sunday school was thought to be good. It was therefore committed to the care of a good woman; but unfortunately the health of the good woman failed, and ere the community was aware of it the Sunday school expired—that, too, where there were stewards, class-leaders and two local preachers, any one of whom, by just a little care, might have saved its life. Its remains have been turned over to Calvinism.

A MOURNER.

A little boy asked his mother to talk to him, and say something funny. "How can I," she asked; "don't you see I am busy baking these pies?" "Well, you might say: 'Charlie, won't you have a pie?' That would be funny for you."

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

REV. P. L. MARTIN, son of Shadrach and Nancy Martin, was born in Pike county, Ga., December 13, 1811, and died very suddenly in Clarke county, Ala., April 21, 1878, aged sixty six years, four months and eight days.

Shadrach Martin moved to Alabama in 1816, and settled in Dallas county. In 1820 he moved to Perry county, where the subject of this notice was reared, educated and converted. He was married to Miss Mary Grace, a lady of eminent piety, November 29, 1836. In 1850 he moved to Clarke county, where he has lived ever since, except when about the Master's business in other fields of labor. He was converted at fifteen years of age, at Poplar Springs church, in Perry county. He was licensed to exhort by Rev. E. Ellis in 1854, and to preach by the Quarterly Conference of Grove Hill circuit, at Union church, in 1856. He was ordained a deacon at Enterprise, Miss., by Bishop Wightman, in 1866, and an elder at Mobile, by Bishop Pierce, in 1871. He was employed as preacher in charge of a part of Grove Hill circuit, Alabama Conference, in 1864; on the Coffeeville mission in 1867 and 1868, and on the Mount Pleasant circuit in 1870, 1871 and 1872. The above facts give but the dull outlines of a most remarkable life. In all the relations of life he was faithful, and as an officer of the church, whether steward, class leader, local preacher or pastor, he did the work committed to him with a zeal that is unusual. Bro. Martin was a Christian. He knew and loved God. He had a rich experience in divine things. He did not only believe that it was his privilege to be holy, but he groaned to be made perfect in this life; and his constant testimony in class meetings and love-feast was: "I am, through grace, going on to perfection."

As a preacher he was scriptural and earnest. He was a very humble man, esteeming others better than himself. He always preferred to hear his brethren than to preach himself, and no one ever preached to a more attentive or appreciative listener. His life was not what the world would call a success. He was not rich, nor learned, nor eloquent. Like his Master, he had no form nor comeliness, and there was no beauty that the world should desire him. Yet he was rich in faith, learned in spiritual knowledge, and eloquent as he reflected the image of the Savior; and there was a beauty and grandeur about his whole life and character that my poor pen is unable to describe.

On Sunday, the twenty-first of April, he preached at Union church (where, twenty-two years ago, he was licensed to preach from the text, "Ye must be born again," with more than usual liberty and power. He was taken violently ill immediately after service, was taken to the house of a friend, and in the short space of thirty minutes after he closed his sermon he was dead. God said that day: "Call the laborer and give him his hire;" and the laborer heard the call, was ready, and calmly folded his hands upon his breast, closed his eyes and entered into rest. His wife, one daughter and one son survive him. The Lord be with them and comfort them.

W.

CHARLES LUTHER BIBERON departed this life on Tuesday, May 28, 1878, aged twenty-seven years, nine months and twenty-six days. He made application for membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Bluff Range April 7, and was received, according to the disciplinary form, May 12, 1878, having thus been an actual member only sixteen days.

He was a most dutiful son, obedient and loving to his mother, ever delighting to help her in every way he could, seeking to make her happy. Our brother was the kindest, the best of friends. Self-sacrificing, willing and ready to do a service for another whenever the opportunity offered, he abounded in kindly acts toward his fellow-men. His help was always valuable, for he was competent and apt about most everything; and where anything artistic and tasteful was required to be done he was sure to be the one chosen to do it.

Bro. Biberon was a model in his duties to God and the church. In earliest years his mother taught him to pray morning and night, and this habit he always rightly observed. Even before he made confession of Christ he was a constant attendant at church, reverencing the religion of Jesus above all else. After he became a church member he seemed to take special delight in the services of the sanctuary. His habit was always to speak for Christ in the class-room, and he never refused to pray when asked. He prayed much and most beautifully during the last days of his sickness. His only regret in dying was that he was so young. Having, as he expressed it, just learned how really to live, his past years having been, as he considered, all misspent, he did want to live for the glory of God, for the Master's service and for the good of the souls of men. Nevertheless, so thoroughly a child of God was he that he unmurmuringly submitted to the will of his heavenly Father. His trust in Jesus was firm to the last. His life, though a brief one, by reason of the Christ in it, was a positive and eternal success. Sleeping in Jesus, he shall have "part in the first resurrection."

JOHN T. SAWYER.

TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF EMMA M'CAIN, wife of H. C. Walker, who died in Montgomery, La., on Tuesday, June 11, 1878.

"Life is the triumph of our moulding clay;
Death, of the spirit infinite, divine!"

Honored, beloved and mourned by many kind and cherished friends, our gentle Emma has passed away. She was one in whom the heart of her husband trusted, whose filial affection gladdened her parents' old age, whose tender solicitude made the welfare of her little ones a crowning joy, and whose sympathetic nature and loving min-istrations endeared her to relatives and friends. For her death possessed no terror. Lighted by love divine, and fed by grace, the taper of her faith burned brightly, and in its hallowed light she saw the coming change—the longing soul's welcome release from the shackles of mortality. With smiling lips she bade farewell to life, and entered with unfaltering steps the portals of the dread estate, from whence to this sad earth there is no return. Her name will revive past images of pleasant scenes and happy hours; yet the soft pain of its sad memories brings to the hearts that have loved and lost a chill sense of despair, for there is no longer heard the sweet response, though they breathed never so tenderly, but over the dark waves of doubt and distrust, and the children of affliction, like a holy chime from the great beyond, steals the blessed consolation: "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you."

DIED, near Magnolia, Miss., on the thirteenth of May, 1878, ELIZA PREWETT, wife of Smiley Prewett, and daughter of Mrs. A. J. Vaughn, in the [illegible] second year of her age. Sister Betty, as she was familiarly called, was the twin sister of Polly Ann, who died nearly four years before Betty. They were brought up by a pious mother, and in their fifteenth year they joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and at the same time, and both continued in the church until their death. Sister Betty was married to Smiley Prewett in the year 1858, with whom she had seven children, four of whom has died. Six still live to mourn the loss of their devoted mother.

Although she was a member of the church for seventeen years, she made no profession of conversion; yet in her daily walk and the spirit in which she met her many sore trials, which were sometimes severe, there were evidences of a change in the heart. Although confined for a great while before her death, she never expressed herself willing to die until the night before her death, when she said she was ready to lay down and go home to rest, repeating this request several times and laying a great deal of stress on the words rest forever. She then commended her little ones to the care of their heavenly Father, praying him to be with and save them, and without a struggle or a groan breathed her last. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors."

J. H. WILSON.

M. A. P. WATSON, daughter of Isaac Wells, Jr., and Sarah Wells, was born in Holmes county, Miss., April [illegible], and died April 20, 1878, in Yazoo county, Miss. Her grandfather, Isaac Wells, Sr., her uncle, Samuel Wells, were pioneer preachers, and her parents Christians. It is therefore not surprising that she was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at the early age of thirteen years. She was married to Rev. D. L. Watson in 1858, and was a true wife and mother, devout Christian, of rare traits of Christian patience, energy and devotion. Her husband has been afflicted with long disease, and for years unable to assist in supporting the family; while night and day she toiled with mind and hoe in the field, with her little ones around her, never allowing her aged and afflicted husband to hear a word of complaint from her, or to feel himself a burden. But she was not free from the struggle. Her nervous system, strung to its utmost tension, snapped at last, and she fell a martyr to her devotion to husband and children. But the summons came not as a surprise, and she passed through the dark shadow of a death, commending her little ones to the care of the God she had learned to serve and to trust. "Sweet be their rest there."

JOHN WILLIAMS was born in Franklin parish, La., July [illegible], 1827, married to Miss Hannah Barden, May [illegible], 1858. She died March 25, 1859, he married again, February 23, 1860, to Miss Betty Roberts. This wife died March 4, 1866, leaving an infant daughter. He married again December 22, 1867, to Miss Freelove Riley, a daughter of the late Rev. Riley, a local preacher of Catahoula, La. This wife and her five children survive him. Bro. Williams died January 2, 1878. He joined the Methodist Church in [illegible], and was an example of piety, love and of zeal for the church until the last moment of the time-telling called him from the church. It was my privilege to be with him on the day of his death. I found him standing in his lot at the end of the year. "He was a faithful man, and feared God above many." He died in peace.

B. F. ALEXANDER.

DANIEL P. EATON was born December 22, 1822, in the city of Savannah, Ga., where he lived until twenty-one years of age. He then spent fifteen years as a pilot on steamboats and railroads. In 1858 he died in the western portion of Franklin parish, La., where he spent the remainder of his life, and where he died November 1877. His last illness was of long continuance, and his sufferings were great. He was married November 21, 1856, to Miss Martha Williams, of Franklin parish, La. He joined the Methodist Church in the year 1859, obtained a most satisfactory assurance of forgiveness of his sins at a prayer meeting held in his own house, by John Watson and H. Slaughter, on the twenty-second day of October, 1877. His confidence and his personal comfort continued steady and strong to the close of his life. He died in full hope and charity.

B. F. ALEXANDER.

MRS. F. C. JONES, daughter of Martin and Rebecca Malden, was born in Russell county, Ala., and died at the residence of Rev. Dr. David, in Lee county, Ala., June 5, 1878, aged thirty years.

In February, 1868, she was married to Henry C. Jones, and was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1871. For nearly two years she was a great sufferer, but died in great peace. She talked much to her husband and friends, and said she was ready and wanted to die. Every one who knew her will doubt that she is in heaven. She faithfully filled all the relations of life. As a wife she was devoted, as a mother all that could be asked. It was refreshing to hear her words of hope and confidence as she drew near death. No doubts, no fears hung over the future—all was bright. She leaves a husband and two children—two children darling, and cradled her.

AWAY WITH HIM.

Acts 21..36.

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

That which he dreaded has come to pass!
He looks abroad on the angry mass,
On the passionate faces, and flashing eyes
The people are shouting their hungry cries—
They will have his life, they will beat him down,
They will give the apostle the martyr's crown.

But Paul stands bravely and does not fear
As the lying accusers are pressing near,
His heart is kept in a deep repose
As his body shrinks from the cruel blows;
The Lord is with him; he makes him strong
Who gave him in pain in a midnight song.

The yells are increasing: "Away with him!"
They hasten him up the staircase dim;
But he waits a moment. The cry they raise
Makes him think of the former days,
When they hunted the Master he loved away,
With the same wild cry which they raised to-day.

Though he suffers! Paul's face is bright,
For the memory brings him a happy light;
With undaunted courage he sees the crowd,
He does not care for the voices loud;
Facing his hand; he will give them yet
Some of him they will not forget.

Wonderful Master! A thought of thee
Will put the children where'er they be,
Will take thy words to our hearts to-day;
Bring a lighter and pleasant way.
Any sorrow should come thou will make us strong,
Though art with us the whole life long.

The Frozen Chalice.

The following incident, communicated to Sunday at Home by a clergyman who in early life was a priest of the Church of Rome, gives a striking example of the absurdity of the doctrine of transubstantiation:

I received priest's orders from Monseigneur Bartigne, then Roman Catholic Bishop of Montreal. Monseigneur Bourgette was then professor of theology, vicar general, bishop's assistant and the "right hand man" and successor of Bishop Bartigne. We are both going by their rest de mortuis nisi bonum. If my thoughts, worshipful me," Sainte Reine," kneeling before the consecrated in the Ciborium, reading breviary and the Lives of the Saints, long and silent meditations, ignoring all knowledge save that of Jesus and Baithe's Theology—if these a Christian's qualifications preparation for heaven, Bishops Bartigne and Bourgette have not detained long in purgatory which they had talked and planned during my four years' residence in their seminary.

My first curacy, after receiving priest's orders, was in the parish of St. Jacques, about thirty miles north of Montreal. The curé or parish priest was an aged, simple minded man, chiefly known by the sobriquet, "Le bon homme Paré." He could read his breviary, read mass and hear confessions, but he could not preach, though when his wrath was roused on account of scandal in the parish he could scold and pour forth a torrent of words. I had to attend on Sundays in the month a town called Rawdon, consisting principally of Irish, some distance from St. Jacques. I preached at St. Jacques in French, and two other Sundays I used to preached in Irish at Rawdon. Well, now for the deeply-remembered event of my early life. It was Christmas morning, when the ground to the depth of five or six feet, and when the frost was so intense that no living being could bear it for many minutes without being frozen to death, unless well covered or sheltered from the effects. I was required to attend in the chapel of Rawdon, and read mass for the Rawdon congregation. I arrived at eleven o'clock with my assistant or clerk, a young lad from St. Jacques.

The chapel was already half filled with the Irish who came to hear mass. I commenced immediately and proceeded as rapidly as I could, for I felt my hands benumbed, and my nose was far advanced in the process of being frost bitten. I heard the footsteps of some who were making their escape. The little stove had not the least perceptible effect on the atmosphere within the chapel; the clerk was fidgety and groaning audibly; I hurried on. It was a matter of life or death. I reached the communion service in the Missal, which was two-thirds of the ground passed. I consecrated the bread and wine; I consumed the bread. I had done after that, I took in hand the chalice, pronounced the words of consecration, raised it to my lips—O horror of horrors, not a drop came out. It was wine when I poured into the chalice, and now it was ice.

I paused and considered a moment; happy thought occurred to me. I must heat again, and hold it up as it burning it to the last drop, for I could safely do so, for not a drop touched my lips. I laid down the chalice, and wiped it with the linen cloth as usual, and covered it. I finished the few remaining prayers, hastened from the altar, flung aside my vestments, seized the chalice, and ran away with it to the little passage attached to the chapel, opened a box and put it into that box under lock and key, lest my clerk should discover the state of affairs. This I did with most laudable desire to keep the secret, for the clerk surely would publish it, and many of the elderly and light-headed of the parishioners of St. Jacques, who never went to mass nor to confession, and laughed at the "bon homme Paré," would be delighted to hear of it, and would laugh by the hour at the absurdity of my position and the difficulty of the problem to be solved in connection with it.

We had to pass the Christmas incognito; few dared to venture out. A dog, left outside while the family were at dinner, was found frozen and dead at the door, after the door was opened to look for him.

I sent the clerk on the following morning to fetch the horse and sledge, or cabriole, from the yard of our next neighbor; and while he was absent and thus engaged I opened the box and took from it the chalice. I laid it on the stove a few minutes, and with a knife succeeded in freeing the lump of ice from the sides of the chalice, and finally held it in my hand, a solid, senseless, lifeless, frozen mass. I had knelt down before it in the chapel yesterday and worshiped it; should I worship it now? It was the same. No corruption had set in; it had none of the "impedimenta" mentioned in the Roman "Missal," or mass-book. Frost is not mentioned as one of them. I shall never forget, to the last hour of my life, all I felt during the brief space that I held that lump of ice in my hands, which I could hurl along the floor like a stone. It was hard, cold and lifeless.

The Scandinavians worshiped their frost-god, who laid his mighty arms on the sea and the rivers, and composed them to rest for many months in the year; but they never worshiped the ice itself; and there I was, in duty bound, according to my church, to worship this lump of ice, which was "truly, really and substantially the body and blood, together with the soul and divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ!" What a degrading conception of him who is now at the right of his Father, filling the courts above with light and glory.

I did not then feel all the absurdity and impiety of the doctrine of transubstantiation. It is evident to every one not blinded by ignorance and prejudice that our Lord's words, "This is my body," were merely figurative, as when he said, "I am the door," or "I am the true vine." According to the doctrine of transubstantiation, the same body of Christ when he spoke these words was alive and dead at the same time, and may now be in ten thousand places at the same time. The knowledge of the truth on this, as on other subjects, came after I had learned to search the Scriptures for myself, and to know my Savior as present, not materially to touch and sight, but spiritually to faith and love. But the superstitious belief in which I had been trained received a rude shock while I held that lump of ice in my hand. While I was pondering the matter the horse and cabriole came to the door. I hastened to put it out of the way; so that it was never heard of afterward. I shall never forget that scene, and the impression made on me by it will never be effaced.

Letting Alone.

As I look around me, it seems to me that there are many who would be all the better for a little more neglect, in one sense or another—who are really suffering for lack of it. Are we not all suffering in a measure from the persistency of authors? If they would but cease from us now and then, and leave us alone! Books are too numerous; they come upon us too rapidly. No sooner have we got through one book on a certain subject, and begun to think about and endeavor to digest it, than a fresh book, on quite a different subject, is put into our hands and claims attention. How we are pestered with magazine articles, admirably written, on all sorts of subjects! No wonder that so few minds, comparatively, are quick and lively; they are smothered beneath ever multiplying folds of literature. Our only hope of deliverance lies in the creation and maintenance of a strong, stern resolve not to read what everybody says you ought to read; and to be able to say "No" unflinchingly when asked whether you have not read so and so.

Then it strikes me again that children nowadays are not half enough let alone—not half so much as they used to be—in relation to their occupations and amusements, and with more or less evil results. It is not only that we are too constantly essaying to instruct and edify them, too constantly pouring facts into them, to admit of a proportionate growth of ideas—forgetting that a child needs some neglect to enable him to learn—but we are mostly too busy and zealous in seeking to amuse them and find occupation for them. We buy them too many toys, we are too fearful that they should be dull and lonely, we follow them up too closely, and the consequence is they have no leisure for wandering in their own ideal world, their own fairy-land. They don't want you to be always trying to occupy and amuse them—not they. They have much to do that you know not of; and you by your fussy interference prevent their due enjoyment of that meat. The Lord has made them great dreamers, to be fed and nourished by dreaming, and they want to be alone more, that they may dream.

Further, one cannot help wishing that those poor people could be let alone, a little whose circumstances seem to offer such useful and important lessons for them—lessons which well-meaning neighbors and pious friends beg to put out to them and press upon them, and of ten found listening to point on and press. If these could refrain sometimes from saying, "Well, now, let this teach you," or, "Let this be a warning to you," perhaps the teaching would be really better learned than it is; and the warning be more vividly seen and felt. The probability is that in most instances the man whose circumstances are peculiarly charged with moral instruction and admonition does not need to be reminded of it; probably he sees and hears the message to him as clearly as we do, and it may be that when he is beginning in secret to feel and respond to it, our voluble insistence on it, however graciously intended, will only serve to arrest or divert the impressions which it has begun to make. There may be something in our tone and manner just calculated to mar it. It is wiser often to leave the circumstances to speak for themselves, while we hold our peace. Jesus Christ did this continually. There were times, of course, when he took the opportunity to say something, as when he said to the restored paralytic: "Go and sin no more, lest a worse thing come to thee;" but many were the times when he appears to have refrained from uttering a word, as when he raised the widow of Nain's son and gave him back alive into her arms. What an opportunity for saying something useful and impressive! Yet he appears to have gone away in silence, leaving the event to work its own work in the heart of the mother and her son.

Once more, how much better sometimes men would work, how much more finely execute and achieve, were they blessed with the blessing of neglect. They are impeded and disturbed, occasionally, perhaps, deteriorated in a measure, by the attention which their doings draw upon them, by the favor or applause they bring. It helps to render them self-conscious, to impair their freshness and simplicity, and in place of their first beautiful spontaneity comes labored effort, not without some little affectation, it may be. Hence the frequently-felt decline, the frequently-felt spice of mannerism in the second book of an author whose first book has set him on high and brought him fame.

Words of Cheer from Happy Lives.

"I feel as if the winding-up were coming soon," wrote Norman McLeod to a friend, when, approaching his sixtieth year, he felt he could no longer endure the toils to which he had been used. He wrote in his journal:

"My life has been to me a mystery of love. I know that God's education of each man is in perfect righteousness. I know that the best on earth have been the greatest sufferers, because they were the best, and, like gold, could stand the fire and be purified by it. I know this, and a great deal more, and yet the mercy of God to me is such a mystery that I have been tempted to think I was utterly unworthy of suffering. I may be unable to stand suffering. I do not know. But I lay myself at thy feet and say: 'Not that I am prepared, but that thou art good and wise, and will prepare me.'"

A few hours before his death, after days of severe pain, he said to his wife:

"I believe I will get better, but I wish you to record, for my good and for our good hereafter, that in this hurricane I have had deep thoughts of God. I feel as if he said: 'We know one another. I love you. I forgive you. I put my hands around you.' I have had constant joy, and the happy thought continually whispered: 'Thou art with me.'"

Mary Somerville, in the last days of her long life, took a bright interest in all that was going on, in affairs public and private. At ninety-two she regretted that she should not live to know the result of the expedition to determine the currents of the ocean, the distance of the earth from the sun occasioned by the transits of Venus, and the success of Dr. Livingstone's last expedition. The latest entry in her diary is this:

"The Blue Peter has been long flying at my foremast, and now I must soon expect the signal for sailing. It is a solemn voyage, but it does not disturb my tranquillity. Deeply sensible of my unworthiness, and profoundly grateful for the innumerable blessings I have received, I trust in the infinite mercy of my almighty Creator. I have every reason to be thankful that my intellect is still unimpaired; and although my strength is weakness, my daughters support my tottering steps, and by incessant care and help make the infirmities of age so light to me that I am perfectly happy."

World-Weary.

Society is full of people who know that their lives are frivolous and unsatisfying. It chafes them to feel that they are the victims of the great world-show, whirled along in it, whithersoever it listeth, with no opportunity for a deeper culture, no time of vitality left for the discipline of the soul, for coming into fellowship with the great minds of the race, for communing with what is noblest and best in human thought; no time left for walking with Christ in the lowly and obscure paths of charity, for letting their spirits lie still, that they may be put in tune, purified, calmed and rested in the arms of God.

Persons thus ensnared by their earthly and selfish cares may well look back and sigh for the advantages of other days. They know that there was much more of reality and noble truth in their lives then than now. They were nearer to Nature, and to all that gives largeness and strength of soul. Well may they envy the obscure Christian, unvexed with trifling cares, whose conversation is in heaven, who walks daily with God, and amid those truths and thoughts which are the glorious essence of things.

How often, weary and empty of soul in this world-pageant, men and women would be glad to flee out of it as Moses fled from Pharaoh's court to Midian. Better to keep the sheep of Jethro, if he might thus come unto Horeb, the mount of God, than to bask amid royal pleasures which are a weariness and pain. Better to flee into the wilderness, and sit under a juniper tree, fed by ravens and drinking from the brook, than the oppressed vine-yardies which are but vanity and vexation of spirit.

It was recorded of Jairus and scribe, and rabbi and pope, and life they so proudly led, but to the shepherds who watched their flocks by night, that the angel of the Lord appeared. To them and to the wise men in the East, eternity coming with the years, was it first made known that a Savior had been born.

Not amid the hurry of Judea's home, but while he lay alone in his forty years' journey, were to Moses eternal counsels revealed to Israel.

There must be more or sublimity in our modern lives, less of earthly engrossment, and more of high spiritual inspiration, if we would save ourselves from becoming the automatons of the hour.

These longer days will give you time to mind your own business.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Primitive Methodist connection reports a gain of 2,000 members during the past year.

—A church is about to be erected at Olney, England, as a memorial to the poet Cowper. It will cost $10,000.

—A member of the Church of Scotland offered $5,000 to begin a mission in Ichang, China. A minister and three colporteurs have already sailed.

—The Southern Methodist Church has in Texas, besides Germans, 108 itinerants, 755 local preachers, 76,509 members and 23,277 Sunday school scholars.

—The Pope in his coronation speech made no allusion to the late Pius the Ninth, although Cardinal Dipetro, in addressing the pontiff, had been eloquent in praise of the deceased Pope. The omission could not, therefore, be accidental, and has been variously commented upon.

—From the seventh "Evangelization Report of the Free Christian Church of Italy" (Father Gavazzi's Church,) it appears that there are now 10 ordained ministers, 12 evangelists, 1,649 communicants (nearly all of whom are converts from Catholicism,) 600 Sunday school scholars, 34 churches and 32 outstations.

—The English revisers of the authorized version of the New Testament met on the nineteenth ultimo in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster, and sat for seven hours. Thirteen members were present, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol being in the chair. The company carried on their revision into the seventh chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

—The movement for the abolition of celibacy in the priesthood of the Old Catholic Church is said to be making steady progress in Germany. The question might be settled this year, but many desire a postponement, for fear that Dr. Dollinger, who opposes abolition, will withdraw from the church. The petition of the Mannheim congregation, of which we have already spoken, in favor of abolishing celibacy, has been concurred in by thirty-one congregations.

—The two Jansenist Bishops of Holland ordered the celebration of a requiem mass for Pius the Ninth, from whom they had received the curse ecclesiastical more than once. They also directed that a celebration be held for the election of a true successor to the "Bishop of Rome." They do not recognize the title "Pope," and they condemn the "novel dogmas;" but they still regard themselves and their flocks "as members of the Catholic Church, inwardly united by the bond of the communion of saints with his holiness."

—The Loyalty Islands have evidently become a province of the Pope, in which Protestants and Protestant teaching are not to be allowed. The Islands passed under a French protectorate a few years ago, since when Roman Catholic priests have felt it to be their duty and privilege to take possession and root out Protestantism. Protestant places of worship have been seized and Protestants imprisoned and banished for refusing to accept Romanism. In some cases they have been threatened with death. Three Protestant chiefs are now in exile, and those who are under priestly influence "dare not trade with any one but the priests." Appeals have been taken to the resident governor of Caledonia; but in every instance he decides them against the Protestants and puts them under arrest. So it has now passed into a proverb among the Protestants that "to appeal means to be arrested." The French government once interfered in favor of the Protestants; but its decisions have long since been set aside, and the great distance from the seat of power gives the Catholics abundant opportunity to oppress the Protestants.

—Additional intelligence concerning the new Wesleyan mission to the populous islands off the coast of New Guinea comes from Amenlo Bale, one of the native missionaries from Fiji, in a letter to the Rev. Joseph Waterhouse, dated Duke of York's Island, August 25, 1877. After recounting interesting incidents of the voyage, the writer says: "We have built a house for the Rev. G. Brown with the assistance of the John Wesley's crew and some of the aborigines. Men and women came to look on while we built the house. A great chief is well disposed toward Christianity, with two inferior chiefs. They have given a lot of land, on which we reside. This is a small Island, situated between New Ireland and New Britain. These islands are near. My soul rejoices, because I know that the set time has come for the evangelization of these islands. It is said at all like the words of people in Fiji and other places to which we went, where we were told we should not be allowed to live, but would be eaten: We have come here, and lo! we find God is here, and it is his work to prepare the way for his religion, and he will bring to pass that for which we pray. This is a fertile land—plenty of cocoanuts and tropical fruits, and bananas, yams and fish, abundance of timber for canoes and houses. There is one drawback here—the people are not very industrious, consequently they have little property. They do not dress or wear the slightest covering; both men and women are perfectly naked; they have had houses and nothing to sleep on. Yet their canoes are very well made, as also their fishing-nets and their weapons, and other things engraven by art. They are not much given to cannibalism—not like Fiji was. Fiji was terrible in this. It is said they only eat children, but it is not clear whether this is true or not. One of their customs is that if a chief dies his body is hung to a tree, but commoners have the ordinary burial. Should any teachers be sent after us, let them all be married. And please send some calico plants, one of each kind of banana and one of each sort of orange plants. Also some mats, calico and shawl."

Our Young People.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

OUR LOST LAMB.

A little lamb of Jesus' fold
Lay on a bed of pain,
For her our anxious, loving care,
Alas! was all in vain.

One little hand, so thin and pale,
Was clasped within my own;
Soft, glossy curls, like wings of gold,
Upon her forehead shone!

The sun was setting—all was still—
When soft and low she said:
"Please, mother, let the sun shine in Upon my little bed."

Her guileless heart was gladdened by
The rays that briefly shone!
But ere another sunset came
Our precious lamb was gone!

MONROE, Louisiana. JUANITA.

What Shall We Do With Our Charley?

After all, Charley is not to be wholly shirked, for he is an institution, a solemn and awful fact; and on the answer of the question, "What is to be done with him?" depends a future. Many a hard, morose and bitter man has come from a Charley turned off and neglected; many a parental heartache has come from a Charley, left to run the streets, that mamma and sisters might play the piano and write letters in peace. It is easy to get rid of him—there are fifty ways of doing that; he is a spirit that can be promptly laid for a season, but, if not laid aright, will come back by and by a strong-armed man, when you cannot send him off at pleasure.

Mamma and sisters had better pay a little tax to Charley now than a terrible one hereafter; for to-day he is at your feet, to-day you can make him laugh, you can make him cry, you can persuade and coax, and turn him to your pleasure; you make his eyes fill and his bosom swell with recitals of good and noble deeds; in short, you can mold him if you will take the trouble.

But look ahead some years, when that little voice shall ring in deep, bass tones, when that small foot shall have a man's weight and tramp; when a rough beard shall cover that little round chin, and all the strength of manhood fill out that little form. Then you would give worlds to have the key to his heart, to be able to turn and guide him to your will; but if you lose that key, now that he is little, you may search for it carefully, with tears, some other day, and not find it.

One thing is to be noticed about Charley: that, rude and busy and noisy as he inclines to be, and irksome as carpet rules and parlor ways are to him, he is still a social little creature, and wants to be where the rest of the family are. A room ever so well adapted for a play-room cannot charm him at the hour when the family is in reunion; he hears the voice in the parlor, and his play-room seems cold and desolate. It may be warmed by a furnace and lighted with gas, but it is human light and warmth he shivers for; he longs to take his things down and play by you; he yearns to hear the talk of the family, which to so imperfectly comprehends, and is incessantly promising that, of the fifty things which he is liable to do in the parlor, he will not commit one if you will let him stay there.

This instinct of the little one is nature's warning plea—God's admonition. O how many a mother who has neglected it, because it was irksome to have the child about, has longed, when her son was a man, to keep him by her side, and he would not! Shut out as a little Arab—constantly told that he is noisy, that he is awkward and meddlesome, and a plague in general—the boy has at last found his own company in the streets, in the highways and hedges where he runs, till the day comes when the parents want their son, the sisters their brother; and then they are scared at the fare he brings back to them, as he comes all foul and smutty from the companionship to which they have doomed him. Depend upon it, mothers and older sisters, if it is too much trouble to keep Charley in your society, there will be places found for him warmed and lighted with no friendly fires, where he, who "finds some mischief still for idle hands to do" will care for him if you do not. You must take trouble for him, either a little now or a good deal by and by.

Let him stay with you at least some portion of the day. Put aside your book or work to tell him a story, or read to him from some book. Devise still parlor plays for him, for which we reside. This is a small Island, situated between New Ireland and New Britain. These islands are near. My soul rejoices, because I know that the set time has come for the evangelization of these islands. It is said at all like the words of people in Fiji and other places to which we went, where we were told we should not be allowed to live, but would be eaten: We have come here, and lo! we find God is here, and it is his work to prepare the way for his religion, and he will bring to pass that for which we pray. This is a fertile land—plenty of cocoanuts and tropical fruits, and bananas, yams and fish, abundance of timber for canoes and houses. There is one drawback here—the people are not very industrious, consequently they have little property. They do not dress or wear the slightest covering; both men and women are perfectly naked; they have had houses and nothing to sleep on. Yet their canoes are very well made, as also their fishing-nets and their weapons, and other things engraven by art. They are not much given to cannibalism—not like Fiji was. Fiji was terrible in this. It is said they only eat children, but it is not clear whether this is true or not. One of their customs is that if a chief dies his body is hung to a tree, but commoners have the ordinary burial. Should any teachers be sent after us, let them all be married. And please send some calico plants, one of each kind of banana and one of each sort of orange plants. Also some mats, calico and shawl."

and fingers and clothes, so that he does nothing worse. A cheap paint-box, and some engravings to color, is another; and if you will give some real paint and putty, to paint and putty his boats and cars, he is a man. All these things make trouble; that is the nature of the institution. You are only to choose between safe and healthy trouble, and the trouble that comes at last like a whirlwind. "God bless the little fellow, and send us all grace to know what to do with him!"—Examiner and Chronicle.

A Word to the Boys

When I was just fifteen I believed in the Lord Jesus, and joined the church of Christ; and nothing on earth would please me more than to hear that those I am writing to had been led to do the same. It is twenty-five years ago now, and I have never been sorry for what I then did; no, not even once. I have had plenty of time to think it over, and many temptations to try some other course, and if I had found out that I had been deceived, or had made a gross blunder, I would have made a change before now, and would do my best to prevent others from falling into the same delusion.

I tell you, boys, the day I gave myself up to the Lord Jesus, to be his servant, was the best day of my life. Then I began to be safe, and to be happy; then I found out the secret of living, and had a worthy object for my life's exertions, and an unfailing comfort for life's troubles. Because I would wish every boy who reads these lines to have a bright eye, a light tread, a joyful heart, and overflowing spirits, I therefore plead with him to consider whether he will not follow my example, for I speak from experience, and know what I say.

Once, as I stood musing at a window I saw a fly upon it, and made a brush with my hand to catch it. When I opened my hand the fly was not inside, but still on the same place on the glass. Scarcely thinking what I did, I made another brush with my hand, and thought I had captured the insect, but with the same result. There was the victim, quietly retaining his place in spite of me. It was on the other side of the glass. And when I saw that it was so, I smiled at my own folly. Those who attempt to find pleasure out of Christ will experience a like failure; for they are seeking on the wrong side of the glass. When we are on the side of Jesus Christ, and, having believed in him are cleansed and forgiven, then our pursuit of joy will be successful; but till then we shall labor in vain, and spend our strength for naught. It is of no use digging for coal where the strata show that there cannot be any; and equally useless is it to try after happiness where God's word, and the experience of those who have gone before us, assure us that happiness cannot be found. But then it is all the more needful that we should seek it where it can be had, and give ourselves at once to the search. He who believes in the Lord Jesus is blessed in the deed.

What hinders you from believing? Boys, why should you not, while yet you are boys, believe in the Lord Jesus unto salvation? May the Spirit of God lead you to do so!

Do not imagine that you cannot now be Christians. The gifts of our heavenly Father's love are not reserved for a certain age. Boys may be saved, boys may be workers for Jesus, boys may bring great glory to God. Hence it is that just now, at this particular turning-point in your lives, we are anxious to see you resolute for the right way. May the Holy Spirit incline you to resolve to be the Lord's. Others may despise your conscientious choice, and make mirth of your holy carefulness, but what matters it? Some of us have been laughed at for these twenty years, and are none the worse for it; we have had all manner of evil spoken falsely against us for Christ's name's sake, but we are all the happier for it. Oh, boys, if you are renewed in heart, and become for life and death the Redeemer's, none can really harm you. All must be right with him who is right with God. C. H. Spurgeon, in the Christian.

YARNS OF THE SEA. There is a story told among the sailors of an old Nantucket skipper who said if he could only taste the soundings anywhere on our coast he could tell where he was the darkest night that ever was known. The boys that sailed with him determined to test this, and the next time they were in port procured some earth from a neighbor's garden and secreted it on board the vessel they sailed in, and of which the old skipper was master. One night, when he was in his bunk, the young rascals woke him up and said they got soundings, and wanted him to taste and tell them where they were. Accordingly he deliberately applied his tongue to some of the mud, and then sprang from his berth, exclaiming: "Nantucket's sunk, and here we are over Hackett's garden!"

The old ship Diana was running down before the northeast trades for New Orleans, and one day at dinner the captain called to a young fellow who was at the wheel, through the open sky-light: "How does she head?" The youth replied: "South-west by west half west, a little westerly, sir!" The captain said to his passengers: "That's a precocious youngster. I wonder if I can get another 'west' out of him, Jack," said he, "put another west on that course and I will give you duck enough for a hammock." "South-west by west half west, a little westerly, Captain West," came down through the sky-light, and the boy got his duck; for the captain's name was West.—Boston Journal.

An aged divine said to his ecclesiastical body: "Brethren, you may desire to know how I have occupied my time during the past year. I will tell you: It took just six months of the year for me to attend to my own business, committed to me by the Master, and the other six months to let other people's business alone."

Sent or Called?

Our itinerant system is distinguished from others in this: that the preacher is sent. In other churches the pastor is called by the congregation, and there is a contract for service and compensation. The sending is the more apostolic way, and most in accord with the true character of the ministerial office. The prophets were sent. Had they waited to be called by the people who needed their ministrations, they would never have gone. Christ sent his disciples, as in the case of the seventy, and he sent his apostles. The final command was to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. If the church had waited for calls her evangelists would never have gone far. If we had waited in modern times for the heathen to call us we should now have no missions among them. God sent his Son to a world that did not ask for him, and he sends his preachers to people that care nothing for the gospel. Those who do not ask for the gospel—the most ignorant and wicked—are they who need it most. "I was found of them that sought me not; I was made manifest unto them that asked not after me." It turns out that those who are indifferent, or that revile and persecute, are often awakened, and give the message a hearty reception. If, in many instances, it be otherwise, the testimony of God has been delivered, and the gospel has been preached as a witness. It is clear that Christianity would never have spread under the system of calling, nor could the pioneer and mission work of modern times have been carried on by it. The churches who call their ministers have sent out their missionaries and evangelists.

In regard to the supply of ministers in the churches at home there is room for debate. Is the calling or the sending the better way? Is a community or congregation the best judge of its own needs? Ought it to have the man it selects? Practically, in calling men, a church cannot often get the man it prefers, and it must take the best it can get. Salary, and other conditions than the spiritual welfare, may decide the matter. And from the frequent changes in what are called settled pastorates, it is evident that churches and preachers are generally hard to please. But supposing every minister could get the church he wishes, and every church the pastor it prefers, would it be best?—best for the minister's usefulness, and best for the church he serves? There might be peace and mutual satisfaction, but would there necessarily be the highest spiritual development and the most conversions? Mutual satisfaction is not always the same thing as the greatest good. Under neither system can a church get its first choice in a pastor, with here and there an exception; but, where other things are equal, the itinerant system of sending affords the greater probability. Under it, at any rate, a church may get its preference sometimes, while under any other it might never obtain it. Then a church is not always the best judge of its own needs. The man that pleases may not be the man that would benefit. Some of the most successful appointments we have ever known were those in which neither the preacher nor people would have approved the arrangement before it was made. The preacher the people do not care to have is often the very one they ought to have, and the place the preacher shrinks from is the one he ought to fill. Here is a church that has somehow become worldly, fashionable, and measurably dead in spirituality. They affect intelligence, refinement and culture, and can pay the man of their choice a fair salary. They really need a man who has not itching ears, one to indoctrinate, to break up the fallow ground, and to prudently and firmly administer discipline. But are they likely to ask for a man of this sort? On the other hand, here is a church of considerable possibilities, but it has waned, become poor, and it must have an administrator and a preacher of more than average power and popularity to bring it up. The right man may be sent there, but he would not be apt to go in answer to a call.

This method of sending, rather than of calling, is apostolical and vital to the highest efficiency of Methodism. We believe its application to our work in the cities, and in the old and densely-populated sections of the country, should not be abated. The wishes of congregations are entitled to consideration, but the grounds of those wishes are to be sifted; and the feelings and judgment of the preachers are entitled to respect, but the appointing power is something more than a bureau of arbitration, or an ecclesiastical brokerage. The itinerant preacher, as a man sent, does not so much preach for a people as to them. How he may be received, or whether received at all, is not material to his mission. He is sent to do the work of an embassador of Christ, and to deliver his Master's message. Those to whom he is sent may not support him, and they may not care to hear him, but he must do his duty. As a sent man, he can be independent, fearless and faithful. If he finds a broken-down church, neglected finances, and general falling away from the ordinances of religion, the more need for him there. Such a people may be unworthy of the gospel, but such a people, of all others, most need a faithful preacher. Christ came to seek and to save that which is lost, and why should not the best preachers be sent to what may be accounted the worst places?

The pressure upon our system is strongest and most dangerous at this point—the tendency of preachers and people to bargain and call, and thus to drift into congregationalism, and to look toward a settled pastorate. In its letter and theory our system is intact, but we must be careful to guard against any sentiment that would subvert the actual working of a vital principle. Our churches do not call their ministers; our preachers make no contracts with the churches to which they are appointed. The individual man may be disposed to do the best he can for himself, the individual church would like to take its pick from the entire connectional roll, but the appointments are supposed to be made with reference to general interests, and upon a broader view than that of a single man or a single church. This distinction between sending and calling must not be lost sight of. It is the very marrow of our episcopal itinerant system, and most clearly differentiates it from every other system. The grounds on which a man is sent here or there ought to be clear, and light from all quarters should not only be tolerated, but it should be welcomed and even sought; but he should be sent not in accordance with pre-existing arrangements, but for reasons which have their foundations in the spiritual welfare of the people, and in the greatest good to the entire church.

Honor to the Holy Spirit.

Our dependence on the Holy Spirit in the work of saving souls is absolute. The word, preached by a vain and flippant man, may save some. It is the word of God, and the Spirit, in mercy to the hearer, may attend it, though it be uttered by lips that have not been touched by the live coal from off the altar. But, as a rule, the preacher who is not in near personal communion with the Holy Ghost does little in bringing souls to Christ. The gospel, to have saving power, must be preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

There should be in all of our assemblies a reverent recognition of the Spirit. He should be honored as God, lovingly worshiped, and his offices dwelt upon in the sermons and in the prayers. Especially should seekers at the altar have their minds directed to him as their helper in the struggle for faith, and as the only source of illumination. When mourners pray for the Holy Ghost—earnestly, importunately cry for him—they are not far from the kingdom. Christ may be presented in the sermon and in the exhortation, but it will be in vain until the Spirit takes of the things of Christ, and shows them to the dark and blinded heart. When the Spirit breathes upon a congregation the gracious visitation is perceptible to all. There are awakenings and conversions at almost every hour, there is solemnity on the faces of sinners, and the peace of believers flows as a river. When the enemy comes in as a flood this is the banner that the Lord lifts up against him. The attractions of fine preaching, the power of argument, the melody of sacred song, are all in vain, unless the Pentecostal baptism falls upon the people.

The only art there is in successful meetings is the art of having the Holy Spirit richly manifested. There are conditions that repel. They may be in the pulpit, they may be in the spirit, temper and state of the believers present. The Spirit is grieved away not only from a single heart, but often from a meeting. Of all calamities, this is most to be deprecated in connection with our efforts to save sinners and to revive the church. Light and trivial talk, and the lack of seriousness between the services on the part of preachers and members, destroy the good impressions made on the minds of the unconverted, and banish the Holy Spirit from those who ought to be led by him.

How to secure the Spirit's presence should be the study of all. It must be done by watchfulness over our thoughts and lips, by earnest and frequent prayer, and by realizing our need of the Spirit, both for our own growth in grace and for the salvation of our friends. The reflection is often forced upon us that the Holy Spirit is not honored as he should be in our worship, and on special occasions where the awakening and conversion of souls is the burden of the entire service. He is, doubtless, always ready to co-operate. The ascended Savior sends him in answer to prayer. We have only to place ourselves in an attitude to receive him, and he will come. If we wait for him in prayer, with one accord, with hearts thirsting for his refreshing power, he will surely come.

Culture.

A great deal has been written and spoken lately about culture. One would suppose that it had accomplished wonders ere this in the development of the finer traits of human character, and in toning and polishing the intellectual faculties. We have been looking for some grand outcome of culture—something that would make men more manly and women more womanly—something that would take hold of our poor, degraded humanity and lift it quite up to the high plane of perfection. But somehow there seems to have been a failure. Culture seems to have done no more for our age and time than it did thousands of years ago for pagan Greece. With all its boastings and fine promises of progress it has done no more for us than it did for the old Roman. Indeed it is questionable if it has done as much. In some respects we know that the culture of to-day is far behind that of Greece and Rome in practical results. Culture professes to be the true theory of self-development, by which a man can attain to that which is best for him. It defines itself as "a careful personal training, in which the mind receives the highest polish, and the largest acquirements of information, and the broadest breadth of thought, and the deepest depth of sympathy, and thus reaches a point beyond which it is impossible to go." This all sounds very true. Such a thing has quite an attractive look, and no wonder people are fascinated by it. There is something so gratifying to the soul in meditating upon self-development. The old question, "What shall we do?" which has so long bothered the thought and baffled the wisdom of men, receives here a direct and decisive answer. When a man comes, in his anxiety and solicitude about the future, and asks, "What can I do to bring out the best things of my nature, and reach the highest attainments of mind and soul?" Culture says: "Develop yourself by a careful personal training in art and science and literature. Let sweetness and light be the goal of all effort." And men have entered with enthusiasm upon self-development in the line of culture. Yet somehow there appears to have been a most lamentable failure; for these enthusiastic followers of culture have risen no higher in the human scale than those who have sought development in a different direction. As to the benefits that have accrued to humanity at large, they are "few and far between." Now these two questions are continually coming up: What is the matter with culture? Has it made good its boasts? It has not made good its boasts, and, of course, there must be a defect somewhere. I think two reasons may be given for the failure, which is so glaring. One is that this personal training has been pursued for its own sake. Anything pursued for its own sake is clear evidence of a selfish purpose in the pursuit, and a selfish purpose generally ends in the supremest selfishness. The self-development which culture teaches is but a misleading name for the highest development of selfishness. While no real good comes to humanity at large from such a training, a positive evil comes to the individual exercising it. Culture is good and beautiful when it is used as a means to a higher end; but when it is pursued as an end in itself there is nothing more selfish. For a man to cultivate himself simply to be cultivated, to acquire knowledge simply for the sake of knowing, is unworthy the name of manliness. Even to pursue such things for amusement or pleasure does not alter the fact that it is a selfish pursuit. The cultivation of selfishness never benefited anybody yet; and this is one reason of the failure of culture to make good its boastings. A disastrous failure to reach the high ends of life is the inevitable result of pursuing culture for its own sake.

Another reason for this failure is in the fact that culture seeks to take the place of religion. Any one who has watched its tendencies can easily see that this has been its aim. No one thing can take the place of an other thing without creating disturbance, and in the end defeating itself. When culture seeks to take the place of religion it enters a realm for which it is entirely unfitted, and strives to displace something whose peculiar work it can never do. Culture, with all its pretensions, has not yet touched the human heart with regenerating influences. Polish is meant only for the outside of things. Light is very beautiful, but its beauty vanishes when the life-giving principle of warmth is wanting. Sweetness is very enjoyable, but the repast will cloy if there is not genial company. Smoothness is good for machinery, but not so good for conscience. The culture that man needs is that which begins its work in the inner circle of his nature and works outward—not that which begins and ends on the surface. This culture, which is so prominent in these times, begins in a love of self, and works by the rule of a selfish love, and ends in a grand flourish of trumpets, proclaiming the exaltation of selfishness to its loftiest pinnacle.

But there is a true theory of development. It is the Christian theory of service for others. It simply means labor in behalf of others for Jesus' sake. "Your servants for Jesus' sake," said Paul. If a man wants the true development, let him seek the renovating power of the Spirit of God upon his own soul, and then engage earnestly in lifting up those around him. Such work will polish his inner being, and bring out in due proportion the affections of his heart. Communion with God will sweeten his own experiences of life, and sympathy with his fellows will produce hope in many despairing hearts. This is the only training that is worth anything to the individual, or brings any blessings to humanity.

C. W. CARTER.

Preparing the Sermon.

Rev. R. W. Dale, as reported in the Independent, closed his Yale lecture on the preparation of sermons as follows:

When you have got your materials together and arranged them, I think you should ask whether your sermon will contain an adequate amount of positive Christian truth; whether what you have prepared is governed and inspired by a recognition of the true relations of the human race to God, as those relations are illustrated in the revelation which has been made to us through Christ; whether your sermon will satisfy the apostolic conception of what the preaching of the gospel ought to be; whether it is likely to secure any of the great ends for which the Christian ministry is established, and the particular end which you had proposed to yourself in preparing it; whether you are leaving anything unsaid that as a Christian preacher you are bound to say; whether the spirit of the sermon will be in harmony with the mind of Christ.

You may then look at your materials from another point of view. Is the sermon likely to be monotonous in tone and color? Will it be sufficiently varied to be interesting to all sorts of people? You may consider whether the subject has any pathetic aspects which you have overlooked; whether you have brought it into a sufficiently close relation to the consciences and to the common lives of men; whether, with the materials you have prepared, the subject will be lit up with imagination or fancy; whether there will be a sufficient glow of feeling.

Do not suppose that I mean you to manufacture an imaginative paragraph, or a pathetic paragraph, or a humorous paragraph. To do this will make your sermon very false and artificial. But to secure interest and effectiveness you ought to try to appeal to as many elements of human nature as possible; and in looking through your rough notes you will sometimes find that there are the germs of imaginative, pathetic, impassioned or humorous passages which you have omitted to develop, and which might be developed with great advantage.

In this review of what you have prepared you will make sure of saying, and saying clearly, the main thing about your subject that ought to be said and that you want to say. Dr. Duncan—Rabbi Duncan—after listening to a sermon, declared that the "idea of the preacher was in the sentence after the last."

You will then consider what ought to be said in your introduction, unless, indeed, you believe, with Pascal, who, I am inclined to think, was right, that "the last thing a man finds out when he is writing a book is how to begin;" and in that case you will postpone preparing the introduction until you have determined how the sermon is to end.

The introduction is one of the great perplexities of young preachers. Very often they spend an amount of strength upon it which would be far better used later in the sermon. The style and size of the porch ought to bear some proportion to the style and size of the house. My late friend, M. de Felice, one of the most eminent of modern preachers among the Protestants of France, once said to a colleague of his, M. Pedezert: "I want half an hour's preliminary conversation with my hearers." "Then," replied M. Pedezert, "you begin just when others are finishing." M. de Felice, I believe, generally preached for an hour and a half. Even in his case half an hour's "preliminary conversation," in the shape of an elaborate introduction, was a sufficiently serious encroachment on the time at his disposal; but for a man who preaches for only five and-thirty minutes to have an introduction of a quarter of an hour is a far graver mistake. In listening to the ostentatious preparations which some preachers think it necessary to make before they fairly get into their sermon, which too often proves to be a very poor one, after all, one is inclined to ask, in the words of Robert Browning:

"But why such long preamble and display,
Such turning and adjustment of the hand;
And taking it upon your breast at length,
Only to speak dry words across its strings?"

The introduction should be as brief as possible. As a rule, it should spring directly and naturally out of the text—that is, if the text is announced first. If you want to say something before you refer to your text, keep back your text till you have said it. But the best advice I can give you is to get to work as soon as you can. If your text requires explanation, explain it; if not, do not waste your time by explaining it.

The time which most young preachers devote to the preparation of the introduction would be far better spent on the close, or what our fathers used to call the application of their sermons. About this all authorities are agreed. An English preacher of the last generation used to say that he cared very little what he said the first half hour, but that he cared a very great deal what he said the last fifteen minutes. I remember reading many years ago, an address delivered to students by Mr. Henry Ward Beecher, in which he gave a very striking account of the sermons of Jonathan Edwards. Mr. Beecher said that in the elaborate doctrinal part of Jonathan Edwards' sermons the great preacher was only getting his guns into position; but that in his "applications" he opened fire on the enemy. There are too many of us, I am afraid, who take so much time in getting our guns "into position" that we have to finish without firing a shot. We say that we leave the truth to do its own work. We trust to the hearts and consciences of our hearers to "apply it." Depend upon it, gentlemen, this is a great and fatal mistake.

Sometimes, indeed, we may preach a sermon which is "application" from the first sentence to the last, as an eloquent friend of mine once delivered a speech an hour long, which was enthusiastically described as "all peroration". Mr. Finney's sermons were not unfrequently of this kind. I do not mean that he "perorated" all through, but that the whole sermon was "application." I heard him very often during his visit to England, when I was a student, and it seemed to me that the iron chain of the elaborate theological argument which sometimes constituted the substance of his discourse—an argument on free will, or on the evil of sin, or on the moral necessity which obliged God to punish sin—was fastened to an electric battery; every link of the chain as you touched it gave you a moral shock. But even in Mr. Finney's sermons the supreme impression usually came at the end; the effect was cumulative.

The principle on which the closing passages of our sermons should be prepared is obvious. Having demonstrated some Christian truth or having explained some Christian duty, we have to ask ourselves how we can project the truth into the very depths of the thought and life of our congregation, so that they shall never lose it; how we can constrain them to discharge the duty. We may secure these ends in many ways. Even if our principal object is to set or keep the faith of the people right, the truth will be most firmly enthroned in the intellect if we invoke the alliance of the conscience and of the spiritual affections, or if we exhort the people to the discharge of the special duty which the truth imposes upon all who receive it. Sometimes, on the other hand, the living authority of the truth will be felt most vividly, and its shining glory will be most clearly seen if it is suddenly contrasted with the antagonistic error. Or, if it is our object to strengthen the religious affections—the gratitude, the love, the trust, the hope, the joy which the truth inspires—we may often succeed by giving free expression to the feeling and passion which the truth has enkindled in our own hearts. If we are enforcing a duty, we may crown all that we have said by some vivid historical illustration of the beauty and nobleness of the particular excellence on which we are insisting, or of the shamefulness and baseness of the opposite vice. Or we may give heart and courage to those who may think that the duty is above their strength by recalling with exulting confidence the great promises of God. Or we may appeal to fear or to hope, or to the authority of Christ, which no Christian heart can resist. We should do well to study the various methods which successful preachers have followed in this part of their sermons. Original methods of reaching the heart and the conscience and influencing the will are of far more value to a preacher who wants to do his work well than originality of any other kind.

There are one or two suggestions of a general character which I should like to offer before I close.

Never be afraid of making your explanations of any truth, or fact, or duty too simple and elementary. One of the most charming popular preachers and speakers that I ever knew said to me once that he always took it for granted that the people knew nothing about the subject of which he was speaking to them. A few months ago, in a passage of a great speech on the Eastern question delivered at Birmingham, Mr. John Bright showed that, consciously or unconsciously, he spoke on the same principle. He explained the precise position of Constantinople on the Bosphorus, and described the Sea of Marmora and the Dardanelles, as if it did not happen to be in Birmingham when the speech was delivered; and while reading it in a railway-carriage in the north of England, the next morning, I wondered whether even once Mr. Bright's oratorical instinct had failed him, and whether the audience had showed any signs of impatience while they were listening to this elementary information. When I got home my friends told me that this passage of the speech was listened to with the closest attention. Mr. Bright was right, as usual, and he had given me another illustration in addition to the innumerable illustrations which he had given me before of the true method of address to great audiences.

The thoughts of ordinary men on most things not connected with their own profession are very indefinite. Large numbers of persons who have been accustomed to read the Bible and to listen to preaching all their lives, have the loosest possible acquaintance with the details of biblical history, and their conceptions of doctrinal truth are extremely vague. They are grateful to any man who will make their knowledge of the external facts of Holy Scripture definite, and who will give sharpness and firmness to the outlines of their conceptions of truth.

Young preachers are afraid to say the same thing over and over again. Mr. Finney, in his "Autobiography," quotes what a judge in the Supreme Court once said to him on the subject, and it deserves careful consideration. "Ministers," he said, "do not exercise good sense in addressing the people. They are afraid of repetition. Now, if lawyers should take such a course, they would ruin themselves and their cause. When I was at the bar," he added, "I used to take it for granted, when I had before me a jury of respectable men, that I should have to repeat over my main positions about as many times as there were persons in the jury-box. I learned that, unless I did so—illustrated, and repeated, and turned the main points of law and of evidence—I should lose my cause." The judge was right. We should preach more effectively if, instead of tasking our intellectual resources to say a great many things in the same sermon, we tried to say a very few things in a great many ways.

Religion in Russia.

The Russians are a nation of church-goers, early and late, one-third of the days in the year are feast-days. They have not yet learned that all days are holy to the good man, and that to him life is a beautiful Sabbath. They would be richer could they learn this. The multiplied church festivals are a serious drawback to the industrial wealth of the State and to the income of the laboring classes. But superstition is stronger than the love of money. They neglect home and business to keep a feast. The feast of Elias is a high day with the Russians, who entertain the belief that on that day Elijah rides in his chariot, the thunder of whose wheels is heard on earth; hence the saying: "It always rains on Elijah's day." Whether the thunder is not heard the same position is that the old prophet is glad to take his accustomed ride.

The Greek service is exceedingly imposing. The officiating priests are robed in gold, and the bishops wear jeweled tiaras. The church service consists of hymns, prayers, scripture readings and a sermon. The Old Testament is read only during every fasting service, which is intended to be prophetic of the morning service when the New Testament is read. On great festivals there are imposing processions with banners, and pictured saints with clouds of incense and sweetest music. There is much more devotion than godliness. There is the form without the power. Yet this is not universal; there are within the Russian Church many living Christians whose lives are replete with deeds of charity and acts of true worship. I met one Russian lady who is active in Night Refuges, or homes for the poor Magdalens, and two princesses who are building homes for the working classes. Not a few of the nobility attended the ministry of Lord Radstock in the British and American chapel, and there heard his earnest discourses on the "higher life." Count Schouvaloff, now minister to the court of St. James, invited Lord Radstock to hold services in his palace, and there the count related his personal experience. And the beautiful Dagmar, the crown princess of all the Russias, requested the English evangelist to visit her for religious conversation.—National Repository.

Indians in Dutchess County, N. Y.

The day of the Indian has passed, and that of the railroad and telegraph has come; but we do not need here to ride or walk far from our daily haunts to find a few mixed descendants of the first owners of the soil. These are mainly offshoots from the Pequots. They have lived for a long time in a narrow valley adjacent to ours, where a little stream and a large one mile, a spot which they named; as Mr. Lossing tells us, Pish qach ti-qook—"the meeting of the waters." This name on white lips got corrupted to Scaghticook, and the Indians became thereafter, to all the neighborhood, the Scaghticook Indians. During a former generation these wards of civilization used to frequent all our country, peddling the painted baskets and small wares which they knew so well how to make, and gaining a livelihood of as much thrift as they cared to enjoy. They were always natural wanderers, and sometimes strolled two hundred miles away; for a drop of the Indian blood—if it be only one drop—when it gets in the veins, means vagrancy, and the restlessness of the Wandering Jew.

I think the last full-blood Indian of this tribe—now reduced to a mere handful, mixed with negro and white blood—was the locally famous Eunice Manwee. She lived, as her dwindling descendants now do, on a State reservation, and died in 1859, aged about one hundred and four years. Her father was the last chief who ruled, and she was consequently of royal blood—a princess in fact, as she would have been in name, had the tribal condition of her people continued.

I remember seeing her a few weeks before her death, and she talked with freedom of the Indians and their habits. It was interesting to hear her pronunciation of the Indian words which have now become local property, and are attached to so many places. In almost every instance the modern use of them is merely a reduction of larger and more unmanageable ones—words which, as they are now used, have been shorn of a half or a third of their original syllables. She was intelligent, and accustomed to talk, and remembered, of course, many curious things. I was struck with her statement that she saw, when a little girl, an old Indian who had seen King Philip. The old Indian was telling her father of the personal traits and appearance of this doughty hero, and narrating, perhaps, some of his unrecorded exploits; and she was a rapt listener to the conversation. It was suggestive of Thoreau's way of measuring the distance which the current Scripture chronology sets between us and the Garden of Eden; for, he says, it only requires about sixty of our grandmothers to take us back to Eve. To see an Indian who had seen King Philip (and, I, therefore, came only within one remove of it) was like putting your hand backward upon the vessel which landed at Plymouth Rock. When one sets down to think the matter seriously over, it does not seem so long as it did since Columbus discovered America, or since William the Conqueror set foot in England, or, in fact, since anything ancient happened. Even those indeterminate eras of Huxley and the geologists are visibly shortened when a few memories pasted together cover such stretches of time.—Joel Benton, in Appleton's Journal.

George Eliot at Home.

George Eliot is a woman who must really have passed her tenth lustrum. Despite this, her hair, a very light brown, has none of those threads which one might expect before the burden of over half a century of years is superimposed by constant labor and by experiences of desolation. She is not handsome. Her face is long, pale, with a small, sensitive mouth. Her eyes are a vivid, warm blue gray, full of depth, now keenly perceptive, now tenderly introspective, always full of sadness. Her hair, worn low, gives a womanly effect to a fine intellectual forehead. Her calmer thoughts find an expression of colonist energy. Her will seems far in excess of physical tact. She is, in spite of her sensitive suggestions, full of power and repose. Her voice is low and penetrating, and she is, scarcely without exception, one of the great-thinking conversationalists.

"Do you know George Eliot well?" inquired of a well-known essayist.

"Yes, I do."

"What is your estimate of her?"

"Well, I'll tell you. I am in a position where I often meet such people as Huxley, Tyndall, Brown-Sequard and others. I am not afraid to meet them, for I may say, without vanity, that I am their peer. But with George Eliot it is different. She knows more than I do. I am afraid of her. She knows everything. Historiosophy, ancient and modern, all sciences and languages are known to her. She is the most accomplished amateur pianist in England."

"And so you think"—

"I think she is the most admirable woman that ever lived."

"What the witty Mrs. Trench once said of Madame de Staël—that she was consolingly ugly—will apply to George Eliot, with the reservation that her plain features are so sanctified by her expression that she creates a very beautiful woman. She has been offered fabulous sums by London photographers if she would sit for her picture, but she has always refused. So far as I know, there is not a picture of her in existence. She goes little or none into society, but has weekly receptions, which only a certain class is admitted. She may be often seen at the classical matinees, given at St. James' Hall, and occasionally she may be seen on the street with a pair of spanking bays, a very swell carriage and liveried servants.

"Her home life is a very charming one. She exercises an active supervision, and develops a most comprehensive management and exquisite taste in every detail of the household. Her disposition she is very slow and methodical, writing, I have been assured, not more than from forty to sixty lines a day. When a book is completed she is in such a state of nervous exhaustion that her husband takes her to Italy or southern France to recuperate. While writing she must be scrupulously arranged as to person, while every detail of her surroundings must be in harmonious place.—Home Journal.

Early Rising

The celebrated Dr. Doddridge mentions in his "Family Expositor" that to his habit of early rising the world is indebted for nearly the whole of his valuable works. Sir Thomas Moore remarks in his preface to the "Utopia" that he completed the work by stealing time from his sleep and meals. He made it his invariable practice to rise at four.

The well-known Bishop Burnet was an habitual early riser. When at college his father aroused him to his studies every morning at four o'clock, and he continued the practice during the remainder of his life.

"I spent," says Dr Paley, when giving an account of the early part of his life at college, "the first two years of my undergraduateship most happily, but unprofitably. I was constantly in society, where we were not immoral, but idle and expensive. At the commencement of the third year, after having left the usual party at a late hour, I was awakened at five in the morning by one of my companions, who stood by my bedside and said: 'Paley, I have been thinking what a fool you are. I could do nothing probably if I were to try; and I could afford the indolent life you lead. You could do everything, and cannot afford it. I have had no sleep during the whole of the night on account of these reflections, and am now come to solemnly inform you that if you persist in your indolence I must renounce your society.' I was so struck with the visit and the visitor that I lay in bed a great part of the day and formed my plan. I ordered my bed-maker to lay my fire every evening in order that it might be lighted by myself. I arose at five, read during the whole day, took supper at nine, went to bed, and continued the practice up to this time." The consequence was that he became a great man.

THE ROCK.—After all, there is a Rock. Fogs of doubt, storms of controversy, tides of passion, quicksands of error, cyclones of hot theological controversy abound; ships are driven here or there, masts of portentous altitude broken, prows of great daring are splintered, broad sails of prosperous opinion cut into ribbons, and prond barks are sunk; and all this experimenting goes on age after age, with like disasters following the reckless vanity that makes light of the Rock of our salvation. There are some things in religion which are self-evident, or demonstrated by experience, and are therefore fundamental, and can never be overthrown. Simple faith, hearty and genuine, in the Lord Jesus Christ, has always, and everywhere and under all circumstances, produced the same order of effects. It has brought peace, and made its possessor strong to do or to suffer. It has shaped character after the pattern of the Lord. It has begotten self-sacrifice and mercy and liberality, and set to work the agencies by which the world shall yet be conquered for the right. The imperfections of human judgment, and the frailties which attach to all, have indeed impaired the power of truth in its invisible forms of manifestations, and yet, despite them all, the truth of Christ and him crucified is the one truth for the sinful and the disobedient, which all the double and skepticisms and opposition of the world have not been able to overcome. It is the Rock at whose base the adverse waves have been broken, and whose summit no clouds of darkening have ever yet entirely obscured. Christian at Work.

Lord Guillamore could tell a story with inimitable humor. He used to vary his voice according to the speakers, and act, as it were, the scene he was describing, in a way infinitely diverting. Very droll was his mimicry of a dialogue between the guard of the mail and a mincing old lady with whom he once traveled from Cork to Dublin, in the old coaching days.

The coach had stopped to change horses, and the guard, a big, red-faced, jolly man, beaming with good humor and civility, came bustling up to the window to see if the "insides" wanted anything.

"Guard!" whispered the old lady.

"Well, ma'am, what can I do for you?"

"Could you"—in a faint voice—"could you get me a glass of water?"

"To be sure, ma'am; with all the pleasure in life."

"And guard!"—still falteringly—"I'd—hem!—I'd—a—like it hot."

"Hot water! Oh, all right, ma'am! Why not, if it's plazing to you?"

"With a lump of sugar, guard, if you please."

"By all manner of means, ma'am."

"And—and—guard dear"—as the man was turning to go away—"a small squeeze of lemon, and a little—just a thimbleful—of spirits through it."

"Och, isn't that punch!" shouted the guard. "Where was the good of treating about the lush? Couldn't you have asked out for a tumbler of punch at once, ma'am, like a man?"

Two of the most precious things on this side the grave are reputation and life. And yet, strange to tell, the most contemptible whisper may deprive us of the first, and the weakest weapon of the second. He more anxious, then, to deserve a good name than to possess it.

A sweet word not only turneth away wrath, but it leads to knowledge, to wisdom, to honor, pleasure and repose. It conducts to the best felicities of life, and attains the most gracious ends by the least laborious means.

Jewelry.

In cameos the figures are carved in relief, but another very beautiful and effective process of the glyptic art is the cutting of intaglio. The intaglio carving is exactly the reverse of the cameo, the figure being cut in or hollowed out.

Among the ancients the latter process was very extensively practiced, and there are many valuable collections of antique intagli, which afford admirable models for those who pursue the art at this day. The collection of mosaics was also very large, and among the ingeniously wrought devices were many sacred and ecclesiastical symbols. The Byzantine mosaics are formed of minute pieces of vitrified enamel, payed like the tiles of a tessellated pavement, which present a lustrous surface, not smooth, but having nearly the same appearance as though formed of oily pigments.

Other personal ornaments—medallions, brooches, and the like—are set with exquisite enameled pictures, painted under a powerful magnifying glass, and so delicate are they that a human head in some cases will be scarcely larger than the puncture of a pin, and yet so perfectly formed that every feature is clearly discernible.

The coral is very interesting too, some of the sets carved in forms of heads and fruits and flowers being the work of the most skillful workers of Naples. The change in the value of coral aptly illustrates the fickleness of fashion, for while the deep red was at one time most highly prized, and the pale pink almost valueless, the reverse is now the case, and fine pieces of the delicate pink coral command very high prices, while the deep red is a drug on the market.—National Repository.

THE DECAY OF SERIOUSNESS.—The New York Evangelist of last week, in a specially excellent article, says:

One of the depressing signs of the times is the general decay of seriousness, which shows itself, in many ways—in conversation, in literature and in the occupations of life. How hard it is to engage anybody in sober and earnest conversation. People like to talk well enough, and will talk without ceasing on the most trifling subjects. They are ready to gossip, to entertain each other with the small talk of society, but it is rare in comparison that we sit down with one who seems to delight in conversation of a higher kind. The mass of people do not even think seriously. They have no convictions, and do not care to have any, even while life is so solemn and earnest, and so swiftly passing away. They do not care to think deeply about anything outside of their special lines of business. They avoid the trouble of a real intellectual grapple with any of the great problems of life. They do not want to be burdened with opinions which may compel them to some positive action or to sacrifice. They would get their views as they get their dinners—where they can be had the easiest—and take their creeds as they buy their clothes—"ready made," and as easy to put off as to put on. In politics they go with a party; in religion with a sect; to which they give up their own independent thinking, content to have it done for them.

UNION OF TWO PERFECT NATURES IN CHRIST.—The constant, undivided union of two perfect natures in Christ's person is exactly that which gives infinite value to his mediation, and qualifies him to be the very Mediator that sinners need. Our Mediator is one who can sympathize with us, because he is very man. And yet, at the same time, he is one who can deal with the Father for us on equal terms, because he is very God. It is the same union which gives infinite value to his righteousness, when imputed to believers. It is the righteousness of one who was God as well as man. It is the same union which gives infinite value to the atoning blood which he shed for sinners on the cross. It is the blood of one who was God as well as man. It is the same union which gives infinite value to his resurrection. When he rose again, as the Head of the body of believers, he rose not as a mere man, but as God. Let these things sink deeply into our hearts. The second Adam is far greater than the first Adam was. The first Adam was only man, and so he fell. The second Adam was God as well as man, and so he completely conquered.—Ibid.

Our Christianity must be growth. Christianity is knowing Christ—Knowledge only comes by experience, and experience takes time. I cannot know a person you introduce to me as I could know a truth clearly stated. I may be very glad to meet him, to begin an acquaintance on your recommendation, but I cannot know him till he shows himself to me. There is no influence that can help a man like the constant, half-unconscious presence of a friend whom he thoroughly respects and loves. Now truth is taught, new feeling inspired by the constant action and reaction of one such soul on the other; they keep each other always true and warm. Nothing is more beautiful than the growth of two friends' natures, who are always finding new depths in each other's life. This best culture of personal friendship finds its infinite image in the saving of the soul by Jesus Christ.—From a sermon by the Rev. Phillips Brooks.

Between parents and their children there is so great a variety of nature and of manners, of blessing and cursing, that an evil parent cannot perish in a single death. Holy parents never eat their meal of blessing alone, but they make the room shine like the fire of a holy sacrifice; and a father's or mother's piety makes all the house festival and full of joy, from generation to generation.—Bishop Taylor.

All tellous are the rough touches and hard rubs that we get to polish us for use and for shining.

MARRIED.

DELOACH—SMITH.—In Water Valley, Miss., April 23, 1878, by the Rev. S. M. Thames, assisted by the Rev. J. M. Roon, Dr. John E. DeLoach and Miss Julia K. Smith, daughter of Dr. E. W. Smith, all of Water Valley.

Sir William B., being at a parish meeting, made some proposals which were objected to by a farmer. Highly enraged, he said to the farmer: "Sir, do you know that I have been at two universities, and at two colleges at each university?" "Well, sir," said the farmer, "what of that? I had a calf that sucked two cows, and the observation I made was that the more he sucked the greater calf he grew."

THE CENTENNIAL TIE.—The Lindsay-Saylor Wire Company, of St. Louis, Mo., are the manufacturers of this justly celebrated cotton tie which is rapidly reaching its position as a first-class tie in durability and cheapness. The tie costs but a fraction more than half the cost of any other tie, and will stand a greater strain. As to their strength, actual tests have demonstrated that they will continue to their place when iron ties have failed to do so; for instance, a bale of cotton, weighing 720 pounds, was made to fall 15 feet, and the Centennial Tie, with which the bale was bound, was uninjured, and held the bale with a vise-like grip. They are also free from the objection made to all band ties, as they cover but a very small surface of the bale, and allow the air to penetrate and dry out any and all moisture. This is a very important feature, for if a bale of cotton, bound with iron ties, gets wet the band of iron always keeps that part of the cotton immediately under it in a state of continued dampness, which cannot help but damage as much of the bale.

Spinners have already recognized the improvement the Centennial has made in this respect, and prefer cotton to be bound with wire ties, as they leave the cotton uniform in quality. Then the freight is cheaper, because the tie is lighter. Shippers and spinners therefore not only prefer bales bound with these useful and really cheaper ties, but offer a bonus for such bales, as certificates in the hands of the manufacturers testify. Planters who have used them prefer them on account of the ease with which they are applied, and their certainty of remaining on a bale just where they are placed—so that, to sum up, the Centennial Tie offers splendid advantages. In the last season the rate of increase in their use was very nearly six hundred per cent. Address the manufacturers, the Lindsay-Saylor Wire Company, St. Louis, Mo.

THE QUICKEST TIME EAST.—The Great Jackson Route is now making the quickest time to New York ever known, leaving New Orleans daily at 5.45 P. M. and arriving at New York at 6.35 A. M. Allowing for the difference in time between the two cities, the run is made in the unprecedented time of fifty-nine and three-quarter hours. This quick time is made only by the Great Jackson Route, and is the result of its enterprise in rebuilding its track with steel rails and new ties at heavy expense, and the thorough system of ballasting that has been undertaken. This fast train will be of great advantage to the people of this city, which it is hoped they will show their appreciation of by their patronage. Only one change of cars, which is made at Columbus, Ohio, where breakfast is taken in the splendid dining hall at that place at 8 A. M.

This route also makes the quickest time to Boston, arriving at 2.10 P. M. Actual running time, sixty-seven and one-half hours. This makes it the most desirable route for all New England points. The time to all intermediate points is correspondingly less, thus making this the quickest and best route to all the Northern and Eastern cities.

Excursion tickets to Waukesha, Oconomowoc and all the Northwestern summer resorts, to Niagara Falls, Put-in-Bay, etc., are on sale at the lowest rates, with the quickest time made by any line, and only one change of cars.

VANDALIA LINE.—The attention of our readers and the traveling public is called to the merits of the above line. For parties going East by way of St. Louis there is no better road. Comfortable, commodious and elegant palace cars, gliding noiselessly, swiftly and safely along over a track so smooth that one is almost unconscious of motion unless he chances to look out of the window, offer for the time a home unsurpassed in splendor and luxurious ease by anything the most fastidious traveler of the present generation ever dreamed of. The popularity of this old and reliable road is constantly and steadily on the increase. The efforts of the well-known and highly respected general manager, Col. Simpson, are fully appreciated by the traveling public.

SUGAR PLANTERS.—Mr. Hugh W. Montgomery is agent for guano and phosphates for cane-growers. This enriching material has been brought to such a state of perfection that it not only increases the growth of the cane, but also adds greatly to the quality. Cane growing in ground which has been treated with Pine Island Guano will yield a larger supply, and richer, sweeter sugar than any other fertilizer, or any other treatment, no matter how rich nor how scientifically handled; can produce, even under the most fortunate circumstances. Mr. Montgomery is the agent in this section of the South, and can be found at 24 Common street, where he will always be glad to see his friends—the sugar planters of Louisiana.

THE Louisville, Nashville and Great Southern railroad has succeeded beyond the expectations of the most exacting traveler in placing every possible comfort and luxury in the hand of every man, woman and child who steps upon their trains. Lying in the very heart of the whole country, their ability to reach any place, north, south, east or west, is unequaled. Mr. Charles P. Atmore, their gentlemanly general passenger agent, is a perfect encyclopedia of railroad knowledge, and with the regular good nature and quickest of pens will furnish every one all points they need to know.

MR. H. T. LAFFITTE, who has been connected with the Publishing House for the last two years, has undertaken to carry on the book business at the old stand, 142 Camp street. Most of our friends know him, and we hope he will be sustained as he deserves. All orders for books should in future be addressed to him. Attention is directed to his advertisements.

THE GRAND HOTEL, of New York, centrally and conveniently located on Broadway and Thirty-First street, near the new elevated road, is the most popular and best of the European plan hotels in that fashionable quarter. The cost of living at the Grand has been materially reduced, and the prices are as moderate as at any other first-class hotel.—Boston Courier.

STONE IN THE BLADDER
RELIEVED BY THE
BUFFALO LITHIA WATER
AFTER THE LIFE OF THE PATIENT WAS DESPAIRED OF BY HIS MEDICAL ADVISERS. THE STONE DISSOLVED IN THREE HOURS IN A GLASS OF THE LITHIA WATER.

POINT COUPEE, LA., April 3, 1878.

MR. THOMAS F. GOODE: By request I give you the following history of my case: Two years ago I began to suffer with severe pain in my kidneys, and to have periodical attacks—about two a week—which caused the most excruciating agony, from which I was habitually relieved by the discharge of a stone from four to six grains in weight. There was never entire freedom from the pain in the kidneys. In eighteen months I discharged seven large stones, besides quantities of smaller stones and sand. As the result of this protracted and great suffering, my general health was reduced to so low a condition that my physicians advised me that I had nothing to hope for from medicine—that my case was a hopeless one—and I looked for relief only in death. In this state of things, about six months ago I was advised by Mr. I. L. Lyons, a druggist of New Orleans, to try the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, Spring No. 2. A week after I began to use it I had a slight attack, in which I passed two small stones. Pinching one of these in a glass of the Water, in three hours I found it dissolved to a fine dust, which gave me confidence, and I persevered in its use. I have had no attack since. The pain in my kidneys has entirely disappeared. I have regained my usual weight, and my general health is perfectly restored. I very cheerfully acknowledge my indebtedness for my life and the comfort which I now enjoy to this great health-giving Water. Respectfully, C. WOLFF.

This Water, in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, can be had at the Springs, and of I. L. LYONS, Wholesale Druggist, 42 and 44 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

COMMENDABLE PROMPTITUDE.

In the Chickasaw Messenger, of Okolona, Miss., we find the following additional evidence of the prompt manner in which the Mobile Life settles losses:

OKOLONA, MISS., June 24, 1878.

Col. Wm. Hardy, General Agent of the Mobile Life Insurance Company:

DEAR SIR—As the guardian of Misses Kate and Lizzie Myers, I have this day received, of the Mobile Life Insurance Company the sum of $2,500 in payment of policy No. 6812 on the life of the late Maj. Simon Myers. The sincere thanks of myself and of those I represent are due the company for not only promptly paying the above sum, but for paying it before the same was due. There is no company more prompt and faithful in the discharge of its obligations, and I take pleasure in recommending it to the public as entirely solvent, perfectly reliable, well officered, ably managed, and as the special friend of the widow and the orphan. Very truly,

GREENWOOD LEON, Guardian.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

GET THE GENUINE ARTICLE.—The great popularity of "Wilbor's Compound of Cod Liver Oil and Lime" has induced some unprincipled persons to attempt to palm off a simple article of their own manufacture, on any person who is suffering from Coughs, Colds or Consumption, about the only manufactures, but any person who is suffering from Coughs, Colds or Consumption should be careful where they purchase this article. It requires no puffing. The results of its use are its best recommendations; and the proprietor has ample evidence on file of the extraordinary success in pulmonary complaints. The Phosphate of Lime possesses a most marvelous healing power, as continued with the pure Cod Liver Oil by Dr. Wilbor. This medicine is regularly prescribed by the medical faculty. Sold by A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston, and all druggists.

THE GREAT FAMILY MEDICINE.—Dr. Wilson's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic. No case of incurable Chills has yet presented itself where this scientific and safe medicine has been employed. No case has been found so obstinate as to resist its prompt and masterly action. No man has been so reduced by malarial influences but with its use has come up perfectly reconstructed. No pills or purgative required with this medicine. WHEELOCK, FINLAY & CO., proprietors, New Orleans. For sale by all druggists.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, crap blister, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

Farm, Garden and Household.

THE AROMA OF BUTTER.

BY C. R. SCHICKE, PROFESSOR AT THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE OF DENMARK.

Is the aroma of butter due to aromatic principles pre-existing in the milk, or not? According to the generally received opinion, the aromatic principles of butter already exist in the milk as given by the cow, and pass from the milk into the cream, and from the cream into the butter, unless they be destroyed by chemical decomposition during the process of cream-raising or of churning.

My experience does not confirm this opinion. On the contrary, it puts it beyond a doubt that the aromatic principles do not exist in natural milk, and that it is the decomposition of the principles of this latter—probably of even utterly inodorous principles—that gives rise to the aroma of butter. If the temperature of the milk when set for cream be from 10° to 12° C. (50° to 53.6° F.) or more, it decomposes, forming lactic acid and several other new principles, among them aromatic principles; and it needs but to churn the cream to obtain an aromatic butter. If, on the other hand, the temperature of the milk at such time be near freezing point, the decomposition necessary for the production of aromatic principles is held in check, and consequently the aroma of butter obtained from fresh cream is so feeble that it is not perceptible to persons accustomed to butters prepared as above indicated. In the same way as French butters are made at present. But if it be desired to obtain a more aromatic butter, all that is required is to place the cream in circumstances favorable for lactic fermentation, and a few hours will produce the required result.

In either case the aroma formed may be more or less agreeable; that all depends on the fundamental principles of the milk, on the quantity of the principles necessary for the formation of aromatic principles that are present, and on the method of manipulation employed.

In either case, again, the appearance of aromatic principles is accompanied by that of lactic acid. Whether the aromatic principles sought for in butter are produced by lactic fermentation, or by several fermentations combined, I do not know.

In practice it will often be noticed that lactic fermentation is accompanied by alcoholic fermentation, and even by butyric fermentation. What, then, is the chemical composition of the aromatic principle so much admired in butter? Is it an alcohol, a compound ether, or perhaps even a fatty acid, nauseous in a state of concentration, but agreeable in a more moderate form? I know not. The fact that the valued aroma soon becomes rancid, and that it is always met with in conjunction with fatty matters, leads one to suppose that there is some relation between the fatty acids and the aroma. To solve this interesting question elaborate experiments would be required; but meanwhile this is certain: that without decomposition there is no aroma, at least no aroma in the ordinary sense of the word.

Such are the observations on the aroma of butter which I made in the course of my teaching at the dairy attached to the Copenhagen Royal Agricultural College some few years ago.—London Farmer.

COVERING MANURE.

It is remarkable that more attention is not given to the subject of covering manure from the weather, and especially from too much rain. Those who have given the matter particular attention have found that manure so protected is worth double that which is left out in the open air. Two loads for one is a profit few farmers can afford to lose. There is no question which so vitally concerns the farmer as this one of manure. Much that he does has reference to it. Straw is not to be sold because it makes manure. Stock is fed through the winter for the express purpose of manure-making. Articles which scarcely pay to send to market are nevertheless taken to the city in order that manure may be brought back as a return load; and yet the whole of the manure made remains all the season exposed to the sun, wind and rain, until it has diminished one-half in value.

The trouble is probably that few really believe that exposed manures undergo this loss. But the matter has been so thoroughly tested to admit of a doubt. We know of scores farmers who did not themselves believe it until by actual experiment they found out its truth.

In arranging farm buildings it will pay well to look sharply to the preservation of the manure as to the hay or grain; and those who have their buildings already finished without these manurial arrangements will find that twenty-five or fifty dollars spent on boards for a covered shed will rank among the best investments ever made.—American Stock Journal.

SINGULAR PROPERTY OF TOMATO LEAVES.—I planted a patch of corn, writes M. Ferray, of the Society of Horticulture, Valparaiso, and ice-free grew well and strongly. They had just commenced to bud when they were invaded by the potcilla, which insects were followed, as frequently happens, by ants. The latter I succeeded in driving off by placing some tomato leaves around the trunks and branches of peach-trees I might preserve them from the rays of the sun, which were very powerful. My surprise was great, upon the following day, to find the trees entirely freed from their enemies. Not one remained except here and there where a curled leaf prevented the tomato from exercising its influence. These leaves I carefully curtailed, placing upon them fresh ones from the tomato vines, with the result of banishing the last insect and enabling the trees to grow with full vigor. Wishing to carry still further my experiment, I steeped in water some fresh leaves of the tomato, and sprinkled with this infusion other plants, roses and oranges. In two days these were also free from the innumerable insects which covered them, and I felt sure that, had I used the same means with my melon-patch, I should have met the same result. I therefore deem it a duty I owe to the Society of Horticulture to make known this singular and useful property of tomato leaves."

CURING MEATS.—I have been requested to publish a recipe which I gave in these columns a few years ago for curing beef and hams for family use. To each one hundred pounds of beef make a pickle from eight pounds of salt, four pounds of sugar, one-half ounce of saltpeter and one ounce of saleratus; to which add four gallons of water, or enough to cover the beef when packed snugly in the barrel. Boil the pickle and skim it, then allow it to cool until about blood-warm, or even cooler, before pouring it over the beef. This should keep the beef sweet all summer without getting too salt or too tough to be good; but if there are any indications of its growing stale, at any time, take the beef out and wash it, scald the brine and skim it, and add one or two pounds of salt, then pack it again.

Some may wish for a little more saltpeter, but if putting it down for my own use solely I should prefer to leave the saltpeter out and add a little more saleratus, rather than add any more saltpeter. If making the pickle for hams, I should prefer to use a pint of molasses, instead of the sugar. Let any one once try beef or ham cured in this way and they will be sorry to ever have to return to the old fashioned way of curing by the use of salt alone, which makes the best beef in a few months seem like a well salted leather apron, and makes the ham, when boiled, look as if it was "sugar-coated," instead of "sugar-cured."—Boston Journal.

ONIONS SOWN IN FALL.—Early onions yield so handsome a profit that a method which dispenses with the cost of sets, and brings the crop even earlier, is worth practicing, even though it involves risk during an unusually severe winter. Five years ago I found that in this very severe latitude it was possible to raise even the silver-skin onion from fall sowings. The ground should be a location with sufficient descent to afford natural drainage, so that water will in no event stand upon it. Seed should be sown about the tenth of August, so that the plants will be in their prime as the winter comes on. The sowing should be deeper than usual, because the soil is apt to dry deeper than usual at this season, and the crop should be deeply rooted to winter well. Clean tillage should be given till winter sets in. Just before winter, with the hand hoe or hand-cultivator, throw a little furrow over the row, and after the ground is frozen cover the surface of the whole field with coarse hay or other protection. Further South this may not be necessary. As soon as the frost is out of the ground, uncover and begin tillage. In no other way have we been able to raise such large and such early onions; but, like every other new method, I would recommend its trial, the first season, on a limited scale. In most sections of the country it will doubtless prove successful.—Rural's Garden Manual.

No. 1.—Scrape clean and slice three carrots and three turnips, peel three onions; fry the whole with a little butter till it turns rather yellow; then add also two heads of celery cut in pieces, three or four leeks, also cut in pieces; stir and fry the whole for about six minutes; when fried, add also one clove of garlic, salt, pepper, two cloves, and two shalks of parsley; cover with three quarts of water; keep on rather a slow fire, skim off the scum carefully, and simmer for about three hours, then strain and use.

No. 2.—Seven ounces of carrot, ten ounces of parsnip, ten ounces of potatoes cut in thin slices; one and one-quarter ounce of butter, five teaspoonfuls of flour, a teaspoonful of powle mustard, salt and pepper to taste; the yolks of two eggs; rather more than two quarts of water. Boil the vegetables in the water two and one-half hours; stir them often, and if the water boils away too quickly add more, as there should be two quarts of soup when done. Mix up in a basin the butter and flour, mustard, salt and pepper, with a teaspoonful of cold water; stir in the soup and boil ten minutes. Have ready the yolks of the eggs in the tureen, pour on, stir well, and serve. Time, three hours. Sufficient for eight persons.—Rural New Yorker.

CARE OF CANARY BIRDS.—Let the cage be taken to a draught of cold air, or strike the bird. Give nothing to healthy birds but rape and canary seed, water, cuttle-fish bone, and gravel-paper or sand on the floor of the cage. No hemp seed. A bath three times a week. The room should not be overheated—never above seventy degrees. When moulting (shedding feathers) keep warm, and avoid all draughts of air. Give plenty of German paste and; a little hard-boiled egg, grated with cracker grated fine, is excellent. Feed at a certain hour in the morning. By observing these simple rules birds may be kept in fine condition for years. For birds that are sick or have lost their song, procure bird-ointment at a bird store. Very many cage-birds who mean to give their pets all things to make them bright and happy, and at the same time are guilty of great cruelty in regard to perches. The perches in a cage should be each one of different size, and the smallest as large as a pipe stem. If perches are of the right sort, no trouble is ever had about the bird's toe-nails growing too long, and of all things keep the perches clean.—Hoosier.

HOW TO COOK A TERRAPIN.—Put him in boiling water for five minutes, to loosen the skin; then take him out, skin him, and replace him in the hot water. When the claws become soft it is sufficiently boiled. Take him out and remove the bottom shell first, cut off the head and claws, and take out the gall and sand-bag, then cut up the remainder. Cut the entrail into pieces about half an inch. Be careful to preserve all the juice. Put in a stew-pan, make a dressing of flour, yolks of two hard-boiled eggs, a third of a pound of the very best butter, a proper proportion of salt, red pepper, a large wine glass of Madeira or sherry (to each terrapin,) and a small quantity of rich cream. All of the ingredients to be of the best quality. Dish promptly, and serve smoking hot. The yow-terrapin is the best, besides furnishing eggs, which are a great addition. Some persons have been known to season with spices, but this is not to the taste of epicures.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.—Experiments recently made in different parts of the world have demonstrated that the concussion of the air will drive insects from gardens, orchards and vineyards. This theory is of American origin, and, we believe, was first discovered by an intelligent Southern gentleman. Firing guns near fruit-trees, about grape-vines, etc., produces the result mentioned. This is a cheap and convenient method of deliverance from the innumerable insects that make war upon the interests of the human family.—Georgia Grange.

The cultivation of cassava is receiving considerable attention in this section, and is likely to become an important product. Its uses cannot ever be estimated as food for poor men and all kinds of stock. The cultivation requires but little labor, and the yield is very great. The variety cultivated here is the sweet kind, which is said to be the best. A gentleman has received a letter from the North asking information about this plant with a view of manufacturing starch and tapioca.—Sunland, Fla.) Tribune.

TO FRESHEN FLOWERS.—Flowers nearly always begin to fade and droop after being kept for twenty hours in water; a few may lie revived by substituting fresh, but all may be restored by the use of hot water. For this purpose place the flowers in scalding water, deep enough to cover about one third of the length of the stems. By the time this is cold the flowers will have become erect and fresh. Then cut off the shrunken ends of the stems and put them into cold water.

An old darkey was endeavoring to explain his unfortunate condition. "Yon see," remarked Sambo, "it was in this way, as far as I can remember; fust my fader died, den my mudder married agin; and den my mudder died, and my fader married agin; and somehow, I doesn't seem to hab no parents at all, nor no home, nor nuffin."

STILL VICTORIOUS.

Many years have passed since Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder was first offered to the public, and its superiority over all Baking Powders for making wholesome light, sweet bread and biscuits has been established. It is still victorious, standing to-day to the estimation of thousands as the only safe and reliable powder.

THE TRIUMPH

Steam COTTON BAND PULLER

AND BUCKLER.

THE ATTENTION of the Compress owners in the United States is called to the

NEW AND IMPORTANT INVENTION.

THIS STEAM PULLER has been thoroughly tested, and has demonstrated the fact that we can apply to Cotton Bands any required tension and BUCKLE THEM AT EXACTLY THE HIGHEST POINT REACHED, and no slipping of the bands through the buckle, all the bands being drawn and buckled to the same tension without running out a perfect band, and without regard to the size, weight or shape of the bale.

THE BUCKLE is simply perfect in its mechanism, strong, and can be furnished on the order of a day for the million. The old bands are used the same as the bale, and will buckle to the same.

THE PULLER can be attached to any screw style of press, and at so small a cost that is slight compared to the benefit to be derived by the Compress. It is simple, and can be operated by negro labor, and with no danger of getting out of order. The speed is equal or greater than can be done by hand.

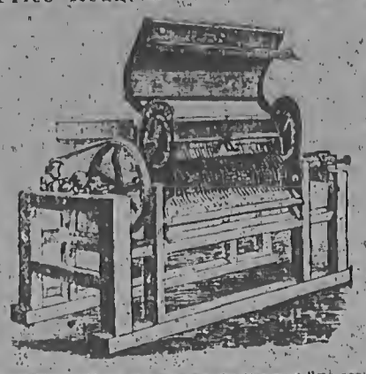
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster, with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same time, while economizing steam or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

—Dr. Muirhead has at length succeeded in applying the duplex system to submarine telegraphic cables, notwithstanding the obvious difficulty of the task. He has doubled the sending power of a cable, at a cost far below what the cost of a new cable would involve.

—The treatment of the sulphureted and arsenical ores of nickel consists of three stages: First, the concentration of the ores by a series of roasting and fusions, and the formation of a matte or speiss; second, the transformation of this matte or speiss into an oxide of nickel; oxide of cobalt; and, lastly, the reduction of the nickel oxide and the silicatization of the oxide of cobalt.

—The "sparrow war" now raging between the older and younger ornithologists is bringing out some interesting observations on the habits of the English sparrow. Dr. T. M. Brewer, the veteran ornithologist and student of the habits of birds, is an ardent advocate of the English sparrow, and relates in the "Proceedings" of the Boston Society of Natural History the good done by these birds in ridding the trees on Boston Common of the sulphur crested caterpillar (Orgyia leucostigma). Dr. Hayes also stated his belief that the English sparrow does not interfere with or drive away our singing birds. On the other hand, the members of the Nuttall Ornithological Club have noted that the bird is a nuisance, and this probably expresses the general sense of our ornithologists as a class.

—Mr. Dumas, the distinguished chemist, in giving an account to a scientific society in Paris of the perfaction of gases stated that the specimen of oxygen produced by Mr. Pictet, of Geneva, was the size of a hen's egg, and resembled snow in its solid form, and water in the liquid form. Theoretically he had concluded that the density of liquid oxygen would be about the same as that of water; and this has been confirmed by experiment. As regards hydrogen, Mr. Dumas explained that it was liquefied under a pressure of 650 atmospheres with cold intense; and by evaporating the liquid obtained, the solid condition, showing the color of blue steel, was arrived at. Many years ago this possibility was foreseen, and the most advanced chemists admitted the existence of a theoretical metal—hydrogen. "This confirmation of the metallic nature of hydrogen," continued M. Dumas, "is not to be regarded merely as a theoretical result useful to pure science; it appears to be of great importance for the future of industry. A certain knowledge of the metallic nature of hydrogen will give a certain influence on metallurgy, of which manufacturing arts will take advantage."

The French have a noted proverb: "It is the first step that costs."

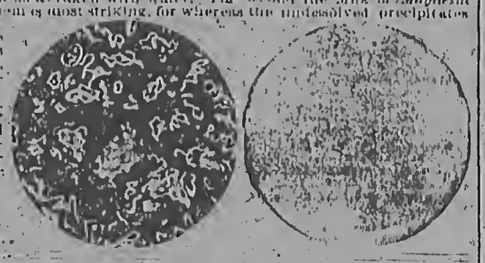
MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will be found as a laxative when used as directed, to be also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a true decimal part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia as we sell it. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia displays all the appearance of a slightly vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates with fact perfectly dissolved.



Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others that already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing.

A Grasshopper.

On the top of the Royal Exchange in London is a curious weather-vane not like any other in England, or perhaps in the world. It is a huge grasshopper, and the following account shows how it came to be put up there:

About three hundred and fifty years ago a woman, with a little baby in her arms, was trudging along a country lane. Presently, after looking to see that no one was watching her, she climbed over a gate into the field, and, wrapping the baby in its little shawl, she laid it down in the grass so gently as not to awake it, and then, never even looking behind her, she climbed over the gate again into the lane, on her journey.

The baby soon woke and began to cry; and it cried for a long, long time. And at last, tired and hungry, and hot with the sun, for it was a fine summer's day, it was wearied out, and dropped off to sleep again. But God had heard the voice of the lad.

By and by down the lane came a school boy. He was whistling away, as happy as ever he could be; he had come out of school, and was going home. He lived at the farm house a little way further up the lane. Now he gathered a few primroses, now he had a shy at an bird; but just as he came to the gate, over which the woman had climbed, he heard a grasshopper chirping away so loudly that he sprang over the gate to catch him—and there was the baby fast asleep! Far more pleased than if he had caught a hundred grasshoppers, the boy took up the little fellow, and ran home with his prize. The kind farmer's wife, although she had many children of her own, at once determined to keep the little orphan who had been saved from death by a grasshopper.

Years passed away, and the baby became a strong boy; the boy grew to be a man; he went to London and became a merchant. God blessed all he did, and he rose to be the most noted man in the city. Queen Elizabeth was then on the throne, and often did she send for Sir Thomas Gresham—for the little deserted boy had become a knight—to consult him on the great affairs of State.

About three hundred years ago Sir Thomas Gresham founded the Exchange. The Queen came to dine with him, and laid the first stone. And there upon the topmost pinnacle Sir Thomas placed a grasshopper; and there it is to-day, to tell the busy, toiling city that almighty God can hear the infant's cry, and can save a valuable life by even such a little thing as a grasshopper.

Christ conquers all in us; he conquers all for us; he has done the work of salvation freely, fully and eternally.—W. Romain.

HIGH COMMENDATION.

GENTLEMEN: This is to certify that I have examined, analyzed and tested your Dr. Price's Special Flavoring Extracts, and find the same strong, fine, made of good material, and well put up in bottles of full measure. Your fruit coloring is free from any deleterious substance. Therefore I gladly commend the above-named products of yours for family use.

Respectfully, PROF. M. DELAFONTAINE.

Religious Notices.

HEALING SPRINGS CAMP MEETING will begin on Thursday evening, August 22, and continue several days. The encampment is located near the mineral springs, and is a delightful summer resort. Ministers in delicate health will find this a good opportunity to visit the springs and recruit their strength. Hacks leave Buckatunna station, Mobile and Ohio railroad, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays; distance, thirteen miles. Ministers will be taken from the station to the camp ground and returned there free of charge. Those who design coming will please inform me what day they will be at the station. Meals can be obtained at the hotel at fifty cents. Lodging, fifty cents.

18 W. H. WILD, P. C.

GREENSBORO DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Bishop Keener will hold the above District Conference at Belmont, including the first Sabbath in August, the meeting to begin on Thursday before, with preaching at eleven o'clock. McDowell is the nearest depot on the Alabama Central railroad. Trains pass there about seven o'clock in the evening and about half-past four in the morning. Conveyances will be there on the arrival of the trains, going both ways, to carry delegates a distance of four miles. It is very desirable that the attendance be full and prompt.

11 A. H. MITCHELL, P. E.

THE time for holding the camp meeting at the Trenton camp ground, in the Trenton circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, embraces the third Sunday in September, commencing on Thursday night before. This meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan. Provision will be made for the preachers and their horses; also conveyance at Morton, on the twelfth of September, to convey the preachers to the camp ground. They are invited to attend this camp meeting. (4) R. A. SIDLEY, Pastor.

THERE will be a camp meeting near Hickory station, Newton circuit, beginning on Thursday night, September 5, embracing the second Sunday. The ministers of Meridian and Brandon districts are heartily invited, also all others who can come. Conveyances for ministers will be provided from depot to the camp ground.

BORE, B. DOWSER, P. C.

THE camp meeting at Sims' chapel, St. Stephen's circuit, Alabama Conference, will begin on Thursday night before the third Sunday in September. (11) W. H. MORRIS, P. C.

THE District Conference for Selma district will begin at eight o'clock P. M., with a sermon by Rev. J. F. Ellis, in Uniontown.

OUR CHILDREN.

Stepping forth on life's rough way,
Father, guide them;
Oh, we know not woe ere long
May befall them.
'Neath the shadow of thy wing,
Father, hide them;
Waking, sleeping, Lord, we pray,
Go beside them.

When in prayer they cry to thee
Then wilt hear them;
From the stains of sin and shame
Then wilt clear them.
Mid the quicksands and the rocks
Then will steer them
In temptation, trial and grief
Be thy near them.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—The Agricultural Department furnishes the following figures indicating the condition of the cotton crop compared with June figures, which is a correction of the statement furnished yesterday: North Carolina 84, a loss of 5; South Carolina 104, a gain of 5; Georgia 105, a gain of 4; Florida 100, gain of 2; Alabama 102, a gain of 1; Mississippi 98, unchanged; Louisiana 95, a loss of 5; Texas 106, a gain of 2; Arkansas 91, a loss of 7; Tennessee 98, a gain of 1.

WHEELING, July 17.—Thermometer 104 in the shade this afternoon. Several cases of sunstroke reported.

ST. LOUIS, July 17.—The weather continues intensely hot. The deaths in Saturday to last night numbered 40, of this number probably two-thirds were dissipated persons.

MILWAUKEE, July 17.—The heat of yesterday was very oppressive. Thermometer 90, to 101 in the shade. The session of the Chamber of Commerce. Sweat is generally suspended. One hundred and three sunstroke reported yesterday.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 17.—Three sunstrokes occurred here this afternoon. Two of the stricken men were United States mail carriers, and the third was the driver of a mail wagon. The heat is excessive, and has necessitated a partial suspension of business.

CINCINNATI, July 18.—The mixed accommodation and freight train of the east yesterday, near Montpelier, Indiana, crashed through the bridge over the Tippecanoe river. The locomotive and twenty two cars plunged into the river and were completely wrecked. The escape of passengers and railroad men was miraculous.

The bridge-tender, who was standing on the ties, was killed; also, the engineer. No other lives were lost, though many persons were carried down with the cars. A number of passengers were injured, but none seriously, so far as known.

GALVESTON, July 18.—A News special from Austin says: Pryor and Hall, charged with robbing a car on the Texas Pacific road several months ago, were convicted to-day and sentenced to the penitentiary. Several alleged accessories acquitted.

NEW YORK, July 19.—A report prevalent yesterday that a yellow fever had broken out among the sailors on the United States men-of-war Colorado and Vermont and the officers of the navy yard.

An investigation by the Board of Health showed that there had been in the naval hospital six cases of a fever pronounced to be yellow fever, three of which proved fatal.

Dr. Michaelson denies that the cases are yellow fever and says that the patients were treated for bilious fever. Three patients are now in the hospital—Michael Flynn and G. F. Sailors, and Michael Carroll, seaman. The primary symptoms in every case are those of remittent fever, but some of the physicians fear the symptoms of the disease may be unhealthy, yellow fever, and may be developed at any moment. Meanwhile every precaution has been taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

WASHINGTON, July 21.—Reports received by Surgeon General Woodworth of the Marine Hospital service show, during the week ending July 13, deaths from yellow fever, Havana and six from smallpox—a large increase in the former and a corresponding decrease in the latter.

Advices received from Melbourne, Australia, in 1877, and invited the present exhibitors to participate.

PARIS, July 21.—The miners' strike at Anzin continues. Efforts to settle disturbances having failed, there have been some arrests for picketing, but the strikers are generally quiet. Labor troubles are reported at Bordeaux, Marseilles and St. Etienne of an insignificant character.

LONDON, July 22.—A special from Rome says: Four thousand people were present at the annexation meeting there yesterday. In the evening a demonstration was made before the Austrian embassy. Garibaldi telegraphed to the meeting as follows: "Enslaved people have the right to revolt. Men of Trieste, take to the mountains."

The anti-ministerial journals of Vienna warn Italy that it is dangerous to play with fire.

PARIS, July 23.—In the House of Commons, this afternoon, Sir Stafford Northcote, chancellor of the exchequer, announced the betrothal of the Duke of Connaught, Queen Victoria's third son, with Princess Marie Louise of Prussia, daughter of Prince Frederick Charles. The chancellor said he would move on Thursday the provision of a grant for the duke. Sir Charles Dilke, Radical, gave notice he would submit an amendment reciting that there is no constitutional precedent for such application.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, July 17.—The funeral of the late Queen Mercedes took place to-day.

The obsequies of Queen Mercedes were celebrated in the Church of San Francisco to day with great pomp. Forty thousand persons were present, including the embassadors, presidents of the chambers and the entire courts. Nine ships assisted in the requiem mass.

PARIS, July 18.—Le Siecle has been fined $400 at the suit of the prince imperial for the publication of a statement respecting Napoleon the Third's civil list, charging an appropriation of crown property. An objection taken by the defendant to the prince being so styled in the summons, and to the omission of the family name of Bonaparte, was overruled by the court.

Nearly all the class juries of the Exposition have completed work and sent awards to the group juries. The United States will get a large proportion of the grand prizes. The number of strangers here is diminishing rapidly. Some hotels have returned to ante-exposition prices.

LONDON, July 19.—A dispatch from Rome to Reuter says: Negotiations are now in an advanced stage whereby the papal nuncio, residing at Munich, will have jurisdiction over the Catholic Church and bishops in Prussia, and that this compromise would probably lead to a conciliatory arrangement between Prussia and the Vatican.

ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT, July 19.—Emigration from Egypt to Cyprus is proceeding on a large scale, and it is probable a service by steamers will be established between this port and Cyprus.

LONDON, July 20.—The London correspondent of the Edinburg Scotsman says the British cabinet has resolved not to dissolve Parliament this year.

Hot weather prevails here and on the Continent. The heat is very severe in Paris, and in some parts of the Exposition building the temperature is unendurable.

The British commissioners to the Paris Exposition officially notified the other commissioners of the International Exhibition to be held at Melbourne, Australia, in 1880, and invited the present exhibitors to participate.

PARIS, July 21.—The miners' strike at Anzin continues. Efforts to settle disturbances having failed, there have been some arrests for picketing, but the strikers are generally quiet. Labor troubles are reported at Bordeaux, Marseilles and St. Etienne of an insignificant character.

The Berlin Congress.

SUBSTANCE OF THE PEACE TREATY.

LONDON, July 14.—The following is the substance of the articles of the treaty of peace concluded by the Berlin Congress:

Article 1. Bulgaria is constituted an autonomic tributary principality under the suzeralty of the Sultan, with Christian government and national militia.

Art. 2. The principality is limited on the south by the Balkans.

Art. 3. The prince shall be elected by the population, and confirmed by the Porte and powers. No member of the reigning European dynasty shall be prince. In the event of a vacancy the new prince will be elected under the same conditions.

Art. 4. The plan of government will be prepared by the Assembly of Notables convoked at Tirnova before election of the prince. The rights of Turks, Roumanians, Greeks and others will be taken an account of in whatever relates to the election or government.

Art. 5. The following shall form the basis of the public law of Bulgaria: Distinction of religious belief or confession shall not operate against any one as a reason of exclusion or incapacity in what concerns the enjoyment of political rights, admission to public employment, functions or honors, or exercise of the different professions and industries.

Liberty of public profession of all creeds shall be assured to all the returned population of Bulgaria, as well as to strangers.

No trammels shall be imposed on the hierarchic organization of different communions, or their relations with their spiritual chiefs.

Art. 6. Until permanent organization is completed, Bulgaria shall be governed by provisional organization directed by Russian commissioners, who will be assisted by delegated consuls of the great powers.

Art. 7. Providing the government shall not be prolonged over nine months, by which time the organic government shall be settled and a prince elected.

Art. 8. Treaties of commerce, etc., between the Porte and other powers regarding Bulgaria remain in force. The people and commerce of all powers are to be placed on a footing of equality.

Art. 9. The tribute to the Porte shall be settled by the signatory powers at the end of the first year of the new organization. Bulgaria shall bear part of the public debt of the empire.

Article 10. The principality shall carry out the existing railway conventions between Austria, Hungaria, Servia and the Porte.

Art. 11. The Ottoman army shall evacuate Bulgaria; all fortresses shall be destroyed within a year, and new ones shall not be erected.

Art. 12. Mussulmans who removed from the principality can retain their real property by allowing it to be administered by third parties. The Turkish-Bulgarian commission shall be engaged two years with the regulation of all matters relative to the transfer of State properties and religious foundations.

Art. 13. There is formed south of the Balkans the province of Eastern Roumelia, under the direct political authority of the Sultan, having administrative authority and a Christian governor-general.

Art. 14. Fixing limits, [illegible].

Art. 15. The Sultan shall fortify the frontiers; keep troops there; employ no irregulars, nor quarter troops on the inhabitants. Internal order shall be preserved by the native gendarmerie and local militia, in the composition of which account shall be taken of the religion of the inhabitants where they are stationed, the officers to be named by the Sultan.

Art. 16. The governor may call on Turkish troops if security is menaced.

Art. 17. The governor shall be appointed for five years by the Porte, with the assent of the powers.

Art. 18. The European commission shall determine in three years the powers of the governor; also the judicial, financial and administrative requirements of the province.

Arts. 19, 20 and 21. Provide that all international arrangements applicable to Roumelia be continued in force, and insure religious liberty.

Art. 22. The Russian army in Bulgaria and Roumelia shall not exceed 50,000 men. They shall begin to evacuate that territory in nine months, three months being allowed them to complete evacuation.

Art. 23. Bosnia and Herzegovina shall be occupied and administered by Austro Hungary, with the exception of the Sandjak of Novi Bazar.

Art. 24. The independence of Montenegro is recognized.

Art. 25. Applies conditions of article 5, respecting religious liberty, to Montenegro.

Art. 26. Fixes the new frontiers of Montenegro.

Art. 27. Antivari is annexed to Montenegro. No fortifications shall be constructed, except to protect Scutari. Montenegro shall have the right of free navigation of the Boyana, but shall have no flag or ship of war. Antivari is closed to war ships of all nations. Spizza is incorporated with Dalmatia. The consuls of Austria shall protect the merchant flag of Montenegro, the latter adopting the Dalmatian maritime code.

Art. 28. Prescribes for Montenegro the same provisions as article 12, except that the Turco-Montenegrin commission continues three years.

Art. 29. The Montenegrins shall evacuate within twenty days the territory beyond the new limits of the principality.

Art. 30. Montenegro shall bear a share of the Turkish public debt proportionate to her new territory.

Art. 31. The independence of Servia is recognized on the conditions prescribed in the following article.

Art. 32. Is a repetition of article 5.

Art. 33. Laying down a new frontier of Servia, is missing.

Arts. 34 and 35. Provide that the present commercial relations, etc., of the principality with foreign countries shall continue in force until new arrangements are made.

Arts. 36 and 37. Make the same provision for Mussulman property, private and public, as article 28.

Art. 38. The Servians shall be allowed fifteen days to evacuate the territory not in the new limits.

Art. 39. The tribute to Servia shall be capitalized at the rate of the capitalization to be arranged by the powers with the Porte. Servia shall bear a share of the Turkish public debt proportionate to the territory she acquires.

Art. 40. The independence of Roumania is fixed on the conditions in the following article.

Art. 41. Is a repetition of article 5, relating to religious liberty.

Art. 42. Roumania gives back to Russia that part of Bessarabia taken under the treaty of Paris.

Art. 43. Roumania receives the Dobrudscha; also the territory south as far as the line starting east of Silistria and joining the Black Sea south of Mangalia.

Art. 44. Lines of boundary and water division shall be fixed by the European commission and Danube commission respectively.

Arts. 45, 46 and 47. Continue the present commercial relations of Roumania in force until new arrangements are made.

Art. 48. Tribute shall be capitalized at a rate arranged by the powers and the Porte.

Art. 49. Roumania supersedes the Porte, in all obligations relating to public works in that principality.

Art. 50. The fortifications on the Danube, from the iron gates to its mouth, shall be razed. No ships of war shall navigate the Danube downward from the iron gates. Guard ships of the powers at the mouth of the river may, however, ascend to Galatz.

Art. 51. The commission of the Danube, in which Roumania and Servia shall be represented, is maintained. It will exercise its powers henceforth as far as Galatz, with complete independence of territorial authority, and all arrangements relative to its rights are confirmed.

Arts. 52 and 53. Contain further regulations to regard to the Danube commission.

Art. 54. Work of removal of obstacles, which iron gates and cataracts cause to the navigation of the Danube, is intrusted to Austro Hungary.

Art. 55. The Porte engages to apply in Crete the plan of government of 1868. Analogous regulations adapted to the local requirements shall be introduced into other parts of Turkey. Special commissions of the Porte, in which the native element shall be largely represented, shall elaborate the details of these plans. The Porte before promulgating these acts, shall take advice of the European commission for Eastern Roumelia.

Art. 56. In case the agreement relative to the rectification of the frontier, provided by protocol 13 between the Porte and Greece, should not be realized, the powers are ready to offer their good services to Turkey and Greece.

Art. 57. The Porte having expressed a willingness to maintain the principle of religious liberty and give it the widest sphere, the contracting parties will take cognizance of this spontaneous declaration. In every part of the empire difference of religion should not be a motive of ostracism in anything relating to civil and political rights, admission to public offices, duties and honors, and in the exercise of all professions and industries. Every one should be admitted, without distinction of religion, to give evidence before tribunals. The practice of all religion should be entirely free. No impediment should be offered to the hierarchical organization of different communions or their spiritual chiefs. Ecclesiastics, pilgrims and monks of all nationalities travelling in European and Asiatic Turkey shall enjoy the same privileges. The right of official protection is accorded to agents of the powers in Turkey and holy places, with their religious and charitable establishments. Rights conceded to France are expressly reserved, it being understood that the status quo with respect to holy places shall not be seriously affected in any way. The monks of Mount Athos, of whatever nationality, shall maintain their possessions, and enjoy, without exception, full equality of rights and prerogatives.

The Daily Telegraph's dispatch from Berlin gives seven additional articles of the treaty of peace, making sixty-four in all. These principally relate to arrangements in Asia, which are already known.

Art. 63. Provides that the treaties of 1856 and 1871 shall be maintained in all those dispositions which are not abrogated or modified by the present treaty. This article is considered very favorable for England.

The Turkish plenipotentiaries refused to sign the treaty until the unsatisfactory state of the negotiations relative to Bosnia and Herzegovina was remedied. Count Andrassy gave guarantee that he would make amicable arrangements before entering those provinces.

Notes from South Bossier Circuit.

THE CROPS—POLITICS.—PARSONAGES—BISHOP LANE, ETC.

MR. EDITOR: The one great industry of this country is cotton-growing. We have a wet year, and the crops have suffered. More cotton has been "turned out" on account of the wet weather, than any time before in the recollection of the oldest inhabitant. Yet generally there will be a fine yield of cotton if the worm does not take it. The weed is larger in the hills than has been known since the war. Corn has been "drowned out" in many localities, but plenty, I think, will be made.

The hot season is upon us, and the grasp on the plow and the hoe is somewhat relaxed, and the people are yet farther relaxing in the way of public barbecues, at which the young people find amusement in the way of tournaments, while the older heads listen to discussions in politics.

Reading Bishop McTyeire's strong words, in a recent number of the Nashville Advocate, on parsonages tempts me to say that we have just secured one for this circuit. It has been long needed, and it is strange it was not long ago had. It is strange that every charge does not procure one. It is a paying investment to the people, and it saves the preacher a great deal of annoyance and expense. And it is all a notion that parsonages cannot be as easily procured now as at any time; for, while the money is not so plentiful, property is cheaper.

Bishop Lane, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, recently visited our town, Bellevue, and gave us a sermon. A large number of negroes and a few of our most respectable white citizens were out to hear him. The Bishop is a man of dignified appearance, and of graceful and easy manners. His face is marked by benevolence and intelligence. His sermon, delivered in a plain and direct manner, was full of good sense, good theology and good spirit. Passages of it were fair specimens of eloquence and word-painting. He gave his people some good advice in reference to dreams and other superstitions, and set before them in a subsequent address, as I was told, some plain words on the subject of morality and virtue. He told them that till their standard of morality was raised higher they might not expect to rise higher as a people. I cannot help believing the Bishop is doing good among his people. He is very popular wherever he goes—with the white people as well as with the colored. Sometimes, I learn, he is requested to preach specially to the white people.

J. W. MEDLOCK.

JULY 17, 1878.

A happy and graceful play upon words was once made by our own poet, Longfellow: A Mr. Longworth, of Cincinnati, being introduced to him one evening, some one present remarked upon the similarity of the first syllable of the two names. "Yes," said the courteous poet, "but in this case I fear Pope's lines will apply:

"'A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep or taste not the Pierian spring.'"

A professor in Leipsic University asked a student what the aurora borealis was. Putting his finger to the side of his head and looking very wise, the student said: "I know very well, but forget just now what it is." "There," said the professor, "we are in a fix. The only man in the world who ever knew what the aurora is has forgotten."

Society, my friend, is a wall of very strong masonry, as it now stands; it may be snapped in the course of a thousand years, but stormed in a day—no! You dash your head against it, you scatter your brains, and you dislodge a stone. I no longer war against society. I do war against a system in that society which is hostile to me.—Lord Lytton.

The ingenuity of the cattle thieves in Russia is something wonderful. The other day one of them entered a farm in the night, put two pairs of list shoes on a cow, and then took her home. The farmer, hearing a noise, called together his neighbors and pursued the thief, and, although they were somewhat puzzled by the absence of the cow's footprints, she was eventually recovered.

Unto them that love him, God causeth all things to work for the best. So that with him, by the heavenly light of steadfast faith, they see life even in death, with him, even in heaviness and sorrow they fail not of joy and comfort; with him, even in poverty, still affliction and trouble, they neither perish nor are forsaken.—Bishop Coverdale.

Franklin a Believer in the Bible.

MR. EDITOR: In his efforts to popularize infidelity by representing eminent men of past ages as the enemies of the Christian religion, Col. Robert J. Ingersoll some time ago represented Benjamin Franklin as a disbeliever in the Bible. Fortunately Benjamin Franklin's opinions on this topic are upon record in a speech which he delivered in 1787, in the convention that framed the federal constitution, and I here quote it in order to remove all pretext for doubt on this head. Unless Col. Ingersoll use more carefulness in his statements he is in danger of rendering himself liable to the reproach thrown out by Voltaire against Frederick the Great: "You have given some color to the slanders of the bigots, who say that no confidence can be placed in the justice or humanity of those who reject the Christian faith." It adds no sort of strength to error to show that a few men eminent for talent have espoused the cause of infidelity, since no breadth and height of superstructure can cure a defect in the foundations of a building. The lives of the most noted infidels have not been at all conspicuous for virtue. Bolingbroke, Voltaire, Rousseau and Tom Paine were destitute of the semblance of virtue, and palpably showed that the rejection of the Christian faith had not improved the tone and heightened the fervor of their personal morality. Men of sense and reflection will attach a good deal of importance to the well-authenticated, historical fact that prominent infidels have never been conspicuous for what the world, by common consent, has agreed to call virtue. "By their fruits ye shall know them" is the best rule ever given for testing creeds, and sects, and unbelievers can apply this test to the lives of men as well as the most profound scholar in the world—a circumstance that must ever constitute the bulwark of the Christian faith and the prime stumbling block to the progress of infidelity.

It is a duty as well as a "labor of love" to vindicate the fame and memory of Benjamin Franklin from the unwarrantable imputation of having been an infidel, and it is hoped the extract given from his speech will forever set the matter at rest. Benjamin Franklin was never suspected of disingenuity or shamfaction in the expression of his opinions, and was in the maturity of life in 1787, when the speech from which the quotation is made was delivered, so that it may be regarded as his fixed and settled opinion on the Christian faith. Respectfully,

A. W. BULLARD.

"In this situation of this assembly—groping, as it were, in the dark, to find political truth, and scarce able to distinguish it when presented to us—how has it happened, sir, that we have not hitherto once thought of humbly applying to the Father of light to illuminate our understandings? In the beginning of the contest with Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for the divine protection. Our prayers, sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a superintending Providence in our favor. To that kind Providence we owe this happy opportunity of consulting in peace on the means of establishing our future national felicity. And have we now forgotten that powerful Friend? Or do we imagine we no longer need his assistance? I have lived, sir, a long time; and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, and that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid? We have been assured, sir, in the sacred writings that 'except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it.' I firmly believe this; and I also believe that without his concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel; we shall be divided by our little, partial, local interests; our projects will be confounded, and we ourselves shall become a reproach and a by-word down to future ages. And, what is worse, mankind may hereafter, from this unfortunate instance, despair of establishing government by human wisdom, and leave it to chance, war and conquest."

NOT AT HOME.

Not far, not far from the kingdom,
Yet in the shadow of sin
How many are coming and going,
How few are entering in!

Not far from the golden gateway,
Where voices whisper and wait
Fearing to enter in boldly,
So linger still at the gate.

Catching the strain of the music
Floating so sweetly along,
Knowing the song they are singing,
Yet joining not in the song.

Seeing the walls and the beauty,
The infinite love and the light
Yet weary, and lonely, and waiting
Out in the desolate night!

Out in the dark and the danger,
Out in the night and the cold:
Though he is urging to lead them
Tenderly into the fold.

Not far, not far from the kingdom,
'Tis only a little space
But it may be at last and forever,
Out of the resting-place.

A ship came sailing and sailing
Over a murmuring sea,
And just in sight of the haven
Down in the waves went she.

And the spars and the broken timbers
Were cast on a sunbeat strand,
And many went down in the darkness
Not far, not far from the land!

Perfection—No. 1.

Perhaps no word in theology has given rise to more controversy than the word perfection, principally because speakers and writers have not accurately defined the sense in which they have used this very emphatic term. The term is scriptural, and its scriptural meaning must be sought out; or if a writer use the word in a sense peculiar to himself, or the subject about which he writes, he should give that meaning in unambiguous language, and much of the annoyance from a misunderstanding of its use would be avoided. We propose to examine the word, and see if we cannot find a definition that will justify its use.

Teleo, from Telos, signifies to finish or complete, and in its various applications in Scripture, where it is rendered perfect, it signifies the completion, perfection or finishing of the thing under consideration. Suppose, therefore, we say a thing is perfect when it fully answers the end for which it was made. We believe this rule a good one, and will apply to all things, from the lowest to the highest—from a grain of sand to the tallest archangel. Thus, when God had finished, completed or perfected the work of creation; he saw it was good—that is, every part perfectly answered the end for which he had given it a being, and consequently, without violence to language, might be denominated perfect. The same rule will apply to all things. Those members of my body, answering the end for which they were given me, are perfect. The law of God is denominated a perfect law, because it perfectly answers the end God had in making it known. The gospel of Christ is a perfect system of salvation, because it saves to the uttermost, and therefore perfectly answers the end of its blessed Author. The only inquiry, therefore, in order to find out if a thing be perfect, is to ascertain: 1. For what end was it made? 2. Does it fully answer that end? If, on inquiry, you find it does, you may safely pronounce it perfect. Now let us see if the above definition will apply to man. In order to this we must first inquire: For what purpose was man made? When we examine the structure of his body and the powers of his mind we find him constituted and qualified to hold a middle rank in creation—elevated above the brute, but not on an equality with God or angels. In this position there were certain ends to be accomplished. As a rational creature, and dependent on his Creator, he must have owed certain duties to him as Lord and Master of his being; as a social being he must have owed certain duties to his fellows. Superior to the brute creation, he was given dominion over them; but as a finite being he must have been limited in his views, his powers and his privileges. Being a compound creature, he possessed corporeal and intellectual powers, and was evidently designed for corporeal and intellectual enjoyment; with all the means of those enjoyments in easy reach, though from his subordinate relation he was dependent on his God for the use of those means.

If we credit the scriptural account of man in his first formation—the place where he was put, the labor he was required to perform, as well as the privileges that were granted him, and the powers with which he was invested—we shall find him possessed of all those qualities of mind and body requisite to the perfection of his nature. We assume it, then, as an indisputable position that man was originally designed for complete happiness of both body and mind, and that to endure forever. We unquestionably find him fitted for that end. Perfectly pure, everything by which he was surrounded free from pollution, was well calculated to administer to his happiness. Neither his body nor his soul was subject to suffering or pain of any kind. He was, therefore, perfectly qualified to answer the end for which he was commanded into being. His physical, moral and intellectual powers, all moving in harmony with each other, and beautifully adapted to surrounding objects, could not but respond to the voice of his Creator in perfect, holy obedience, and in grateful acknowledgment of his paternal love and goodness; hence the praise, which he continually offered up with his lips, must have accorded with the pure emotions of his soul. Therefore, while in this state, he was perfectly qualified to answer all the purposes for which he was created. And it was only necessary for him to subject his will to the will of God to continue that perfect happiness for which he was destined, and unquestionably qualified to perfectly and without any interruption to enjoy. It would be shockingly absurd to say he was not perfect because he was not so fixed, either by some inscrutable law of his being, or by surrounding circumstances, which prevented him from doing wrong; for the same order of things which in their own nature would have prevented him from doing wrong, would have rendered it absolutely impossible for him to do right, by depriving him of that essential element of his nature—freedom of the will. This, indeed, constituted the highest perfection of his nature. The power to do right necessarily implies a power to do wrong. So man was constituted for perfect and willing obedience, and in the exercise of the powers of mind, heart and will, in humble, cheerful, prompt obedience—meeting every duty in the divine order—would have continued perfect.

In my next I shall endeavor to show that man, under grace, may so fully answer the end of his being as to be denominated perfect.

The Old Paths.

MR. EDITOR: Let me thank you for your article, "Too Intensely Respectable," in the ADVOCATE of June 27. It was timely, to the point, and just what was needed, not only by the church of which your "esteemed friend" is a member, but by many other of our churches. Please follow that article up with others in the same line. They are needed. Old-fashioned Methodism, in many communities, seems to be dying out. Preachers apparently care more for their rhetoric than for the souls of dying sinners—they had rather please the ear than touch the heart. They not only withhold strong meat, but they even refuse the milk of which the apostle speaks, giving their people a sort of preaching that reminds one of the whites of eggs beaten to a froth and sweetened with a little sugar. They avoid all reference to hell and the damnation of sinners, lest they offend some man who is a liberal contributor to their support. They will not denounce dancing and reveling, lest some giddy young people go to other churches where such things are tolerated. They seem to regard the number of members as of more importance than zeal and piety. They prefer two or three hundred names on the roll to fifty or sixty God-fearing Christians, whose souls have been soundly converted, and whose hearts are in the work of saving sinners. And as for the reality of church members, if they have ever been converted they let no one know it. Their lights are not permitted to shine. Many of them prefer darkness to light. They have become mere formal Christians, cold and indifferent. Nothing from the pulpit ever awakens them from their self-satisfaction. As for one of them going to the altar to be prayed for, who ever thought of such a thing? Did the preacher ever invite them there? Did he ever call for mourners? And if he did, did he mean them? Why, they have nothing to mourn for! They have no need for repentance; and, if they had need for such a thing, they are "too intensely respectable" to go to the altar and make a spectacle of themselves. That will do for the backwoods, as it was in the days of the fathers, but not for respectable people in the city or near by the city. And, oh! what would happen if some preacher should preach by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost till some poor sinner should be brought from darkness to light—from the bondage of sin into the glorious liberty of the gospel of Christ, and should make known his deliverance by shouting the praise of God? Why, sir, the "respectable" church members would be shocked by such a breach of propriety, and many would probably leave the church. But would the church lose anything by the blowing away of such "chaff?" Let them go. If their going will only enable us to shake off this dreadful lethargy from our souls, and to receive again the baptisms of the Holy Ghost in gracious revivals and the ingathering of souls—souls that are precious in the sight of Jesus, but which we are daily passing by as not "respectable" enough to be in our communion.

O sir, we Methodists are terribly lacking in zeal and in faith! We are seriously blundering whenever we leave "the way our fathers trod." The Presbyterian Church will do for those who are "elect," the Episcopal Church for those who believe in "the church," the Baptist Church for those who believe in and rely on water regeneration; but Methodism, to be "Christianity in earnest," must go into the highways and the byways, and bring in the halt, the maimed and the blind. We must seek to find and save those which were lost. If there be any among us too rich and proud—"too respectable"—to have fellowship with such, in the name of God let them go elsewhere—among "the great and wise," if they can get there; but let us keep the poor, remembering that unto such did Christ preach in order to establish his claim to the Messiahship. Let us return to the paths of our fathers, who "lived happy, died exultingly and went home to glory." Away with our "respectability," coldness and indifference!

LAYMAN.

The Cedars of Lebanon.

When Seth, the son of Adam, was sent by his dying parent to fetch the "oil of mercy" from Paradise, he saw from the gate of that glorious garden, which an angel opened for him without permitting him to enter, a cedar of Lebanon, with branches borne high toward heaven. The tree seemed to typify the great disaster of Adam's early career. It stood there stricken and leafless, and yet suggestive hope—for the legend is of Christian origin—since a child in glittering raiment was seated on its top, the symbol of hope for all future generations.

This ancient legend—the dream, perhaps, of some Syrian hermit—shows that the cedar of Lebanon, the timber-tree of the temple built on Zion, was held in highest estimation, and exercised the fancy. The story proceeds that Seth received from the angel three seeds of that tree which he beheld still standing upon the spot where sin had been first committed, but standing there blasted and dead. He carried the seeds home, placed them in the mouth of the dead Adam, and so buried them. And here the natural history of the legend is at fault, for the three trees, ripened on the same tree in Paradise, produced three seeds of different kinds. The truth is, the cedar of Lebanon, the cypress, and the pine, which grew from those seeds, were held in equal estimation by the recluse who dreamed this legend, and therefore the same marvelous though inconsistent origin was claimed for them all. Their future history is curious. Growing on the grave of Adam in Hebron they were afterward most carefully protected by Abraham, Moses and David. After their removal to Jerusalem, the Psalms were composed beneath them; and in due time, when they had grown together and united into one giant tree, they, or it—for it was now one tree, a cedar of Lebanon—was felled by Solomon for the purpose of being preserved forever as a beam in the temple. But the design failed; the king's carpenters found themselves utterly unable to manage the mighty beam. They raised it to its intended position and found it too long. They sawed it, and it then proved too short. They spliced it, and again found it wrong. It was evidently intended for another, perhaps a more sacred office, and they laid it aside in the temple to bide its time. While waiting for its appointed hour, the beam was on one occasion improperly made use of by a woman named Maxlucella, who took the liberty of sitting on it, and presently found her garments on fire. Instantly she raised a cry, amply feeling the flames severely, she invoked the aid of Christ, and was immediately driven from the city and stoned, becoming in her death a pre-Christian martyr!

In the course of an eventful history the predestined beam became a bridge over Cedron, and, being then thrown into the Pool of Bethesda, it proved the cause of its healing virtues. Finally it became the cross, was buried in Calvary, exhumed by the Empress Helena, chopped up by a coping church and distributed.

Other inconsistencies in the history of this famous tree are the enormous weight of the relics of the true cross as disposed of by the medieval church, and the fact that most of the relics are of oak, which has always grown freely in the grounds of Italian and English ecclesiastics, and which does not grow in Hebron, except the evergreen species. The above story is suggestive in many ways.

In Evelyn's Silva of 1667 he does not mention the cedar of Lebanon, and we may therefore be sure that it had not then descended from its Syrian mountain to the congenial level of the banks of the Thames, in our higher latitude. It was first planted largely by John, Duke of Argyle, the friend of Jeanie Deans. The noble grove at Whitton Park, near Twickenham, was planted by him, and the seeds which he distributed among his friends produced the existing ornaments of several sites of Eltham, Richmond and other neighborhoods, and established the cedar of Lebanon in the various gardens on the Thames, where it is still an ornament that may be often observed.

One of the oldest, if not the oldest, cedars of Lebanon in England is standing in Brethy Park, Derbyshire, on the east front of the hall. The gardeners' accounts prove this tree to have been planted in February, 1676. The girth of its trunk, at 4 feet, is 15 feet 8 inches; and, so far as we could judge, the size of the trunk is not much less at 15 feet or 16 feet, where it divides. From this point the main stem runs up to 50 or 60 feet. The spread of the two longest lateral branches is about 100 feet. This tall cedar has lost many limbs, and is now only scantily provided. The stump of every lost limb has been carefully sealed with lead, and each remaining branch is supported by chains.

There is a legend that a limb of this tree falls at the death of a member of the family. On Maundy Thursday, 1773, when the cedar in the park was nearly a hundred years old, a friend called to see Lord Chesterfield. He was dying. "Give Dayroles a chair," were his last words, and no doubt the cedar lost a large limb for the departed earl, who died true to his principles, whispering faintly those courteous words with his latest breath. The old tree is now a wreck—a lofty and noble trunk, almost naked except a few remaining branches on the top, supported by artificial means.

It is said there are seven trees remaining of the forest thinned for the building of Solomon's Temple, and the girth of the largest is 45 feet. There is a cedar of Lebanon at Wilton Abbey 26 feet in circumference one foot from the ground; there are famous trees, too, at Strathfieldsaye, Sion House and Shobdon.

In England this type of indestructibility produces only second-rate timber. In Palestine documents of particular value were kept in cedar boxes by preference, and there was a common saying in reference to articles of value that they were worthy to be cased in cedar. Not only was the wood extremely durable, but it was of rapid growth, and in Hebrew families it was not uncommon for the parent of a child to plant a cedar of Lebanon at his birth, to be cut down for the construction of a bedstead at his marriage. In England, where colliers marry at eighteen, and farm laborers at twenty, and the middle class at twenty-five, there are no trees of strength and toughness which would in like manner overtake the wedding-day, so as to be adapted to the purpose above suggested.—London Gardeners' Chronicle.

Take Your Bibles With You.

Let me give a little experience of my own, that showed me how, by quietly reading our Bibles when traveling, we can be "living epistles, read of all men."

I was taking a two days' trip in a steamer; and, being rather out of health, I felt a little lonesome after my boys had been put to bed, and took my Bible into the saloon to read, knowing that it would cheer me. After reading awhile my thoughts went back to the different times I had been on board a boat at night. How often I have traveled, and yet this was the first time that I had brought out my own Bible and read it in a public saloon. As a little girl, in the days when the "ladies' cabin" was more generally used to sleep in, I can remember slipping into my berth, pulling the curtains, and then crouching on my knees to pray. Later, I used to try to read by the light of the lamp in the stateroom, and I even own to slipping a copy of the Psalms into another book to read on deck. Now perhaps this sounds very shocking. It does not sound any meaner than it was, and if I can encourage and strengthen some weak Christian by acknowledging my own failures, I care not how it sounds. I sat thinking of these things, and wondering how it was that now I felt no temptation to hide my Bible. I had not traveled for more than three years, and during that time the Bible had grown to be so dear to me that I cared not who saw how I loved it.

The next day, as we neared a landing, a young man came to me, said he was going to leave the boat in a few minutes, and wished before he left to thank me for reading my Bible the night before. He had been reminded of his own duty by seeing me read, and had found the copy of the Scriptures that the Bible Society had placed in the cabin, and read it prayerfully before retiring. From perfect strangers, we were friends at once. The Bible was dear to both of us, and we could talk of our longing for perfect consecration, our faith in God, and kindred subjects. As the boat landed, and my friend had to go, he regretted that he had not spoken to me before, that we might have our hearts burn within us, as we talked of Jesus, all through the day. We agreed that, as for us, we should from that day give the right hand of fellowship to any one whom we met studying the Bible.

Surely a pocket Bible is the best introduction to a fellow-Christian. Let us, then, never fail to slip our Bible in the bag when we start off for a day or a month of travel, and who knows what wayward boy may be won back to the God of his fathers by the sight of his fellow-traveler's Bible?—American Messenger.

In a paper recently read before the French Academy, M. Lucas claims to have devised a method of performing in 30 hours a calculation which would have required 3,000 years of constant labor under the old methods. It would, it is stated, take more than 200,000,000 centuries, at the rate of 10 figures per second, to simply write out the numerical value of a quantity for which the expression can be written, in his formula, in less than half a second. This is a great saving of time.

The shepherds are dead, the "wise men" are East, and the angels in heaven. But the star, and the Child and the manger are everywhere. Come, let us have a frolic together! Let us advertise for a good digestion, and a downy pillow, and a pleasant dream, and a merry Christmas. Let us do it in these words: Wanted.—A debtor to be forgiven; a wrong to be forgotten; a heart to be lightened; a home to be brightened.—B. F. Taylor.

Titus and the Jews.

Between the era of Antiochus Epiphanes and the Emperor Nero, it appears certain that the Jews made a very beneficial impression on the mind of western Asia and the Roman world, preparing it (it may seem) for Christianity. The equitable character of their domestic institutions was in harmony with their nobler religion. The historian Josephus many times insists on the excellence of their social practices and sentiments. What he says of their simplicity of life and the absence of luxury may have been colored by the contrast reflected from Roman extravagances; but what he says in detail of the honor paid to industry, the zeal of all to be self-supporting, the approval of personal work, and their freedom in imparting goods to one another, which he calls koinonia (community, fellowship,) and andosis (yielding up, or distribution,) must be accepted literally. We have full reason to believe that mechanical art and rustic labor were as honorable then in Judea as now in the American Union or at Salt Lake, and that many doctors of the law maintained themselves with their hands. The case of St. Paul is an obvious illustration. Moreover, the laws of Judea were equitable and the punishment mild. Tacitus himself declares that "among themselves the fidelity of the Jews was rigid (obstinata) and their tender mercy prompt." Such a people, it might seem, had deserved to live, even in the Roman empire. Not so thought Roman wisdom. That model emperor, Titus, "the delight of mankind," took counsel with his high officers whether to save the Temple of Jerusalem, a building esteemed magnificent. But they argued that out of Jerusalem had come two detestable religions—the Jewish and the Christian—which would best be destroyed by uprooting their original home; therefore, the temple and the city were to be utterly demolished. After Roman cruelty had done its worst upon the oppressed and ruined nation, Christian animosity succeeded, to play a like part. Jewish proselytism ceased, indeed became impossible, after the violent and deadly war; yet the Jews and their religion have long survived the domineering, oppressive and self-destroying rule of Rome; it has undergone no deterioration by the lapse of centuries; yet they still have to plead for toleration and justice from Sclavonic Europe.—Fraser's Magazine.

The Territory of Colorado is full of wonderful red sandstone rocks. They are lined and grooved and stippled over with fine dots; they are worn and hollowed and curved into innumerable grotesque shapes; from the tiny stone which you hold in your hand up to the giant colossal wall, hundreds of feet high, which no man can climb, there is not an inch which does not look as if for millions of years it had been worked by tools. Yet no hand, no tool has been there. Grains of sand have done it all—grains of sand blowing and eddying in wind currents. Slowly, steadily, irreparably the solid rock has been fretted away, distorted, by things almost too small to see. I see lives sometimes which remind me of these rocks, and lives also—the beauty distorted, the symmetry and harmony simply fretted away!—Helen Hunt.

TEACHING WASTED.—The work is to be accomplished by teaching. "Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted." It cannot be done by pictures, processions, and incense, and performances after the manner of the Romanist; and it cannot be accomplished by excitement, bawling, stamping and shouting; after the manner of certain brethren of our acquaintance, who cry: "Believe! believe! believe!" but who do not tell the people what they are to believe, nor instruct them in the faith. Teaching is wanted. All the earnestness possible should go with the teaching; but there must be sound doctrine, real instruction, solemn truth made known, for it is by such means that sinners will be converted unto God.

When a decent and sedate love of the world stands between a man and his salvation, in the shape of his importance in society, or of his profession, trade, literature, or soundness in theology, how hardly will he be convinced that the end even of these things is death, if his heart be absorbed in them; and that, as it has been said, he will enter into heaven, as by human impossibilities, as a camel through a needle's eye. The world forgets that many skeptics and Deists by profession—such as Franklin, Hume, Gibbon, and many others—possessed a full average share of the morality required by the common usages of society; and were, indeed, in this respect, quite as exemplary as the general mass of such as call themselves Christians.

The reward of righteousness is righteousness itself. True love seeks only true love in return. No mother would expect to be rewarded by money for loving or saving her child. It would be an insult to her whole being to insinuate that she was not sufficiently rewarded by having her child's heart to beat responsive to her own; and so, what reward does God offer to love? What but love—himself? What reward can he hold out to the man who "hungers after righteousness" better than that "he shall be filled?" For "the Lord loveth righteousness," and giveth us what he loves.—Norman Macleod.

Sir William Herschel attributed the spots on the sun to the emission of an aeriform fluid, not yet in combustion, which displaces the great luminous atmosphere, and which is afterward itself to serve the purpose of supporting combustion. Hence he supposed the appearance of copious spots to be indicative of the approach of warm seasons on the surface of the earth; and he attempted to maintain his opinion by historical evidence.

ing brightness in heaven. Men, and women too, sometimes keep single not so much because no one cares for them, but because they themselves care for Christ, first and most. The chosen solitariness of an unmarried life is occasionally the sacrifice of self, secretly but deliberately laid at the feet of Him who pleased not himself; and it has, and shall have, its great recompense. "The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and spirit." Presently she will find out, and others also, that the Lord has cared for her.

Nevertheless, all these exceptions admitted and allowed for, we may hold stardily by our first proposition; that the married life is the perfect life; consequently that to wish for it is reasonable, and to attain it is desirable; for a woman, in spite of what a false delicacy may aver to the contrary, it is the goal of her life; while for a man it is his high felicity. Canon Thorold, in Sunday Magazine.

Christian and Un-christian Communism.

Communism contemplates an ideal good, and in a sense was carried into practice at the day of Pentecost: "And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men as every man had need." This Christian communism was inspired by love to the poor. They sold their possessions that they might give to others. But un-christian communism is inspired by hatred of the rich. It would not give, but appropriate. It would not sell its own possessions and goods, but sell those of other people, according to the definition:

"What is a communist? One who hath yearnings
For equal division of unequal earnings,
Idler or bungler, or both, he his withings,
To fork out his money, and pocket your shillings."

Christian communism is voluntary. It is not said that the disciples sold all their possessions and goods; but whether more or less, they sold them of their own accord. Un-christian communism would leave a community of goods, if need be, by force and compulsion. It would not only say to the capitalist: You may sell your possessions, but you shall sell them. Capital is a struggle of society. It represents so much theft of the poor man's labor.

Consequently Christian communism is a law for itself, while un-christian communism would be a law for others. The one considers its own duty in the case, but respects the right of others. The other looks out its duty in the case but to invade their rights. No one pretends that the early Christians, in selling their possessions, would lay down any law for the church, still less for the State. But un-christian communism, which for the most part leaves the church out of the question, would have the State dispose of all possessions and goods for the public benefit. It wants it to take possession of the banks, railroads, and all the instruments of labor, and control them in what it conceives to be the general interest.

Consequently, again, while Christian communism would give free play to individuals, as well as unite them in a community of interests, un-christian communism would largely suppress individuality, and make it a creature of the State. It contemplates so much equalizing and leveling by means of the State machine. It is jealous of competition; jealous, in fact, of genius and talent. It wants the State to regulate everything connected with property or persons, and play the part of a political roller. Its idea is not to develop, but to crush. Therefore all un-christian communism is so much mechanism; as, for instance, that of Fourier's phalansstery, which would have each system consist of four hundred families, and everything be done with the regularity of so much prison discipline. Indeed the speculative communism of Plato and Moore as well as all practical examples of it resolves itself into so much ruling. It is an exaggerated edition of William Von Humboldt's doctrine, for instance, that the State should contemplate a variety of situations, and the largest possible development of the individual.

Then again Christian communism would never come to conflict with existing institutions, remembering that the powers that be are ordained of God. But un-christian communism is nothing if not revolutionary. The one would reform slightly, prove as far as possible that the effect would ever good, and so stop. The other is as careful and conservative as the serpent and fearless and violent. It would not only abolish property to-day, but also everything as would exist to-morrow. [illegible] and as the exception proves the rule, it merely abhors. The fundamental principle of the one is to [illegible] the other is to [illegible] and scamper over the fields and hills in all directions. Then there is liberty. All the steamers east and west make this their calling-place. The English have civilized the country in point of roads, though not of currency. It is but twelve hours across to Brindisi, and one is thus freed from the sad isolation of continental things. The country is kept green by rain. The perpetual neutrality of Corfu, established when the English gave up their protectorate of the Ionian Islands, conduces to a feeling of prosperous tranquillity. Intensely Greek as are the Corfiotes, they are too wise not to take advantage of this admirable state of things, and get rich and independent as soon as possible. After their singularly varied and stormy history, beginning with the revolt mentioned by Thucydides, this lull is just what they wanted. One sees beggars, but perhaps they are constitutionally such, for the island is still what Xenophon, 350 years before Christ, described it—a paradise of fertility. Perhaps, therefore, the beggars are the conscientious or the constitutional ones. The money one gives them clinks in their pockets with other moneys they have harvested in other rounds—is, perhaps, even kept to give you change.—Appleton's Journal.

Corfu.

Those who do not land here Corfu have little idea of its beauty, unrivaled as the sea-glimpse of it is—the gray rocks, the tropical vegetation, the ancient, double-peaked citadel. These double peaks gave the ancient name (Coreyra) to the place. I have not noticed even one respectable-looking shop, but all is delightfully cramped, huddled and old-fashioned. About one half the buying and selling seems to be done in the streets. One comes on a perfect nest of cobblers working in these streets, gossiping, mending, working, laughing, eating. Then a den of a café hangs out its sign in Greek and Italian, and bids you come in and enjoy its delights. The whole town seems given up to the sale of fruits—glorious oranges with pieces of the green limb still clinging to them, pineapples, pears, peaches, melons. Then one comes on cheese shops full of white fiato cream-cheeses—cheeses yellow, green, fresh, and fragrant. There is the usual quantum of Roman pantapolin, or groceries filled with gastronomic curiosities. Then one of the long Bolognese arcades, labyrinthine atria, or alleys, with lines stretched across, full of newly-laundried clothes, the painted, blue-and-white arched, a Byzantine chapel, a shorter sithonia like Italian campanili all mellowness and mossy beauty, a pile of steep-gabled cinque cento houses, a cluster of twisted, convoluted chimneys, a bit of ruined Hellenic covered wall, a palace with a statue in front, a gate whose arch and classic tabulature frame exquisite pictures of sea and mountains, an upright hill with a belfry and window-embrasures green and gay with geraniums, a turreted parapet looking down on the brightest wine-like water in groups of cypress, a mast, and grand crag full of dismantled fortifications. Such is an epitome of this town of 35,000 inhabitants. Carved drives lead out from it into the country on various sides—the Queen's Battery, Benizze, Condra, the Oak, San Pantoleone, not to speak of the countless interesting bridle paths that scatter and scamper over the fields and hills in all directions. Then there is liberty. All the steamers east and west make this their calling-place. The English have civilized the country in point of roads, though not of currency. It is but twelve hours across to Brindisi, and one is thus freed from the sad isolation of continental things. The country is kept green by rain. The perpetual neutrality of Corfu, established when the English gave up their protectorate of the Ionian Islands, conduces to a feeling of prosperous tranquillity. The Albatross on Land.

We quote from the London Times part of a letter received from one of the exploring party on her majesty's ship Challenger. The meeting place spoken of is on Marion Island, far to the southeast of the Cape of Good Hope:

The whole of the wet, sodden flat lands were studded with the huge white albatrosses, sitting on their nests. The magnificent birds, most of whom were asleep, covered the ground in such numbers that they looked for all the world like a flock of sheep studied over a meadow. The nests, used yearly, were freshly covered with tufts of grass and moss, and stood some two feet above the swampy ground. It was evidently the commencement of the breeding season, as few eggs were obtainable. These splendid birds, weighing 19½ pounds, and measuring 10½ feet from tip to tip of wing, seen in such an advantage while in their glory at sea, so evidently at home as they sweep so gracefully through the air, are on land completely at sea. It appears to be impossible for them to hover; so, on alighting at the end of a swoop, the momentum of the body is carried on after their feet have touched the ground, until they literally turn head over heels on to their backs, from which inglorious position their efforts to regain their equilibrium are anything but graceful. While advancing to the nest the neck is extended and body lowered as they waddle along, exactly like a goose. To rise in the air they are obliged to run with extended wings for some 200 yards over the soaking grass before they obtain sufficient velocity for the air to get under the wings and allow them to feel themselves masters of the situation.

Once landed, they are powerless to resist attack. Fortunately for them, they have not many enemies. A sharp snap of the beak is their only means of offense or defense; but as far as we were concerned, so long as we were unarmed, an ample one, for few ventured to molest them.

To possess ourselves of the single egg—no nest contained two—the readiest way was to push them backward with a stick forced against their breast, which, balanced as they were on the edge of the raised nest, was easy work, the drop of two feet being just sufficient to send them on to their backs and prevent them rising until after the prize was captured; then, with a forlorn cry, as their bird discovered its loss, it quietly regained and settled itself on its rifled nest again.

On our approaching the nest the bird's dignified appearance, with its erect, stately neck, and sparkling dark hazel eyes, set in a snowy-white framework of solid fur-like plumage, was a grand sight, and not easily to be forgotten. Indeed so fine was it that, although there were two boats' crews beside the regular exploring parties on shore all day, few were killed beyond those actually required as specimens—one's natural love of destruction, particularly when there is no opposing defense, being eclipsed in the more exalted feeling of admiration; while a poor, ugly, and to us useless sea elephant, found gasping on the beach, was dispatched without a thought and left on the shore, a rich meal for the sea-gulls.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Protestant Orphanage established at Florence, Italy, in 1862 has received and educated more than 100 children from all parts of Italy. It now has 30 inmates and a deficit of 3,651 francs.

—The English Wesleyan chapel report for 1877 shows considerable activity in church, or (as the Wesleyans still prefer to call it) chapel-building. The plans for 118 chapels received the approval of the committee last year and 85 chapels were completed. The Relief Loan Fund now amounts to $210,000, and the Extension Loan Fund to $220,000.

—The New York Tribune says the views of Miss Catherine E. Beecher on any subject will command attention, but her assault on the Calvinistic theory of eternal punishment will excite special notice at this stage of the controversy. Miss Beecher contends that the Calvinistic system is repugnant to the Scriptures as well as contrary to common sense, and calls for a Calvinistic reply.

—At the forty-fourth annual meeting of the London Missionary Society, held in May, the Rev. Dr. Mullens, the secretary, announced the receipts to be larger than in any previous year, the total income being £138,152. During the past year the mission in China has been remarkably successful, the work in Madagascar has been reorganized, and the Central African experiment has made encouraging progress.

—The Conference of Victoria and Tasmania met in Wesley church, Melbourne, January 23. Rev. Joseph Dare was elected president, and Rev. S. Williams secretary. Dr. Gervase Smith was present and made an address in the name of the British Wesleyan Conference. The names of eight young men were presented as candidates for the ministry. The Conference had only been in session two days when the steamer sailed.

—The annual meeting of the Presbytery of Ningpo, China, was held recently. It was reported that the number of communicants had been increased during the year by 35, the aggregate being 537. There are now only three of the twelve ministers who are foreigners, and the foreign element is steadily increasing. Three of the eleven churches have parsonages, and three support their ministers in whole and one supports its minister in part. Two new stations were opened during the year. The churches contributed for congregational purposes $51.

—Two interesting evidences of progress are noted for the mission of the American Board in the advance sheets of the Missionary Herald for April. The two churches at Osaka have established a girls' school, which is to be maintained without costing the board a cent. Fifteen girls entered the first day. A meeting of delegates from nine churches was held in Osaka, January 10, which decided to organize a Japanese missionary society. The churches are to contribute to it monthly. The readers of the Schonichi Shi Zappo will be informed how the contributions come in.

—The Canadian missionary, MacKay, spoken of as having been warned to leave Formosa, is Rev. G. L. MacKay, of the Canada Presbyterian Church. He has been attacked by mobs several times since going out to Formosa, but perseveres in his work, traveling through the country in all kinds of weather, and preaching the gospel without fear. In a letter dated September 24, 1877, he stated that there were 117 members in Northern Formosa. He was then in Bangkok, the largest city in the north, trying to establish a chapel. While there he was threatened by drunken soldiers, but some of the citizens who are well disposed toward him prevented any violence being done.

—When the annual meeting of the Methodist Missionary Society was held, last fall, we gave a sketch of its proceedings, with an account of the finances; and last week we briefly noticed the fifty-ninth report of the society, covering its operations at home and abroad for 1877. We have, therefore, only to summarize the work and results in foreign lands, and among foreign populations in the United States. Africa comes first in order, because in that great country the first mission was planted by the church in 1833. The Liberia Conference reports 2,268 communicants, an increase of 230; and in the South India Conference, which works among the English-speaking people more particularly, there are 4,761 communicants. The report says hardly anything about this Conference. Its work should have been described. It is noticed that this mission is self-supporting. The work in Japan has been very successful, and in Mexico the membership has more than doubled, and there is a call for more men for both fields.—Independent.

THE GREEN.

BY ELEANOR KIRK.

Where does it come from—
This beautiful green,
From darkest to light,
And all shades between?
Not out of the bark
So withered and bare
It's hard to believe
The green was in there.

Where does it come from—
This wonderful green,
Enwrapping the earth—
In robes like a queen?
Not from the branches
So brown and so sere;
For who could e'er think
The green was in here?

God smiled thro' the cloud's
The white caught the glow,
And threw to the trees,
And shrubs all the snow.
Then sunshine and rain
Went patting the sheen;
And this is the way
We come by the green.

A Good Example.

MR. EDITOR: There is a little girl belonging to my congregation, in this place, whose name is Sarah Batte. For years she has desired to own a gold ring—how much the child-reader will know at once, and we who are grown will know if we close our eyes and travel back ten, twenty years or more to the time when we thought, spoke and lived as a child.

It would take $2.50 two dollars and a half to get the kind of ring she desired; so for months and months Sarah was quietly saving up earnings and gifts. A few weeks ago she discovered that she had enough. Now, then, for the ring! thinks the little girl who reads this. Wait!—let us see!

Just at this time Sarah's mother put the missionary question fairly before her. Making no effort to influence—no demand upon her little store—she simply told her of the millions of heathen who were living and dying without the Bible. The seed was planted, sprang up, and bore fruit. The next thing we knew Sarah was quietly depositing her money in the missionary basket.

The last amount she put in was a dollar bill. I was surprised, Mr. Editor, to see a dollar bill in the basket this time of year, and little thought it was cast in by a child seven years old, whose heart was moved to send the gospel to those who had it not.

The occurrence deeply touched me, and I hoped its relation would do good. This is my apology for writing.

About Glass.

BY M. E. WINSLOW.

"Such a foolish little girl as Alice is, mother; I could hardly get her away from the tea store down town."

"But, mother, it was so beautiful," said the little maiden, just returned from the rare treat of an evening's walk among the stores, while looking rather reproachfully at her big brother. "It looked like great jewels—green, red, blue and white, only shining and moving just like fire."

"She means the sign above the store, mother; it does look pretty when the gas is lighted; but, then, you know, it's only glass, after all."

"Why only glass, my son?"

"Why, glass is so common—just as common as—windows," said the boy, at a loss for a suitable comparison.

"But common things are often the most beautiful, my dear, and in this case you have put your contemptuous only before one of the most interesting and useful things manufactured by men. The word glass, which our Saxon ancestors spelled glass, was at first given to all things that could shine. The Germans called amber glis, the Swedes termed gold glis, and the French called ice glace, all for the same reason; while our words glare, glance, glitter and glisten are derived from the same roots."

"What is glass made of?" said Alice.

"Just of sand and ashes, called scientifically silica and an alkali, with something else called a flux to make it melt easily—lead, borax, manganese, or some other metal."

"I know how glass was discovered," said Tom; "our teacher told it to us. One day some Phœnician sailors, who had a cargo of soda, landed near the mouth of the river Belus, at the foot of Mount Carmel, in Palestine. They made a fire to cook their supper, and took some lumps of soda to stand their pot on. The fire was so hot it melted the soda and sand, which ran together and thus became glass."

"Yes, that is the old story, though a good many people doubt it; but it is certain that glass was made by the Egyptians at least 3,500 years ago, or before the Hebrews came out of Egypt, as we read in the book of Exodus. Glass beads of ancient date are found in the catacombs and among the ruins of Egypt, and, curiously enough, the earliest glass known was that which has been so much talked about of late—blue glass; the Egyptians seem to have originated no other color. Nearly all the nations of antiquity seem to have known about and used glass. It was, of course, among the 'spoils' which the Jews carried up into Canaan; it was made in Rome two centuries before the Christian era, and from thence spread to Gaul or France, Spain and Britain. The Roman glass was wonderfully beautiful, and possessed a texture more like that of precious stones than can be made at the present day. It was of all sorts of colors, transparent and opaque, and used for all sorts of purposes, the colors being given by metals. Often two or three layers of different colors and kinds were laid closely together and heated till they united at the edges and then the outside layer was cut into beautiful and intricate patterns. But the most curious process was the putting together, according to a certain pattern of rods or threads of different colors and shades, and combining them in one rod, which, while it was still warm and soft, was drawn out to any degree of fineness. When this rod cooled, flat pieces were cut off, on the surface of which would be seen beautiful pictures, some of the lines of which were so fine that they can only be seen by a magnifying glass.

"In the Middle Ages the Venetian glass was the most celebrated. The great cathedral of St. Mark was built in the eleventh century, and as its inside surface is almost entirely covered with mosaics, chiefly composed of glass, a great quantity of glass-workers were drawn together from Asia and elsewhere and glass-making became the chief industry of the city. The Venetian glasses, cups, mirrors, etc., are all very light and elegant and there were six different kinds of work in which the workmen, who were all placed upon the Island of Murano and protected by government, excelled, the chief of which were vitro ditrina lace-work, lattirino (with milk-white threads), crackled or frozen, and avventurino (speckled with gold)."

"Was glass always used for window-panes, mother?"

"Not so universally as it is now, and yet more than is generally supposed. A fragment of a glass window pane was found in one of the houses of Pompeii buried, as you know, only seventy years after the Christian era. During the Middle Ages it was made for windows in all European countries, and was especially applied to churches whose stained or painted glass windows were among their choicest art-treasures. I think, my boy, if you were to study the subject a little, you learn how really valuable this 'common' substance has been and still is, you would not again say only glass."

"There is one use to which you have not told us, mother, telescopes, microscopes, and all that."

"Yes, optical glasses; natural science would still be in its babyhood but for these, and strangely enough, they were discovered almost as soon as glass was. Aglenis, which is a piece of glass thicker in the middle than at the edges, was found among the ruins of Nineveh; the Emperor Chin, of China, 2,257 years before Christ, is said to have observed the planets through a glass. Spectacles were invented by Salvino d'Armato in Florence before 1317. Cornelius Drebbel invented the microscope in 1572 and Kepler the telescope in 1571."

"I should like to see glass made."

"Yes, some time I will take both you and Alice to a glass-house; the process is very interesting. First the ingredients are pulverized very finely and baked. Then they are melted together, and the united mass is either poured into molds and pressed into shape, which is an entirely American invention, or blown into bubbles and then shaped by the skill and taste of the workmen, and after this every article must be annealed—that is, gradually cooled to prevent their flying to pieces when anything touches them. Sometimes the glass is made very tough by plunging it into hot oil while it is still warm, in which case it may be dropped on a stone floor without receiving any injury. There are six kinds of glasses made, each requiring a peculiar fabrication and a peculiar building and furnace. These are bottle, crown, sheet window, plate, flint and colored glasses. You would be interested also, I think, in the process of cutting or engraving glass. Formerly this could only be done with a diamond or very hard steel point, and, under the pressure some of the very finest and heaviest plates would develop a crack or flaw which rendered them useless; but recently a process has been discovered called a sand-blast, by which fine, sharp sand is blown steadily against the glass, the curiosity is that a piece of lace fastened on the surface will not be injured, while its pattern will be distinctly cut upon the smooth, polished surface."—New York Observer.

BIBLE ARITHMETIC.—Addition—Add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity.—Second Peter i, 5, 7.

Subtraction—Laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby.—First Peter ii, 1, 2.

Multiplication—Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus, our Lord.—Second Peter i, 2.

Division—Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.—Second Corinthians vi, 17, 18.

Rule of Three—Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.—Corinthians xiii, 13.

Archbishop Whately did not despise a pun; in fact he rarely let an opportunity pass of perpetrating one, and sometimes at a jolly dinner would exert himself to make the worst pun of the evening. He thought gardening a dangerous indulgence for families, because they might grow madder. And it is to him we owe the valuable information that Noah's ark was made of gopher wood, but Joan of Arc was Maid of Orleans.

The Cloud of Witnesses.

Paul regarded the illustrious examples of faith which he describes as a great cloud of witnesses. Their testimony to the truth, to the faithfulness of God, and to the power of faith to develop character and to inspire noble and heroic actions, was designed to strengthen and encourage all believers in the race that is set before them. What these ancient worthies did can be done by us. We may triumph as they triumphed, and we may be sure that the same divine shield that was over them will be over us.

The cloud, beginning with righteous Abel, has been a growing one. No bigger than a man's hand at the first, it has increased until the sky is covered. Since the sacred history was closed the witnesses for Christ have multiplied more and more, so that the briefest mention of their lives and deeds would fill the largest library.

The use of this testimony would seem to be to help those who are in the midst of the battle and trials of life. We are reminded that the temptations and sufferings which we have to encounter were common to those who ran the race before us. They had their trials and conflicts, and were often called to die for the faith which they professed. Their trust in God was tested to the uttermost, some of them were subjected to the most fearful tortures, but they died in the faith and were blessed.

And, besides helping believers, the testimony of the witnesses is to convince the opposers and doubters, and to lead them to the knowledge of the truth. Every martyr counts his converts, every holy and suffering life closed in peace and victory over death carries conviction to some. The standing miracle of grace exhibited in the example of Christians is more powerful than all other miracles in arresting attention and in overthrowing unbelief.

The cloud of witnesses to which the apostle refers was composed of those who had finished their course. Living witnesses are of the greatest value. There is an advantage in mingling with them, and in hearing from their own lips what they have felt and experienced. The accordance of the life with the profession is easily verified, and the testimony comes to us fresh from hearts still beating with the emotions and feelings which the present hour inspires. But still the living witness is in brief career. One of the best says: "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." The complete testimony is delivered when the race is run, and when the full and rounded course has been achieved. To such cases the grace of perseverance is demonstrated, and the victory over death has been illustrated. Death thus puts its seal upon the testimony of the saint, and stamps it as a finished and imperishable record of the power and mercy of God.

The dead Christian speaks by his holy life even more emphatically and convincingly than he could while living. The apostle might have pointed to the example of living believers, but his object was to encourage these, and, besides, he sought to raise the faith and hope of all by examples that covered the breadth of human experience. Hence he puts in that great cloud only the glorified—those who had fought and won the battle, those who had run the race and gained the prize.

It strengthens the weak hands and confirms the feeble knees to think of the company assembled on the heavenly shore, and to remember that they, in their day of trial, were sustained by the same grace that is promised to us. God was with them in their temptations, in their suffering and in their dying, and he will be with us.

Seashore.

The meeting opened on the night of Wednesday, July 10, with a sermon on the barren fig-tree, and closed on the night of Thursday, July 18, with a sermon on the miracle of the manna. There were seventy-five conversions—possibly more—many Christians renewed their spiritual life, and times of refreshing came upon the church. All the meetings were good, but the best was the last, at which the altar was filled with seekers, and there were fifteen conversions. The Lord rained manna especially at that hour. At the communion service on Sunday afternoon there were sixty ministers, and about three hundred other communicants. Thirty-two sermons were preached, and we heard not one poor sermon. All were excellent, and several were of remarkable interest and merit. The gospel was preached in its fullness, simplicity and power, and we doubt not the bread cast upon the waters will be found after many days. Although the results of the meeting were gratifying, we cannot say that this was equal to some in past years. The weather was unusually warm, for the sea-side, the breezes were irregular and feeble, and the people were at times nearly overcome by the languor which the heat induced. Then, more than heretofore, there were diversions in the way of sailing, fishing and strolling, so that the attendance at preaching during the day was often considerably diminished by these causes. The Saturday and Sunday attendance was as large as heretofore, and the regular night congregations were better than in other years. There were probably two thousand people on the ground on Sunday. A number of large tents have been built this year. The grounds have been cleared up a good deal, and are becoming more beautiful and attractive. The open space around the preaching-shed, and the entire front, sloping to the water's edge, are richly carpeted with Bermuda grass, and the young oaks planted in the place where the tall pines once stood, are growing thriftily. The meeting was an occasion of Christian reunion for the Methodists of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama. Many came from distant places and their communion in Christ was blessed. The time will doubtless come when every section of the South will contribute to swell the congregations at Seashore. Its influence for good is already felt in remote sections, and this influence seems to widen every year. The trustees present were hard-worked, and some of them were scarcely ever able to hear a sermon. They were cumbered with much serving, but in this instance there was no occasion for rebuke. When we left the camp ground on Friday there were a number of families remaining, who will spend several weeks enjoying the sea breeze and the bathing. It is a quiet and hallowed spot—none better as a place for rest and recuperation. Sunday-school and preaching will be kept up for several Sundays to come—probably till the first of September.

Going It Alone.

MR. EDITOR: Recently, while traveling on a railroad train, I observed two persons of the common species of commercial travelers—now as numerous almost as the locusts of Egypt—playing at cards in the car usually reserved for ladies. Having no acquaintance with the game, I could not be highly edified. They were quite absorbed, and occasionally grew excited. With an air and tone of prospective triumph, one exclaimed earnestly: "I'll order you up and go it alone." What that signifies to gaming men, is beyond my ken. But I began to moralize upon the expression, and concluded that it hit too truly represented the moral and eternal history of many like characters. That young man was "going it alone," without conscience. There was a time when such a scene and expression would have shocked his moral consciousness. The recollections of parental and Scripture teaching made him shudder at the very thought of becoming a card player and gambler. Even the sight of a deck of cards excited fear at the presence and subtle power of temptation. But immoral company was not shunned, until such association became congenial. An oath that once fell upon his ear as but another echo of Sinai's thunders against taking God's name in vain, now makes no impression. May be he also has contracted the dreadful habit. He has a distaste for home. His chair around the evening hearthstone is so often vacant, while loving parents fear, but fondly hope, that their dear boy is in no evil place. He no longer occupies his seat in the family pew. Alas! he has throttled the warning voice of conscience. To this faithful sentinel of Heaven in his bosom he has said: "I'll order you up and go it alone." No longer trouble me with your wooings and warnings."

He was also "going it alone" without God. Years agone he had reverenced the name of Jehovah. He had spoken the word softly, with the first sentence of the Lord's Prayer ringing in his heart: "Hallowed be thy name." God was in all his thoughts. He shuddered at the possibility of incurring his displeasure. All of life's blessings and hopes were attributed to his good Providence. Prayers were offered for his daily guidance and infinite compassion. Now he has covenanted with evil. His friends are the enemies of God. His associations are in places God never enters. To the Lord of all, by whom we live and move and have our being, he has said: "I'll order you up and go it alone. I am amply sufficient to take care of myself. I have no fear of your law nor the issues of the future."

He was "going it alone" without manly principle. Once the word of God was the lamp by which he guided every step. He had a chivalrous admiration for a gentleman of the highest Christian type. On the contrary, he looked with righteous disdain upon the earthly soul, without lofty ambition, and manly purpose, and sacred integrity. His ideal type of manhood was the stainless and symmetrical Christian. This also was his constant example and the goal of his ambition. But now, alas! he has no emulation. His preferred friends are bloated inebriates who tarry long at the wine, and dashing young Americus, whose only genius is to win at games of chance. He has lost his sensitive honor and moral courage. His hopes of the future look not beyond present gratification. If he can manage to secure sufficient business to maintain the favor of employers, and make or win enough money to procure board, clothing, wine and cigars, he will have satisfied his ambition, but disappointed the hopes of a hopeful young life. To all holy purpose and manly principle he has said: "I'll order you up and go it alone."

He was "going it alone" without heavenly hope. The day had passed when he hoped by faith and faithfulness to wear a crown of life. Conscience has so long been silenced, and the heart so long filled with carnal desire, that he rarely thinks of the future. Thought and time are absorbed in present gratification. Death, judgment and eternity cannot be contemplated without remorse and fear; hence they are rarely subjects of consideration. Going through this brief earthly life without conscience, God and manly principle, he will enter eternity and appear before the throne of judgment without one gleam of hope. We are too prone to evil, and too feeble to resist temptation, to boast of our independence. If we hope to reach the better land we cannot travel without the light of the Sun of Righteousness. The reason there are so many shipwrecked lives, and bankrupted characters, and disappointed hopes, is that, like the young card player, they have tried to "go it alone."

Foreign Letter.

MR. EDITOR: The Irish Wesleyan and Primitive Wesleyan Conferences have just been held in Dublin. These Conferences will be memorable in the history of Irish Methodism as having consummated the union of the two bodies which they represent. Henceforth Methodism in the land of the shamrock and the shillaly will be one, save five Methodist New Connection mission stations which will soon be joined to the united church, and a few Primitive Methodist stations which must sooner or later be absorbed. I do not say that the time is ripe for one Methodist Church throughout the world, but a reduction in the number of Methodist bodies is wise, and worthy of the genius of the highest ecclesiastical statesmanship. Any one not in this direction deserves prompt and wide record and recognition. Before the act was consummated there was a long and able debate in the Wesleyan Conference. An amendment was proposed to delay the union for a year, but this was subsequently withdrawn, and the resolution favoring immediate wedlock was unanimously passed by the Conference, standing. A deputation was sent to the Primitive Wesleyan Conference to announce the fact to that body. The announcement was received with the greatest enthusiasm. Thus, after sixty-two years of separation, the two bodies are again one.

Prof. William P. Applebe, LL. D., announced to the Conference his intention of taking the degree of D. D. at Trinity College, Dublin. In order to do so he must preach a sermon in Latin, and then again in English. He is the first minister outside the Protestant Episcopal Church who has ever taken that degree in Trinity. Since disestablishment it may be taken by the minister of any denomination who is qualified to do so.

The aggregate of members in the Wesleyan Church is 12,850, and 52,523 attendants on public worship. The membership of the Primitive Wesleyan body is not so large.

The Methodist New Connection Conference was held in Ashton-under-Lyne. The Rev. John Ogden was chosen president, and a layman was elected secretary. In his inaugural address the president made no reference to current events of a social, political or ecclesiastical character, but confined his remarks exclusively to connectional matters. This is the oldest of the minor Methodist bodies, but not the largest. Its ministers have generally been men of ability and culture. It has some very scholarly theologians and widely-known authors. The numerical increase for the year was nearly one thousand members.

The Primitive Methodist Conference was held in Manchester. This body is more liberal in its polity than the New Connection. Its Conference is composed of two laymen to one minister—slightly too much of what is considered a wise and good thing in this age of progress. As in theology, so in church polity liberalism may proceed too far. Never did an ultra and unsafe radicalism bid so hard for popular sympathy and support as it is doing now; and never were the foundations of Christian faith more fiercely assailed. The old landmarks are sought to be removed with iconoclastic zeal, and the Christ of the Bible is attempted to be uncrowned and placed upon the same level with the heathen sages and philosophers. Democratic, however, as the polity of Primitive Methodism is, it has prospered very amazingly, and has achieved wonderful success as an evangelizing agency among the low substrata of English society. Indeed it has been the means of doing more for the Christianizing of the working classes of England since its origin, a little more than fifty years ago, than the Established Church has ever done with all its wealth and prestige. The Rev. Henry Phillips was elected president. Exclusive of Canada, it has a membership of 182,782, and a ministerial staff of 1,128. Increase for the year, 1,861.

OBSERVER.

A Pure Language.

The following is a fragment of an address by Bishop McTyeire before the Alumni Society of Whitworth Female College, Mississippi, June 21:

"As educated, Christian young women there are three things we ask of you, and have a right to expect: That you will turn upon our Southern land a pure morality, pure manners, and a pure language.

As to the last—a pure language. This is closely related to the two former. Language is a power in making and preserving manners and morals; it is also an element of both. Low manners and low language go together, they react on each other. Loose morals and loose language spring from the same source; and they also mutually influence each other, as cause and effect.

To you I need not say: Avoid slang phrases; but let me invoke your aid in driving out a word which, though not indigenous to our soil, has taken root and is spreading. Like dog-fennel, it threatens to cover the land. Farmers and dairymen complain of the advent of a strange weed—called bitter weed—that is spoiling the milk and butter. It was unknown among us a few years ago; and so was this word. Do you ask: What is it? Until lately it was confined to a small section of the United States, near Plymouth Rock. When you heard it you knew the locality whence the speaker hailed—his speech betrayed him. Now, alas! it has got mixed in with our vernacular. Even in Mississippi I have heard the strange sound. What is it? It is—Guess. "I guess so—I guess not; I guess I will—I guess I won't; I guess, I guess"—until one feels like pressing his fingers to his ears.

In its place guess is a legitimate word; but how often do we hear it in its place? Once in a thousand times! Children play at guessing. Something is held in one hand, and both hands are closed. "Guess—right or left?" The answer is made at random; it is a chance; there are no grounds of reasoning upon which to base a conclusion; there is no weighing of probabilities, no act of the judgment. It is pure guess-work. When childhood's games are past we fall sometimes upon occasions where we must guess which course to take, which things to choose, and often our judgments are credited with shrewdness, where it was only a happy, or, if you please, a lucky guess.

But take a few specimens out of modern social life—I emphasize modern.

"Mr. Jenkins, will you have your tooth pulled?" The aching Jenkins whispers: "I guess I will." He has already made an appointment with the dentist.

"Mrs. Jenkins, what will you do for your husband's relief?" "I guess," she replies, "I'll make him a mush poultice;" and while she speaks she is spreading the smoking mush on a nice, clean napkin.

"Mr. Jones, will you ride to town or walk?" Jones slowly replies: "I guess I'll ride." His horse is hitched at the gate.

"Johnny," says his fond mother, "will you take milk or coffee?" In full view of the creamy goblet, the son says, "I guess I'll take milk," and proceeds with his breakfast.

"I guess it will rain to-day," soliloquizes Mr. Probs, after closely scanning the barometer, and bringing to bear all his meteorological science upon the murky heavens—"I guess it will rain;" and he takes his umbrella along.

Not long ago I heard an improvement—or, as your musical ladies would say, a variation—on "Says he, and says I." It was on this wise, completely blocking up the flow of narrative of which it formed a part: "Says I; I guess—says he, I guess not, says he. I guess, says I; I guess not, says he"—and so it went, on till I was compelled to take up a newspaper to mitigate, if not escape, the infliction.

Our Southern speech used to be: I reckon, I think, I conjecture, I suppose, or some other word to suit the case, of more or less certainty, based upon a consideration or calculation in the premises.

St. Paul says: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

Let us translate that into the late style, and see how it sounds: "For, I guess that," etc. Have you not enough of it?

Ladies, we implore your help to drive this mongrel word out of the land. Rid us and deliver us of this speech of strangers. Purge out this foreign leaven that has crept unawares into our colloquial language. It is most conspicuous among our newly-educated colored people—they have it worst. They are guessing at everything. It is before and behind and in the middle of their sentences—a beautiful and fascinating affectation. I am inclined to think it caught among the negroes first, and thence spread to the uneducated white people, and thence is spreading even among the educated classes. Let it not once be named among you. Root it out; and be assured that to the extent the alumni of your college do this good service they will be the benefactresses as well as titular mistresses of English literature.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

The health of the city of New Orleans has thus far been unusually good. There has been, we believe, one case of yellow fever. No more than this has come to the knowledge of the Board of Health, and the board is exceedingly vigilant and thorough in its duties. Malarial fever has prevailed in some neighborhoods, but our most skillful and experienced physicians assure us that it is not yellow fever. We believe the city at present is perfectly safe for unacclimated persons. We are having hot weather, but the heat here does not compare with that in the West and North, and we have heard of no cases of prostration or coup de soleil. Yellow fever may come later in the season, but when it does we shall not fail to give notice of its presence. At this writing there is no cause for alarm.

Since writing the above we learn that a number of sporadic cases have occurred, but we still believe there is little danger to unacclimated persons who take care of themselves. The Picayune of the twenty-fourth instant says:

We learn from an official source that within the past few days there have been in New Orleans fourteen cases of yellow fever, seven of which have resulted fatally. The cases are described as sporadic, and the type extremely virulent. The details will be found in our local columns. The Board of Health will combat the disease in every possible way; and while there is thought to be no immediate danger of its spreading, they will environ and isolate it in each locality where it has appeared or may appear, with extreme care.

In all of these fourteen cases the sufferers were unacclimated. In view of this fact, and of the isolation of the cases, there is no cause for alarm among our habitual residents. The actual facts, thus plainly stated, upon this unfortunate but limited visitation will, we hope, have the effect of allaying useless, causeless and damaging excitement.

The Publishing Committee of this paper held their annual meeting at the Seashore camp ground during the time of the camp meeting. R. J. Harp is continued as publisher of the ADVOCATE. We have always believed that our church papers should charge at least $2 50 for an annual subscription, but a majority of the committee and the publisher deemed it inexpedient to raise the price at the present time.

The matter, however, was left to the discretion of the publisher should he see his way clear at any future time to modify or change the present rate. All the members of the Publishing Committee were present except Rev. J. G. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference. Rev. Dr. Watkins acted as chairman of the committee, and was appointed to prepare the usual address to the patrons of the paper. The address has not yet come to hand, but we expect it in time for our next issue.

To be rich you must be simple. In true simplicity there is true sublimity.

These words of the Rev. Phillips Brooks are a pertinent and complete reply to a good deal of not well considered talk about the "two sermons a week" question: "How is it possible,' people say, 'that any man should bring forth two strong good sermons every week?' It is impossible. Let us have only one service every Sunday; and if the people will insist on coming twice to the church, let us charm them with a little good music and a few remarks," and call it a "vesper service," or let us tell a few stories to the Sunday school and call it "children's church," but let us not preach twice to men and women. It is impossible. It is impossible, if by a sermon you intend a finished oration. It is as impossible to produce that twice as it is unprofitable to produce it once a week. But that a man who lives with God who delights to study God's world in the Bible, in the world, in history, in human nature, who is thinking about Christ, and man, and salvation every day, that he should not be able to talk about these things of his heart, seriously, lovingly, thoughtfully, simply, for two half hours every week is inconceivable and I do not believe it. Cast off the haunting burdens of the notion of great sermons." There are, however, some ministers who are not haunted by any such notion, and to them this last hint does not apply.—Advocate.

We publish elsewhere the provisions of the treaty of Berlin. Peace in Europe seems to be assured for some years to come. The territory of Turkey has been curtailed, the protection of Christians guaranteed, and the Moslem power is a mere shadow. Much has been gained for Christian civilization; and while we should have been glad to have seen the Turkish empire entirely dismembered, we are thankful that much has been done toward the advancement of Christianity and stable government. In the order of Providence the problem is being gradually wrought out. It will not be long before the waning crescent shall disappear forever from the horizon of Europe.

The week of prayer begins on Friday, August 2. It would have been better to have had it later, and after the heated term. September would have been a better time. The Bishops, however, have appointed the second of August, and we hope the churches will generally observe it. Services, wherever practicable, should be held daily, and our people, who from any cause are debarred the privileges of meeting together, will find it profitable to make special prayer in private and at the family altar for the outpouring of the Spirit and for the revival of religion throughout the country.

We are glad to hear that our friends on East Baton Rouge circuit are getting along finely under the pastoral care of Rev. R. T. Davis—that they have flourishing prayer meetings, and also that the cause of temperance is prospering. We give the substance of a brother's communication in the above; would have given his letter in part, at least, had it been accompanied by the name of the writer. A constant reader should have learned by this time that we can publish no communication without the name of the writer.

Rev. T. J. Hough, pastor of our church in Natchitoches, La., writes us that he has just closed a protracted meeting of great interest and power. We have a membership in Natchitoches of nearly seventy, and a new church is in progress, to cost about $3,000, and to be finished in November. Bro. Hough is doing a good work, and has reason to be greatly encouraged.

We regret to learn that Mrs. C. S. A. Miller died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Drake, at Waterproof, La., on March 31. Sister Miller was for forty-five years a member of the church in Waterproof, and a most exemplary Christian. Her last hours were peaceful and triumphant.

It will be seen by a notice on the eighth page that the Crystal Springs camp meeting begins on Tuesday, August 6. This camp meeting is one of the largest and most important in the Southwest. All are invited. Let the people gather at the feast of tabernacles.

Rev. J. L. Forsyth sends us the sad intelligence that Sister Johnson, wife of Rev. Pinckney Johnson, of the Mississippi Conference, died at Brookhaven, July 11. We sincerely sympathize with Bro. Johnson in this his time of sorrow.

A subscriber writes us that he has planted two acres in corn expressly for his preacher and the ADVOCATE. The corn is fine, and Providence seems to have blessed the brother's entire crop.

Pere Hyacinthe has returned to Paris, and is again lecturing. Though the late restrictions have been removed, and he is not now fettered as he was as to choice of subjects, still his audiences are not as large as was anticipated.

Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.

Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: Having attended the commencement exercises of Centenary College, and made observations of its administration, methods of instruction and general condition, I take pleasure in reporting my impressions. The number of students in attendance is somewhat larger than the former session, though the patronage is lamentably small. The faculty of instruction is able, and in every way worthy of the utmost confidence. They are men of conscientiousness, fidelity, as well as abundant ability. Their work is thorough, painstaking and honest. The public exercises of commencement week gave ample testimony as to their readiness to instruct and patient faithfulness of labor. Those who received diplomas of graduation rank with young men of any institution in breadth of manner, dignity of deportment and culture of style. I have no hesitancy in saying, though at the expense of seeming extravagance, that the valedictory address was the most appropriate and excellent of its kind I ever heard. For moral tone Centenary College has not a superior and few parallels in our country. The young men are mostly of solid worth, and all, with scarcely an exception, of exemplary morals. There have been no occasions for harsh discipline or stern reproof. Parental affection on the one hand, and filial reverence on the other, have prevented uninterrupted good order and joyful contentment. Eight of the students are in course of preparation for the gospel ministry. Some of these give promise of great success, and distinction.

The entire expense is as cheap as any college in the land. Good board can be had for $10 a month when the student occupies his own room in the college dormitory. Other necessary expenses are a mere trifle. Without a single exception, I believe, the young men appeared quite vigorous physically—a sufficient evidence of the healthfulness of the locality. I felt gratified for the opportunity afforded of visiting this historic place and honored institution of learning, and most heartily commend it to the liberal confidence and patronage of the people. I am now assured that the—how long we cannot say—Centenary College will put on its wonted vigor, and again wield the influence of its once grandly prosperous years. Those immediately in charge of its fortunes have the courage and purpose to win the day, however long delayed.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Vicksburg, July 5, 1878.

Books and Periodicals.

We have received from the Southern Methodist Episcopal Publishing House, Nashville, a Catechism of Church Government, by Bishop Pierce. We have already called attention to this excellent work. It is a pretty thorough exhibition of Methodist polity and economy, well adapted to the advanced classes in the Sunday school, but still better suited for instruction of all our people. It is a work that the preachers can and should be instructed by it, and every member should have it in his hand at once. It is a comprehensive and satisfactory statement and vindication of our church government, and the same is to be circulated and read. We hope it may be ordered largely, and that all our people will read it.

The Southern Review for July is very rich and tempting table contents. We have not had time to examine it, but for the present we give the title of the articles: 1. Christian Cosmos. 2. Fifty Years of Life. 3. Edwards on the Will. 4. Progress in Human Thought. 5. Telephonic and Phonograph. 6. Greek Church. 7. Literature of Science. 8. Celibacy in the Christian Church. 9. Dr. Dabney and Dr. Hodge. 10. The Rock of Our Salvation. 11. Notices of Books.

Sunday Afternoon for August contains: Fishers of Men; A Prison for Debt; The Bakines of Hyanis; Life in Geneva; Superfluous Things; The Royal Mother of a Royal Race; Anna, the Prophetess; Sketches of the Greek Revolution; and other articles.

We are indebted to Hon. E. John Ellis for the report of the Department of Agriculture for 1878.

The circular of the Consolidated Tobacco Association of Jersey City says that there are in Jersey City 1,200 places licensed to sell liquor, a large number without license. The circular claims as a result that the city pays annually for the support of the police department, making a total of $210,000. There was received for 1,672 licenses, $21,875, leaving a deficit for the police of $214,329.

Spanish Manners and Customs.

The Spaniard never does to-day what he can put off till to-morrow. He has no idea of the value of time, and cannot understand why foreigners should make such a fuss about punctuality in keeping engagements. Boys and girls come loitering into school hours after the appointed time, and the teachers say nothing, for it may be themselves next time. Even the railway train is infected by the sleepy atmosphere of Spain. With ordinary trains there is a half hour's rest at every station—big or little, passengers or none—to recover breath after traveling so fast the previous half-hour. The driver must get down to stretch his limbs and have a chat with his friends. The guard has to gather the news of the place, and perhaps take a stroll outside the station to see if there is any distant traveler in view who may perchance be going on, and who, in that case, must be waited for. The passengers descend to have a glass of water, or to replenish their stock of cigarettes and matches. There is no fear of their being left behind. When it is considered time to think of moving on again, first one bell is rung, (to which nobody pays any attention;) then another bell; then a horn blows; and it is only when you hear the steam whistle that you have got "positively the last call." The Spaniard smokes not only in all the carriages of every railway train, but at breakfast and dinner too, irrespective of the presence of ladies; at his place of business, whether that be a private or a government office; and probably spends a fourth of his waking time in making cigarettes and stinking lights, and a fourth of his income in tobacco.

In any reference, however brief to the morals of the Spanish people, their peculiar institution, the bull-fight, cannot be omitted. I shall not attempt what has so often been done—a description of a bull-fight. The subject is not inviting. I only mention one incident which will illustrate how the national institution operates on the character of the people. At a fête de toros at Madrid one of the horses was drawn out of the arena fatally gored by a bull. It was not dead, but its entrails had gushed out, and its limbs were quivering in the death-agony. A ring of boys immediately formed round it, uttering shrieks of delight, one of them with a stick poking at the poor dying creature to "make him kick again." It need not be told what effect this training has upon the youth of the country. The brute creation in Spain groans under the cruelty of man. And this national sport of bull-fighting is not falling into disrepute. Scarce as money is in Spain, means are found to erect new plazas de toros on a grander scale than ever. In small towns, where a bull-ring is unattainable, there must be a suerte de toros. At Huelva, the summer I was there, the Corpus Christi was celebrated by the gift of a bull from the municipality, to be baited through the town. It was no drawback to the hilarious enjoyment of the spectacle that the maddened animal, in its career through the streets, killed one man and fatally wounded another.

STEPS TO HEAVEN.—There was a boy whose slender stock of wit scarce raised him above idiocy, but who had been taught by the Spirit a knowledge above all human wisdom. A friend, wishing to find out whether he had any ideas on the subject of religion, said to him one day: "It is hard work, is it not, to get to heaven?" He was surprised to receive the answer: "No; it is easy. There are only three steps—first, out of self-second, into Christ; third, into heaven."—Sunday Teacher's Treasure.

PRICE OF THE ADVOCATE.

The Publishing Committee, at its session, July 23d passed a resolution recommending that the subscription price of the ADVOCATE be continued at $2. We were opposed to reducing the price when it was done, and did it cautiously in compliance with the wishes of the intervening Conferences. The impression seems to be universal now that it is inexpedient to raise the price. While the other church papers reduced their rates it had no effect, that we could perceive, on our patronage as there was at that time a steady increase; and we see no reason that the rates of our paper here, having a distinct territory, should materially affect the patronage of other papers in the territory of which its rates are never even except by accident. With the expressed confidence of the Publishing Committee as to the mistake of raising, we prefer not to go on till the Conferences in compliance with whose wishes we reduced, shall direct and express their wishes again.

—ROBT. J. HARE, Publisher.

THE tide of transient travel and sightseers rolls this way. The New York Hotel Directory has largely turned in favor of the famous Grand Hotel on Broadway and Thirty-First street. This great hotel has always been a popular resort with the best classes of visitors, and since the rates have been reduced it is more popular than ever.

E. H. ADAMS & BRO.—Bargains in everything in the dry goods line are offered by that exception house, E. H. Adams & Bro. Those desiring cheap bargains should not fail to give them a call, and we assure them that they will get their money's worth.

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Picton street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

MR E. E. F. ROSS, one of the staff of this paper, leaves this evening for the West and East on business connected with the ADVOCATE. Any attention shown him will be appreciated.

THE QUICKEST TIME EAST.—The Great Jackson Route is now making the quickest time to New York ever known, leaving New Orleans daily at 5.45 P. M., and arriving at New York at 6.35 A. M. Allowing for the difference in time between the two cities, the run is made in the unprecedented time of five-nine and three-quarter hours. This quick time is made only by the Great Jackson Route and is the result of its enterprise in rebuilding its track with steel rails and new ties at heavy expense, and the thorough system of ballasting that has been undertaken. This fast train will be of great advantage to the people of this city, which it is hoped they will show their appreciation of its liberal patronage. Only one change of cars, which is made at Columbus, Ohio, where breakfast is taken in the splendid dining hall at that place at 8 A. M.

This route also claims the quickest time to Boston, arriving at 2.10 P. M. Actual running time, sixty-seven and one-half hours. It likewise is the most desirable route for all New England points. The time to all intermediate points is correspondingly less, thus making this the quickest and best route to all the eastern and eastern cities.

Excursion tickets to Waukesha, Oconomowoc and all the Northwestern summer resorts, to Niagara Falls, Put-in-Bay, etc., are on sale at the lowest rates; with the quickest time made by any line, and only one change of cars.

NEW ORLEANS FEMALE COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.—The advertisement of this old institution of learning is published in to-day's issue. This college is well known, by reputation or personally, to a host of our readers. To the management of this college, as in everything else, Madame Lucopez-Leroy adds at a high order of excellence. She has had years of experience, and has devoted a special talent of labor and thought to the work of building up this school, and making it a first class institution of learning. She deserves a liberal patronage, and we commend her institution to the favorable consideration of our readers.

STATIONER LITHOGRAPHER AND PRINTER.—J. S. Rivers & Co., Camp street, has one of the handsomest establishments of the kind in the South, and is prepared to fill all orders in his line in a satisfactory manner. There is no house in the country that turns out better work, and at less prices, than will Orders from the country will receive prompt attention, and we can confidently advise our readers to give this house a trial. Mr. Rivers is one of the most reliable merchants in the city, and one of the best-known stationers and printers in the South.

VANDALIA LINE.—The attention of our readers and the traveling public is called to the merits of the Shawnee line. For parties going East by way of St. Louis there is no better road, comfortable coaches and elegant palace cars gliding noiselessly, swiftly and safely along over a track so smooth that one is almost unconscious of motion unless he chances to look out of the window. Offer for the time scheme unequaled in splendor and in variety by any thing the most fastidious traveler of the present generation ever dreamed of. The popularity of this old and reliable road is constantly and steadily on the increase. The officials of the well-known and highly-respected general manager, Col. Simpson, are fully appreciated by the traveling public.

"NOSES HAVE THEY, BUT THEY SMELL NOT."

Among the lower orders bad smells are little heeded; in fact, "noses have they but they smell not," but, to the refined and educated, a pleasant odor emanating from a well-dressed person, produces feelings of pleasure and delight. The fragrance of Dr. Price's Eclipse Perfumes produces an influence that is captivating and delightful.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

DR. WILHOFT'S ANTI PERIODIC OR FEVER AND AGUE TONIC.—Wilhoft's Tonic has established itself as the real infallible Chill-cure. It is universally admitted to be the only reliable and harmless Chill medicine now in use. It still keeps confirmed by thousands of certificates of the very best people from all parts of the country. Same, and Instrumental Music 70 00

Same, Instrumental Music and Drawing or Painting 80 00

The object of the scholarship is to assist in erecting the new college building.

The unprecedented success of the college is its best recommendation.

Bishop McTyeire writes in the Nashville Christian Advocate: "Several days spent in the delightful college family at Brookhaven left me in no doubt as to how this success has been achieved. The location is good, and the management better.

"Long will I remember the morning hymns and chanted prayers. Another fact noteworthy was the plainness of dressing—neat, tasteful, but plain."

The health record is as good as that of any school in Kentucky, Virginia or Tennessee.

The corner stone of the new college building will be laid in August.

Patronize this school, and you will assist in further developing an institution which has been rapidly growing for eleven years. Send for a catalogue.

STONE IN THE BLADDER

RELIEVED BY THE

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

AFTER THE LIFE OF THE PATIENT WAS DESPAIRED OF BY HIS MEDICAL ADVISERS. THE STONE DISSOLVED IN THREE HOURS IN A GLASS OF THE LITHIA WATER.

CASE OF MR. C. WOLFF, of Point Coupée, La.

POINT COUPÉE, La., April 3, 1878.

MR. THOMAS F. GOODE: By request I give you the following history of my case: Two years ago I began to suffer with severe pain in my kidneys, and to have periodical attacks of illness—which caused the most excruciating agony, from which I was relieved by the discharge of a stone from four to six grains in weight. There was never entire freedom from the pain in the kidneys. In eighteen months I discharged seven large stones, besides quantities of small gravel and sand. As the result of this protracted and great suffering my general health was shocked to so low a condition that my physicians advised me that I had nothing to hope for from medicine—that my case was a hopeless one—and I looked for relief only in death. To this state of despondency I was advised by Mr. L. L. Lyons, a druggist of New Orleans, to try the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, spring No. 2. A week after I began to use it I had a slight attack as which I passed two small stones. Placing one of these in a glass of the Water, in three hours I found it dissolved to a fine dust, which gave me confidence, and I persevered in its use. I have had no attack since. The pain in my kidneys has entirely disappeared. I have regained my usual weight, and my general health is perfectly restored. I very cheerfully acknowledge my indebtedness for my life and the comfort which I now enjoy to this great health-giving Water. Respectfully, C. WOLFF.

This Water, in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, can be had at the Springs, and of L. L. LYONS, Wholesale Druggist, 12 and 14 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

INDIGESTION IN HORSES.

In the treatment of indigestion the most important part is in ascertaining the cause, and removing it. If occurring during the process of dentition, the temporary unshed teeth, or the crowns of such, should be removed, and any irregularity of the dental apparatus should be attended to. In all cases a change of diet should be resorted to, substituting roots or green food for hay and grain, and otherwise using such food as may be most easily digested and assimilated. An aperient is always beneficial, even if diarrhea be present, varying the strength of the dose and altering the ingredients according to the nature of the case. In aged animals aloes combined with vegetable tonic and stomachics; in young animals a dose of castor or linseed oil. After the operation of the purgative, vegetable tonics combined with an alkali will have a good effect in improving the appetite and correcting acidity. In sucking foals or calves a change of milk is necessary, the disease being probably due to imperfect secretion of the gastric fluids; pepsin may be used beneficially. This treatment, if the indigestion is not attributable to the presence of other disease, will, with careful attention to diet, pure air, moderate exercise and good grooming, generally effect a cure.

Cattle are subject to chronic indigestion from causes previously mentioned, and exhibit symptoms similar to what are observed in the horse. In addition, however, there is tympanites or bloating recurring at short intervals, particularly after a hearty meal. If in such cases the disease does not disappear with the use of aperients, stomachics and vegetable tonics, recourse must be had to an operation—that is, of opening the rumen externally, and extracting with the hand any foreign substance contained in the stomach, or, if no foreign body is discovered, the mere removal of the long-retained food will restore the organ to its healthy condition.—E. T. Hargrave, U. S., in Kentucky Stock Record.

FEEDING APPLE-TREES.

We would think a man would feed a row of cattle in stanchions on the side next to their bodies, instead of putting the fodder before their heads. This is, however, substantially what I saw a man doing the other day. He was feeding a lot of apple-trees with barn-yard manure, and piled it carefully up by the body of the trees, instead of placing it where the mouths of his subjects could readily get at it. The fact of the business is, we do not know much about roots. Square and cubit roots we learned by heart in the schoolroom; but these cylindrical roots that feed our crops and trees are pretty nearly a sealed book to us. An idea insinuated itself into my cranium last summer, while digging in the orchard, to see if the apple worm did not hide beneath the sod. I noticed the sod was tougher next to the body of the tree, while at a distance of eight and ten feet it was quite meager. I scratched my head a great deal over the matter, but a little scratching of the ground did me better service. I found the mouths of the apple-tree were out there several feet from the trunk of the tree, and sucked in so much of the moisture and nutriment that the grass had but little to live on, and gave up the fight. I know now where to feed my apple-trees.—Detroit Free Press.

GOOD COWS.—The largest recorded yield of a single cow, that is perfectly well authenticated, is that of an animal kept at the jail at Lewes, England. In eight consecutive years she gave 9,772 gallons, or an average of more than 1,200 gallons a year. She was milked one year, 325 days, and gave 1,230 gallons, which made 450 pounds of butter, or at the rate of a pound of butter from 2¾ pounds of milk.

A Mr. Scott, of Shaftesbury, Vt., had a cow whose milk yielded 301 pounds of butter in 1865, or at the rate of one pound of butter from 21 pounds of milk.

An Ayrshire cow recently yielded 300 pounds of butter in 4 months after calving, or between March 1st, 1876, and January 1st, 1877, besides supplying a family with milk and cream.

It must be apparent that the proportion of butter will vary not only with the breed, but with the season of the year. The milk of the Ayrshire cow is generally richer in butter than that of the Short Horn, but not so rich as the Jersey or Brittany. The best returns of butter are generally got late in the summer, or early in the fall—September and October.—Canada Farmer's Advocate.

EFFECT OF AMMONIA ON FLOWERS.—Prof. Gubba has been examining the effects of ammonia on the color of flowers. It is well known that the smoke of tobacco will, when applied in sufficient quantity, change the tint of flowers, but Prof. Gubba experiments by pouring a little ammonia liquor into a saucer and inverting a funnel over it. Placing the flowers in the tube of the latter, he finds that blue, violet and purple-colored blossoms become of a fine green, carmine and crimson become black, white become yellow, while parti-colored flowers, such as red and white, are changed to green and yellow. If the flowers are immersed in water the natural color will return in a few hours. Prof. Gubba also found that asters acquire a pleasing color when submitted to the fumes of ammonia.

AN EXCELLENT PLAN FOR GROWING CUCUMBERS.—Take a large barrel or hogshead; saw it in two in the middle, and bury each half in the ground even with the top. Then take a small keg and bore a small hole in the bottom; place the keg in the center of the barrel, the top even with the ground, and fill in the barrel around the keg with rich earth suitable for the growth of cucumbers. Plant your seed midway between the edges of the barrel and the keg, and make a kind of arbor a foot or two high for the vines to run on. When the ground becomes dry, pour water in the keg in the evening; it will pass out at the bottom of the keg into the barrel and rise up to the roots of the vines, and make them moist and green. Cucumbers cultivated in this way will grow to a great size, as they are made independent both of drouth and wet weather. In wet weather the barrel can be covered, and in dry the ground can be kept moist by pouring water in the keg.—North Carolina Farmer.

SELLING EGGS BY WEIGHT.—A correspondent of the American Grocer writes as follows in reference to the manner of selling eggs:

One change I should like to see brought about is in the manner of selling eggs; and, instead of by the dozen, to see them sold and quoted by the pound. Now there is no more justice in a consumer or retail dealer being asked to pay a certain price for a lot of eggs that will only weigh 17 or 18 ounces, and even some lots as low as 14 ounces, when the next customer may get for the same price a lot that will weigh 22 to 24 ounces (and sometimes more), than there is in selling short-weight canned goods or raisins. Can't the subject be agitated to the extent of bringing the attention of the trade strongly enough to the matter to create a change? I presume there is a standard weight for eggs, but if so I have never seen it.

BELLS FOR SHEEP.—The cheapest and best insurance against dogs killing sheep are bells—plenty of bells. The sheep-dog is a great coward when in pursuit of mischief, and he waits to do it quietly—wants no noise, no alarm. Bells bought at wholesale do not cost much. Buy a side of bridle-leather at the currier's, for collars, and put a bell on every sheep, if your flock is small. The price of one sheep will buy a gross of bells and leather enough and buckles to strap them. Put this gross of bells on a flock of sheep and they will frighten every dog out of the field. Flock-masters are slow to adopt a simple and cheap remedy like this, but will go to the Legislature, hire lobby influence, and spend large sums of money to little purpose. Members of the Legislature are fond of dogs themselves, and do not want them taxed. They own no sheep, and care but little about their protection.—Southern Farmer.

CELERY FOR FARMERS.—This vegetable is not generally cultivated as it should be, for the reason, doubtless, that the millions who could most easily have it have never learned to like it. As with tomatoes and some other vegetables, the taste for celery has to be cultivated; but when once acquired it is never lost, and no delicacy of the garden is more highly appreciated. In most parts of the country the use of celery is principally confined to city people, while farmers do not know or care for it. There never has been, and never will be, too much labor employed in producing articles which add to human happiness, but it often happens that this labor is so misdirected that some products are greater in quantity than for the time can be used, and so labor is poorly rewarded.—Country Gentleman.

TO CURE BEEF FOR DRYING.—This recipe keeps the meat moist, so that it has none of that toughness that dried beef mostly has when a little old. To every twenty-eight or thirty pounds allow one tablespoonful of saltpeter, one quart of fine salt, mixed with molasses until the color is about that of brown sugar; rub the pieces of meat with the mixture, and when done let all stick to it that will.

Pack in a deep, narrow vessel, as a keg or half barrel, that the pickle may cover the meat, and let it remain forty-eight hours; at the end of that time enough pickle will be formed to nearly cover it. Hang it in a smokable place for drying. Allow all the mixture to adhere to the meat that will.—Hancock Clarion.

MEAT RISSOLES.—Chop fine the cold meat, carefully excluding every particle of fat, skin and outside; pound in a mortar with a small piece of butter, shallot, pepper, salt, and powdered dried herbs; moisten with stock; put this into a pan on the fire and take off as soon as hot; stir in the yolk of an egg beaten up with a little lemon juice, and put the mixture by to cool; make a paste of six ounces of flour, two ounces of butter, a pinch of salt, the yolks of two eggs, and a little water; roll it out and cut it into small squares; put the meat in the center and paste the corners over, pressing them well down; fry in hot lard and serve with parsley.—Scientific World.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—Three cups of Graham, three cups Indian meal, one cup flour, one cup molasses, one quart of cold water, a large spoonful of baking powder sifted into the dry meal, plenty of salt, mix thoroughly, and boil for at least four hours in a tin pail well buttered, covered tight, and set on a plate in a pot of boiling water; when the water is removed it must be boiling. Many persons think rye flour is the same as rye Graham, but the former will not make Boston brown bread at all. I use a coffee cup for a measure, and unless the receipt is carefully followed the bread will not be a success. If it is, I will guarantee the dish to be of the very finest.

JAPANESE METHOD OF COOKING RICE.—A letter from Japan says: "They know how to cook rice here. Only just enough cold water is poured on to prevent the rice from burning to the bottom of the pot, which has a close-fitting cover and is set on a moderate fire. The rice is steamed, rather than boiled, until it is nearly done; then the cover of the pot is taken off, the surplus steam and moisture are allowed to escape, and the rice turns out a mass of snow-white kernels, each separate from the other, and as much superior to the soggy mass we usually get in the United States as a fine mealy potato is to the water-soaked article."

Prof. Wilder, of Cornell University, gives these short rules for action in case of accident: For dust in the eyes, avoid rubbing; dash cold water in them; remove cinders, etc., with the round point of a lead-pencil. Remove insects from the ear by tepid water; never put a hard instrument into the ear. If an artery is cut, compress it above the wound; if a vein is cut, compress it below. If choked, go upon all fours and cough. For slight burns, dip the part in cold water; if the skin is destroyed cover with varnish. For apoplexy, raise the head and body; for fainting, lay the person flat.

WATER IN THE EARS.—A warning to those about to indulge in seabathing is given in the Medical Record by Dr. Sexton, of the New York Ear Infirmary. He finds salt-water to be peculiarly irritating to the delicate membrane of the inner ear, while cold fresh water may be equally injurious. Every year hundreds of people are sent to the infirmary for treatment whose trouble has arisen from getting water into their ears while bathing, or from catching cold in the ears at such times. He recommends, as a precaution, the plugging of the ears with cotton before entering the water, particularly in surf-bathing.

MEAT SCALLOPS.—Take small scallop-shells or small tin patty-pans and line them with mashed potato; mince any kind of cold meat, and mix it with a little bread-crumb and minced boiled onion, seasoning to taste, and moistening with a little cold gravy; put a layer of this over the mashed potato in the shell, placing a layer of mashed potato on top, smoothing nicely and pressing it at the edges in scallops; lay a thin bit of butter in the center, and brown in a hot oven. Allow one shell or pan to each person.

TO PREVENT GLUE FROM CRACKING.—Glue frequently cracks because of the dryness of the air in rooms warmed by stoves. An Austrian contemporary recommends the addition of a little chloride of calcium to glue to prevent this disagreeable property of cracking. Chloride of calcium is such a deliquescent salt that it attracts enough moisture to prevent the glue from cracking. Glue thus prepared will adhere to glass, metal etc., and can be used for putting on labels without danger of their dropping off.

FRESSED VEAL OR CHICKEN.—Put four pounds of veal or two chickens in a pot, cover with water, stew slowly until the meat drops from the bone, then take out and chop it. Let the liquor boil down until there is a cupful, put in a small cup of butter, a tablespoonful of pepper, a little allspice and a beaten egg; stir this through the meat. Slice a hard-boiled egg, lay in your mold, and press in the meat. When put upon the table garnish with celery tops or parsley.

In South Holland a good cow will produce during the summer months, about 26 pounds of butter. In the high pastures of Seara, in Switzerland, the yield during the 99 days of summer is about 40 pounds, or less than half a pound per day. In Holstein and Lueneburg 100 pounds is considered a fair return; and even in England, 160 to 180 pounds annually, or from 8 to 9 ounces per day, for ten months in the year, are accounted an average produce.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

The Eucalyptus or Australian gum-tree, which has been extensively planted in California on account of its negativing the effects of malarias and miasma, has been found to possess the additional property of being a cure for rheumatism. A number of cases are reported where the leaves, moistened and bound upon the afflicted parts, have effected a cure, and a San Francisco doctor has gathered and prepared half a ton of them for shipment to the East.

A beautiful bracket may be made in this way: Make a rough wooden frame-work and cut pasteboard to fit it. Cover the pasteboard with dry moss, lichens and twigs, sewed on with green thread, the different shades and varieties tastefully combined. Then crystallize a solution of alum-water till the moss is studded with fine crystals like dew-drops. When dry, fasten to the frame with long, slender tacks, which will be hidden by the moss.

FRIED POTATOES WITH EGGS.—Slice cold boiled potatoes and fry in good butter until brown; beat one or two eggs and stir into them just as you dish them for the table. Do not leave them a moment on the fire after the eggs are in, for if they harden, they are not half so nice. One egg is enough for three or four persons, unless they are very fond of potatoes; if they are, have plenty and put in two.

The superintendent approached a youth of color, who was present for the first time in Sunday school, and inquired his name, for the purpose of placing it on the roll. The good man tried in vain to preserve his gravity when the answer was returned: "Well, mussa calls me Tap'n; but my 'ristocratic name is Moses."

WOULD NEVER USE THEM.

If persons were aware of the injurious character of most baking powders, they would never use them. Ignorant persons know nothing about the chemical combinations necessary. The only good baking powder, prepared by a physician with special regard to its healthfulness, is Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

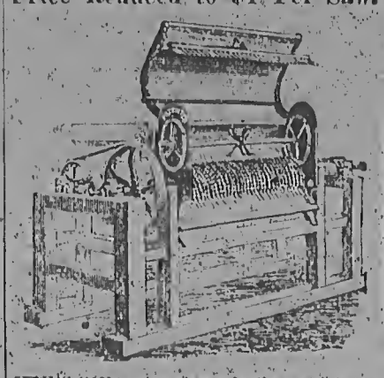
JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
COTTON FACTORS,
59 Carondelet St., New Orleans.
GENERAL AGENTS FOR
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin
PATENTED JULY 16, 1873.
Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the seed from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economizing steam or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater marketable. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every bale ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

MEDICAL.

HEADQUARTERS
ARE AT
No. 106 BOURBON St.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

ALL his medical preparations are put up from native growing herbs gathered fresh throughout the year as they are wanted.
He treats all diseases and complaints, whether of the young or old, males or females, and gives a wonderful satisfaction generally in two weeks' treatment.
Especial attention is called to

The Wonder Doctor's Indian Acclimating Bitters.

This Bitters is manufactured only from one of the most rich and rare growths, plentifully in the medicinal districts of the South. I never use two or three different kinds of herbs at one time. This Bitters will give a wonderful satisfaction to all humans suffering of general complaints, and it will be found to be the only safe remedy against YELLOW FEVER. Remember that the Indians never suffer of that dreadful disease. My Bitters will cure all sorts of all miasmatic complaints, such as Swamp Fever, Bone Fever, Chills and Fever, Typhus, etc.
In nothing can be found in a drug store to give relief, or a cure in case of Dyspepsia, Yellow Jaundice, Liver Complaints, Cakes of Stomach, Heart and Kidney Complaints, Sick Headache, Cold Stomach, Nervous Debility, Loss of Appetite, Cramps or Colic in the Bowels, the use of my INDIAN ACCLIMATING BITTERS will give entire satisfaction. It is especially a wonderful satisfaction-giving remedy for Female Complaints, such as Falling of the Womb, General Weakness and Periodical Disorders.
This Bitters should be used in every family as a general protector against complaints and diseases. It purifies the air before it penetrates the lungs, and gives a digestion.
Try only one bottle of my INDIAN ACCLIMATING BITTERS, and you will be satisfied to buy in a little supply for family use.

SCIENTIFIC.

—Several members of Parliament and men interested in the progress of technical education among workmen and artisans have begun the formation of a museum of trade patterns and "industrial examples" at Manchester, England.

—Clock-work has been successfully applied as a motor to sewing machines by a mechanician of Vienna. It can be wound up in a few minutes, and it will run for several hours, the speed being meanwhile fully under the control of the operator.

—There are 70 000 miles of telegraph wire in the United States and 30 offices, or one mile of line to every 30 square miles of area. England has 75 000 miles of line and 30 offices, or one mile of line to every one and a half mile of area. Prussia has 31 500 miles of line and 3 offices, or one mile of line to every 9 square miles of area.

—Manganese is not a normal constituent of the blood, although it is sometimes found in it in variable quantities. M. Richet recently made some quantitive determinations which confirmed the prevailing view that any manganese in the blood should be regarded as an accidental ingredient derived from the food.

—A case of poisoning by arsenic in toilet powder has attracted attention in the north of Europe, where some remarkable instances of accidental poisoning by arsenic have lately been made public. In Sweden Prof. Wallenstam, who suffered from gastric disease, had one of his Blackers examined, and arsenic was found in it; he, having some other Blackers examined, he found arsenic in several of them. The professor, then remembering that one of his children a few years previously had died from mysterious lingering illness, had the child's blanket examined, and the picture was found to be strongly impregnated with arsenic.

—Mr. Edison, of electric lighting fame, two years ago invented a new and remarkable invention. It is based upon the principle of the phonograph, and called the enchrosscope, and translating system of telegraphy. The instrument consists of a revolving disk, upon which is stamped down a sheet of paper. The surface of the disk is marked by a spiral groove, beginning at the center and gradually expanding, like a screw-thread. The disk is made to revolve by an electric motor, and while revolving a magnet moves over the surface, following the groove. A metallic arm holding the disk in place is caused to move so that the point which works in connection with the magnet directly over the spiral, much the same as the point in Edison's phonograph, moves over the surface of tin-foil on the revolving cylinder. The sheet of paper thereby becomes a matrix and stereotype, as it were of the characters transmitted. This matrix may become the medium of transmitting the communication at any times and from many different places as may be desired. By switching the revolving disk with the battery the disk will be made to revolve and automatically transmit. The great advantage of this instrument is that a message may be sent something in the ordinary telegraphic ways in as many places as may be desired.

—The Sonorous Sand of Kaui.—W. B. Frink, of Honolulu has sent some of this strange sand, taken from a bank on the Island of Kauai, to the Academy of Sciences, San Francisco. It is better for than describes its peculiarity. The bank which is composed of this sand commences at a perpendicular bluff, at the southwest end of the island, and extends one and a half miles almost due south, parallel with the beach, which is about one hundred yards distant from the base of the sand-bank. This sand bank is about sixty feet high, and at the extreme south end of the angle preserves it as steep as the nature of the sand will permit. The bank is constantly extending to the south. It is said by the natives that at the bluff and along the middle of the bank the sand is not sonorous. But at the extreme south end and for half a mile north, if you slap two handfuls together, there is a sound produced like the low hooting of an owl—more or less sharp, according as the motion is quick or slow. Sit down upon the sand and give one loud a quick circular motion, and the sound is like the heavy base of a melodeon. Kneel upon the steep incline, extend the two hands, and clasp as much sand as possible, slide rapidly down, carrying all that you can, and the sound accumulates as you descend until it is like distant thunder. In this experiment the sound was sufficient to frighten our horses, faded in a short distance from the base of the drift. But the greatest sound we produced was by leaving one native to span us belly and another taking him by the feet and dragging him rapidly down the incline, carrying as much sand as possible with them. With this experiment the sound was terrific, and could have been heard many hundred yards distant. With all the experiments that were made, it seemed the sound was in proportion to the amount of sand put in motion with a proportionate velocity. Another consideration seems requisite—that is, its perfect dryness. The dry sand would sound on the surface, where six inches beneath it was wet; but if any of the wet sand became mingled with the dry, its property of sounding ceased at once. The sand appears to the eye like ordinary beach-sand, but ordinary beach-sand will not produce the sounds. It has been said that it lost its sonorous properties when taken away from the bank. But I can discover no diminishing of its sonorous qualities, even [illegible] the bottle uncorked, and again frequently, and an hour more than ordinarily this time of year. Perhaps to a very dampatmosphere absorb moisture enough to its sounding.—Alta Cali-

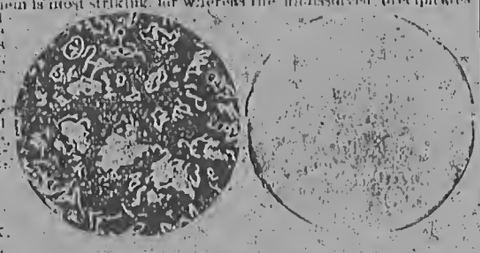
MILK OF MAGNESIA
IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. Perfectly prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The sympathies of this preparation renders perfect debility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a teaspoonful part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia lies all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates, in fact is perfectly dissolved.



Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggists for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

BREECH-LOADERS.
WE take this opportunity of informing customers and friends that the first installment of our fall stock of these goods (unexpectedly delayed a few weeks) has arrived and is ready for inspection. The Breech Loading Shot Guns alone, one department in Store comprises upward of 30 different styles and patterns, ranging through every desirable grade. These fresh importations can be profitably afforded lower than ever before, owing to present low cost of gold and sterling exchange, while all our old stock has been marked down to meet the shrinkage in value from declining gold. Don't take our word for it, but call and see for yourselves, whether and wisely to buy now or not.

SNAP.—The Orbit thinks that was a good answer which was given to a vestryman who was always expressing his anxiety for "more snap." In his rector's sermons. "Perhaps," he said, "there would be a little more snap in me if there were more of it in those whom I serve for Christ's sake." When half the congregation, says the Orbit have not snap enough to get up betimes on Sunday, and bring themselves and families to church; when they have not the snap to keep all that depends on them up to the mark; when six of eight vestrymen have not snap enough to see that subscriptions and pew-rents are duly collected and current expenses met punctually; when the snap of an entire congregation fails to impress them with the self-respect sufficient to sustain a rector's effort by some effort on their part to give life to services and reality to all forms of parochial work; then what wonder if the only snap in a rector be that of a broken spirit, from which nothing can restore him to elasticity and vigor but a new spirit in his parishioners.

How magnificent is this idea of God's government! That he inspires the whole and every part of his universe, every moment, and orders it according to the counsel of his infinite wisdom and goodness, by his omnipotent will; whose thought is power, and his accession thousand times quicker than the light; unconfused in a multiplicity exceeding number, and unwearied through eternity.—Dr. Ogden.

The grocers of Blackburn, during the recent strike of operatives in Lancashire, issued a manifesto in which they declared that they could give no more credit until the operatives resumed work; but, they added, with an air of magnificent self-abnegation, "should trade revive, and a period of prosperity ensue, the operatives of Blackburn may rely on the support of their friends, the grocers."

When he had called the meeting to order, Brother Gardner arose and said: "Gem'len, if it wasn't for de wheels on a waglin de wagin wouldn't move. When de wheels am on, den what?" "Grease!" solemnly exclaimed an old man. "K'rect," whispered the president softly, rubbing his hands together. "We hez the waglin an' de wheels. We will now pass de hat aroun' fur de grease."

The old story of a man who listened to a very pathetic discourse from a strange pulpit one day, but was the only person in the house unaffected, is put to many things of these times. Upon being inquired of by some one how he could refrain, he answered, with a characteristic aridity: "Oh, sir, I belong to another church."

WE WISH TO SAY

to our readers that Dr. Price's Special Flavoring Extracts of Rose, Almond, Nectarine, Vanilla, Lemon, etc., are the finest, purest and most natural flavors we have ever used. The common flavoring extracts in the market bear no comparison for fine flavor to Dr. Price's.

Religious Notices.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.—The seventh annual camp meeting at Crystal Springs, under the auspices of the Bonlington Camp Meeting Association, will begin on Tuesday, August 6, and continue not less than eight days.

Reduced fare on the railroad will be granted from all points on the road between New Orleans and Canton to Crystal Springs during the meeting.

Board and lodging can be had on the ground, as usual, at moderate rates.

Preachers are especially invited. Ample arrangements are made for their accommodation.

The services will be under the direction of Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, D. D., presiding elder of the district.

W. C. WILKINSON,
Secretary of Association.

THE delegates to the Prattville District Conference of the Alabama Conference will buy round-trip tickets on the Mobile and Montgomery, the Western and Selma and Gulf railroads. Those who fail to buy round trip tickets will be denied the benefit of reduced rates. The steamer Billie Collins leaves Montgomery on Thursday evening, and will bring delegates to Autauga Landing for it. Arrangements will be made to meet the brethren at White Hall on the Western road, on Wednesday evening, the 7th o'clock, and on Thursday morning at eight o'clock.

NEIL GILLIS, P. C.

AT SMITH CAMP GROUND Coffeeville circuit, Choctaw county, Ala., there will be a camp meeting, embracing the first Sunday in September, 1878, beginning on Friday night before. For this meeting we most earnestly solicit the cordial support of the entire circuit and adjacent communities. To unbelievers of the gospel we say, "Come over and help us."

ALEX. HOOD, P. C.

THE delegates to the Alexandria District Conference of the Louisiana Conference August 2, 1878, upon arrival in Harrisburg will report at the store of Heckman & Bro., and their homes will be assigned them.

C. R. GODFREY.

HEALING SPRINGS CAMP MEETING will begin on Thursday evening, August 22, and continue several days. The encampment is located near the mineral springs, and is a delightful summer resort. Ministers in delicate health will find this a good opportunity to visit the springs and recruit their strength. Cars leave Buckatunna station, Mobile and Ohio railroad, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays; distance, thirteen miles. Ministers will be taken from the station to the camp ground and returned there free of charge. Those who do go coming will please inform me what day they will be at the station. Meals can be obtained at the hotel at fifty cents. Lodging, fifty cents.

W. H. WEIR, P. C.

GREENSBORO DISTRICT ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Bishop Keener will hold the above District Conference at Belmont, including the first Sabbath in August; the meeting to begin on Thursday before, with preaching at eleven o'clock. Mc. Dowell is the nearest depot on the Alabama Central railroad. Trains pass there going and coming to the evening and about midnight. Conveyances will be there on the arrival of the trains, going both ways, to carry the guests a distance of four miles. It is very desirable that the attendance be full and prompt.

A. B. MITCHELL, P. E.

THE camp meeting at Sims' chapel St. Stephen's circuit, Alabama Conference, will begin on Thursday night before the third Sunday in September.

W. H. MORRIS, P. C.

THE District Conference for Selma district will begin at eight o'clock P. M., with a sermon by Rev. O. F. Ellis in Uniontown.

J. W. RUSH.

THE ATTENTION of the Cotton owners in the United States is called to this

NEW AND IMPORTANT INVENTION.

This STEAM PULLER has been thoroughly tested, and has demonstrated the fact that we can apply to Cotton Bales any required tensil strain, and BUCKLE THEM AT EXACTLY THE HIGHEST POINT REACHED, and no slipping of the bands through the buckle, all the bands being drawn taut and buckled at the same instant, turning out a perfect bale, and without regard to the size, weight or shape of the bale.

THE BUCKLE is simply perfect; it is cheap and strong, and can be furnished on the order of a day by the million. The old bands are used as the y come off the bales, and NOTHING LOST.

THE PULLER can be attached to any size or style of press, and at an expense that is slight compared to the benefit to be derived by the Compress. It is simple, and can be operated by regular compressmen without danger of getting out of order. The speed is equal or greater than ordinary hand-tying.

BLESSING IN DENIAL.

I asked of God a single gift;
He said no nay:
He does not see my aching heart,
I could but say.

Then in its stead he sent to me
A priceless gift,
That on my heart in glory burst,
As sun through rift.

And in my ear he whispered low:
"Dost thou not see,
Obedient child, how I have proved
My love to thee?

"In granting not thy earnest prayer,
That foolish give
A greater blessing in its stead:
Believe and live."

DOMESTIC.

CHARLESTON, July 24.—The Liberian emigrant bark Azor arrived here to-day, having left Monrovia June 18. She brings fifteen colored persons, sent out last winter by the American Colonization Society, and Mr. Williams, the News and Courier correspondent.

The emigrants carried to Monrovia by the Azor were being cared for by the Liberian government. The Azor will probably take out another shipload of emigrants next month.

NEW YORK, July 24.—A letter from Havana says: "Yellow fever is making the usual havoc at this season of the year, and a large number of cases are reported from the military and other hospitals."

Capt. Fulton, of the bark Maria Canaga, which arrived to-day from Hiogo, died of yellow fever on the passage.

GALVESTON, July 25.—The Board of Health to-day quarantined against New Orleans. No passengers by steam or sail will be permitted to come in after to-day. Vessels will be fumigated and disinfected at quarantine station before they will be permitted to come to the wharves.

In consequence of this quarantine the Morgan line has concluded not to sell tickets for Texas till the embargo is removed.

CHICAGO, July 26.—The Signal service observer here reports the rainfall last night, according to the gauge, as over four inches—the greatest on record here in any one night. Elsewhere in the Northwest, except Quincy, there seems to have been very much less rain.

The damage on account of flooded basements cannot be calculated. Among the heaviest losses are Carson, Pierre & Co.'s westside dry goods house. Their basement was flooded, and goods reported damaged to the extent of $30,000 to $50,000; this amount $10,000 was on carpets.

The postoffice building, which is undergoing repairs, suffered to the extent of many thousands of dollars—rain coming from the roof, drenching floors and ceilings, and damaging the stock of postal cards, blanks, etc. Military headquarters, in the same building, suffered considerably.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 26.—Among the passengers by the steamer City of Tokio was Mr. Seward, United States minister at Pekin, on his way to Washington. The Chinese embassador and party will leave for Washington in a few days. No formal reception was tendered on their arrival—none of the United States officials welcoming the party on landing. A number of Chinese merchants met them at the wharf, and they were subsequently received at the Palace Hotel.

NEW YORK, July 26.—A letter from Auckland, New Zealand, June 1, says: The British ship Lochard, from London for Melbourne, was lost off Cape Otway, June 1. Seventeen passengers and the crew, numbering thirty-two, were lost, except one passenger and one of the crew.

PENSACOLA, July 26.—By a resolution of the Board of Health, no vessels from New Orleans will be allowed to enter this port after this date (July 26) until further notice.

B. C. WHITE.

DUBUQUE, July 26.—Mayor Dutton will issue a proclamation to-morrow quarantining New Orleans on and after July 27. Through travel on trains from New Orleans will not be interfered with.

MONTGOMERY, July 26.—Ten days' quarantine has been established by land and water against New Orleans.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Reports to the Surgeon General, United States Marine Hospital service, show 18 cases of yellow fever and 17 deaths up to yesterday at New Orleans.

No new cases at the Brooklyn navy-yard. From the tenth instant to noon to-day 6 new cases have occurred at Key West.

During the week ending July 13 there were 97 deaths from yellow fever and 22 from smallpox at Havana and Matanzas. Increased cases and increased ratio of death.

MEMPHIS, July 27.—In consequence of the existence of yellow fever in New Orleans the Board of Health of this city to-day determined to establish a quarantine for boats from that place at the foot of President's Island, twelve miles below the city.

SHREVEPORT, July 27.—In addition to the river quarantine, the Board of Health to-day quarantined against all through passenger and freight from infected cities via Vicksburg and over the railroad. The quarantine will be rigidly enforced.

MOBILE, July 27.—The city and authorities have established quarantine against New Orleans. Nothing but the United States mail car will be allowed to pass through the county or approach the city, after the twenty-ninth instant, until further notice.

GALVESTON, July 27.—The Board of Health to-day passed a resolution quarantining vessels from all eastern and foreign gulf ports for twenty days, the quarantine to include passengers and freight.

MEMPHIS, July 27.—Information has been received here that the bale of cotton entered by the Memphis Cotton Exchange has been awarded the first premium at the Paris Exposition.

LAKE CHARLES, July 29.—The eclipse began at 2.45 P. M., and ended at 4.45 P. M.; total duration, two hours. The total eclipse occurred at 3.45 P. M., and lasted one minute. Clouds occasionally obscured the sun, but the view at the commencement, for most of the duration, and for the last half hour was wholly unobscured. At the moment of total obscuration a match had to be lighted to note the hour on the clock. During the following minute a perceptible halo ringed the moon, the surface of the latter looking like blush steel. No perturbation was evinced by animals; dogs and cats retained their position in the shade where they were lying down when the eclipse began; cattle browsed quietly in the field. Children were interested, but not frightened. While looking through smoked glasses at the sun a general exclamation of delight arose from the boys and girls in town at the moment of total obscuration. The light then resembled twilight outdoors, but in houses the rooms were very dark. The first reappearance of the sun looked like a brilliant star of the first magnitude on the edge of a globe of steel.

DENVER, July 29.—Successful observations of the eclipse were had here. As the period of totality approached the sight was grand. During the obscuration the moon appeared like a huge black ball surrounded by a beautiful circle of light, and as the sunlight suddenly burst forth again the chickens crowed as though morning had dawned.

NATCHEZ, July 29.—No cases of yellow fever here so far. From and after Tuesday, July 30, at 3 P. M., a strict quarantine will be enforced against all vessels, both from the North and the South.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, July 24.—A dispatch from Rome reports that the Vatican is elaborating a project with relation to the church in the United States, similar to that in regard to churches in the British Isles, placing it under immediate authority of the Pope.

PARIS, July 24.—The Defence, a clerical journal, publishes a letter from Rome, announcing that the papal nuncio at Munich will go to Berlin to conclude arrangements which will restore religious peace in Germany.

PARIS, July 25.—Nubar Pasha, having been summoned by the Khedive to aid him in reforms which have become necessary to Egypt, starts to-morrow for Cairo. The presence of Nubar Pasha in Egypt will smooth over the last difficulties which stand in the way of a complete understanding between the Khedive and England and France.

MADRID, July 25.—There is much distress in the agricultural districts in consequence of the drouth.

In Andalusia the peasants resist the collection of the octroi and land tax. Locusts and the phylloxera are very prevalent.

LONDON, July 26.—The Post's dispatch from Berlin announces that all the powers except the Porte have ratified the treaty of peace concluded by the Congress of Berlin.

ROME, July 27.—The Pope is in good health, and has dispensed with the attendance of his chief physician, who has gone to the country on a furlough.

LONDON, July 29.—The Post's Berlin dispatch states that Russia is still negotiating for the purchase of fast North German Lloyd and Hamburg steamers.

The Times announces officially that the Marquis of Lorne has accepted the Governor generalship of Canada.

The special correspondent of the Daily News in his dispatch from Brod, dated Sunday, July 28, makes no mention of the entry of the Austrian troops into Bosnia.

A dispatch to the Times from Calcutta reports that the government of Madras has telegraphed for extra famine officers immediately, because of the ravages of the locusts.

BROD, July 29.—The Austrian troops crossed the frontier into Bosnia this morning in perfect order, without encountering any difficulties. Archduke John Salvator, of Tuscany, at the head of a brigade, entered Derbend.

Few better replies are upon record than that of the young polemic, to whom a bishop once said: "If you will tell me where God is, I will give you an orange." "If you will tell me where he is not, I will give you two," was the child's answer.

The American branch of the Evangelical Alliance will send an address on Christian liberty in the Turkish Provinces to the Berlin Congress. A meeting of the executive committee was held in New York city June 10, to consider the matter.

We sleep, but the loom of life never stops; and the pattern which was weaving when the sun went down is weaving when it comes up to-morrow.

How to Treat Yellow Fever.

OFFICE BOARD OF HEALTH,
State House, State of Louisiana,
New Orleans, July 27, 1878.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

The Board of Health publish the following for the information of the public, in view of the presence of yellow fever in our midst:

MODE OF ATTACK.

The onset is more apt to be sudden and violent than that of the other fevers which prevail here, and apt to occur at night.

THE EARLY SYMPTOMS.

Frequently, but not invariably, a chill precedes the fever. There is violent pain in the forehead at the beginning, soon followed by severe pain in the lower part of the back. The eyes are red and glistening.

COURSE RECOMMENDED TO THOSE ATTACKED.

Any individual affected as above described should immediately go home, go to bed, and send for a physician without delay. Without waiting for his arrival a hot foot-bath should be taken, and perspiration encouraged by warm drinks and a moderate cover in bed. If there should be any delay in the arrival of the physician, a simple purgative should be taken; and if the attack comes on soon after eating, an emetic of ipecac or mustard would be advisable. Prompt treatment is of the utmost importance in this disease, and it should be understood that persons ought not to walk about after falling sick, nor get up at all after once going to bed, until the attack is over.

PRECAUTIONS.

Those who have not had the fever should avoid localities known to be infected, and should stay in their houses as much as possible during the night. Preventive medicines are useless, and free alcoholic potations are the worst preparation for encountering the fever. Regular habits, tranquillity of mind and moderation in all things should be observed. If any have determined to leave the city, they should do so before they have rendered themselves liable to contract the fever, for it would be much safer to go through it here at home than away among strangers.

DOMESTIC DISINFECTION.

It is recommended that all articles of clothing taken from a patient's person and bed be put in a five per cent. solution of Calvert's No. 5 carbolic acid. All discharges from a patient's body should also be treated with carbolic acid, together with any articles soiled by the same. As a further precaution, and to aid the Board of Health in their efforts for prevention, it is recommended to all householders, as far as they are able to do so at their own expense, whether there be cases of yellow fever on the premises or not, to disinfect frequently their privy vaults and drains, and also the street gutters. A suitable agent for this purpose, being both efficient and economical, is a solution of copperas and carbolic acid in water, in the proportion of three pounds of copperas and one-half pint of Calvert's No. 5 carbolic acid to a bucket of water. In case Calvert's No. 5 cannot be obtained, Page's crude acid may be used—one and a half pints in a bucket of water, and thoroughly stirred up. It is further recommended that the coffins of individuals who have died of yellow fever should be closed at the earliest possible moment, and in the room where death occurred. The public generally are earnestly dissuaded from attending the funerals of yellow fever patients, unless circumstances imperatively demand. These measures of domestic disinfection are considered of great importance, and the Board of Health urge their general observance upon the public.

SAM. CHOPPIN, M. D.,
President Board of Health.

COST OF THE PARIS EXPOSITION.—French journalists and others are still making their calculations about the cost of the Paris Exhibition and the probable deficiency at its close; for it is generally conceded that it will not nearly pay expenses. It is now estimated that the whole outlay will be 45,000,000 francs, or $9,000,000. The receipts from all sources it is calculated, will reach 31,500,000 francs, or $6,000,000. So that the deficit will amount to over two millions of dollars. The French people seem to be quite satisfied with this prospect, and there is no grumbling at the idea that the government will have to pay this sum of $2,000,000 from the treasury. It is rightly believed that the nation will derive benefits from the exhibition that are cheap at that price, or even at a much larger one. How different is this from the feeling that prevailed in this country in regard to the Centennial Exhibition. Here a single city and State had to furnish the funds for what was really a national festival, and the paltry sum that was, after much labor, obtained from Congress had to be returned to the treasury after the exhibition was over. In generosity to great national enterprises the French republic excels the American.

Over 10,000 persons, including Arabs, Turks, Chinese and Japanese, besides Europeans, received portions of Scripture on the opening day of the Paris Exposition from the kiosk of the Crystal Palace Bible stand. The pressure of the eager crowd for copies was so great that the windows of the kiosk had to be closed over a dozen times.

Letter from Baton Rouge.

MR. EDITOR: Of late I have been doing little else than attending the annual exercises of educational institutions in this city and vicinity. I desire to write somewhat about them.

The commencement exercises at Readville Seminary, Mrs. Mary W. Read, principal, took place on the night of June 26, 1878. A very large audience that had assembled were well entertained for some hours by the achievements of the young ladies in music, vocal and instrumental, and by the very creditable essays of the four graduates, Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, in a few felicitous remarks, conferring upon the four the degree of Mistress of English Literature. After an address of great feeling from Wilmot H. Goodale, Esq., and the benediction, all wended their way home, delighted beyond measure at the very pleasant evening they had spent at Mrs. Read's, and gladly proclaiming another eminent success for Readville Seminary. Sister Read's school has been in existence for many years, having been incorporated in 1859, and numbering among its alumni some of the most intelligent, accomplished, refined and elegant ladies of our Southern land.

The next night I was at the annual exhibition of that veteran and unsurpassed school for young men and boys, known as the Collegiate Institute, Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, principal. There, as on the night previous, was assembled a crowded house. The programme was well selected, the grave and humorous being mixed in proper proportion. As to the young gentlemen's execution of it, never have I anywhere witnessed anything that seemed nearer to perfection. Generally upon such occasions there is a hitch or a jar somewhere, but not the least thing happened there to mar the smooth, easy flowing of successful execution. I cannot forbear the mention, as being well conceived and faultlessly delivered, of the original addresses of Johnson Magruder on "The Influence of the Past," and of James E. Zuntz on "There is a God." It is fortunate for any young man to be a student at the feet of so thorough and experienced an educator as Prof. Magruder. It is impossible to calculate the vastness of the work that has been done by him in the years gone. I know, however, that throughout this State, and far beyond it too, in other States and sections of the land, his work may be seen in the scores of prominent citizens, whose education and character in the main are due to his conscientious instruction of head and heart. He has fitted many a boy for entrance into the highest colleges and universities, and I am glad that he is still engaged developing the young men of our State, and trust God may spare him many years for his blessed work.

There is another institution doing a good educational work in Baton Rouge. I refer to the Stannard Institute, Mrs. John H. Stannard, principal. During the morning of Friday, June 28, I went into her schoolroom, her annual examination being in progress. The young ladies and young gentlemen, by their readiness in the solving of their problems in arithmetic and algebra, their correct explanations and their answering of the most difficult questions in those studies, as also in chemistry, botany and other studies, showed that they had undergone thorough training, and had learned to study to good purpose. Mrs. Stannard has the reputation of being one of the most competent and painstaking teachers in our State, and she richly deserves the popularity and patronage bestowed upon her school. Having three such institutions here, I am convinced that not only the boys and girls of Baton Rouge, but all the youth who may come from elsewhere, can be thoroughly provided for in the way of a practical education.

Through the kindness of Bro. Magruder I found myself, at one o'clock on Monday, July 1, in Jackson, La., enjoying the hospitalities of Prof. Wiley. It was my first visit to the seat of our Centenary College, and I have no idea that I shall soon forget it. I enjoyed the commencement exercises from beginning to end, and would write thereabout somewhat in detail were I not aware that you, Mr. Editor, were on the ground, and that I expect to read your report of said exercises in my next ADVOCATE. However, I desire to call attention to the fact that, while much has been done toward repairing the superb buildings that make up what is known as Centenary College, yet a great deal of work to that end, and costing thousands of dollars, needs still to be done. By reference to the minutes of the last session of the Louisiana Conference I find reported a membership of over fifteen thousand. I suppose that the membership of our church within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference is more than that. If only the same as our own, then there are thirty thousand Methodists to care for Centenary College; and, in all good faith, these thirty thousand are bound to look after the best interests of that institution. It is theirs, and its success or failure must chiefly depend on them. At the last session of the Louisiana Conference (and I do not suppose that the Mississippi Conference can be a whit behind us in this matter of resolution-passing) the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

Resolved, That we regard Centenary College as peculiarly and sacredly our own institution, necessary to the interests of education, and deserving the confidence and support of the Conference and church.

Resolved, That we cordially commend the college to the confidence of the church and people, and earnestly solicit their patronage as necessary to the support and upbuilding of this important interest, and the promotion of sanctified learning among the youth of the church and country.

Resolutions are easily framed and passed. They often comprehend much by way of suggestion, and, if grandly worded, seem to be something in themselves. Alas! resolutions many a time, though having the true martial ring about them, have failed to end in a fight. So I have been often amazed to note how little has come of resolutions, apparently brimful of hard work. Bodies of men will, by resolution, lay out for themselves much work, and straightway forget to do that work; or, if they do make the attempt, take exceeding great care to touch it very, very lightly. It strikes me that the better plan would be to quit passing resolutions of confidence and sympathy, and urging to patronage and support, if we propose to do nothing toward carrying out the brave sentiments of the resolutions. If the thirty thousand Methodists, urged thereto by our resolutionizing preachers, would give one dollar each for that purpose, Centenary College might be thoroughly repaired, and something be left over for other needs.

—Bishop Keener estimated that for $30 to $50 each the rooms in the wings of the college can be put in perfect repair. Brethren of the Louisiana Conference, by each of us sending $1 to Bishop Keener, president of the board of trustees, we may have at least two rooms repaired, and to that extent back up our resolutions of confidence and support. With scarcely an exception, every one of our thirty thousand members could give one dollar to aid Centenary; and if they would go to God in prayer about it, and be willing to be just as liberal as God would make them, not a few of them, I am sure, might see their way to giving hundreds to this good cause.

May God make his people liberal toward Centenary College and the cause of Christian education.—S.

BATON ROUGE, La., July 10, 1878.

THE FRENCH METHODIST CONFERENCE.—The statistics show an increase in Sunday schools, teachers and scholars. Eight circuits have a diminution of 61 members. Five report an increase of 44; net decrease, 17. There have been 32 deaths and 14 removals.

All the preliminaries for the introduction of lay delegation was settled, and such delegates (one of the two delegates elected by each of the district meetings) will be laymen. The Conference owns actually 21 chapels, 10 ministers' houses, 7 school-rooms; and the premises of the young ladies' institution in Nimes. The report of the seminary showed it to be self-sustaining. The Evangeliste also pays its way, with a list of 1,400 subscribers. The Conference was favored with the presence of Rev. John Kilner, one of the secretaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society; of Rev. William Gibson, general superintendent of the new work to be soon inaugurated in France; and also of Rev. Arnold Sulzberger, Ph. D., professor of dogmatic theology in the Methodist Institution of Frankfort on Main (Germany), and delegate of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Germany and German Switzerland.

Norway has some curious exhibits at the Paris Exhibition. She has fish-skins tanned for gloves; eel-skins prepared for harness; shark-skins, 10 feet long and 2 feet wide, for various purposes; and whale-skins, 60 feet long, for driving-bands for machinery.

San Francisco.

Dr. Cuyler, writing in the New York Independent about the California metropolis, says:

Yesterday the election for delegates to the Constitutional Convention was held, and at this moment it seems evident that the "Kearneyites" have carried the city. On Saturday evening I had a fair opportunity of seeing these so-called "working-men" in a torchlight procession; and one look at its material was enough. Their leader, Dennis Kearney, rode as grand marshal in the procession. He is a shrewd, self-conceited and eloquent Irishman, who has risen from driving a dray to the dangerous business of driving the ignorant masses, and of attempting to drive the civil machinery of the city and the State. Of his followers the other night one-half seemed to be veritable laboring men; the other half were boys, "hoodlums," rather boisterous women, and such characters as haunt the doorways of a Bowery theater. A woman, who stood opposite me, swinging frantically an apology for a handkerchief, reminded me of one of the Robespierrean viragos in the French Revolution. One of the banners declared, flat, "We repudiate Communism!"—all which may be true; but on other banners were other inscriptions, savoring strongly of radical socialism and sheer irreligion. San Francisco has work ahead with these dangerous elements; plenty of work for God's stalwart army of teachers, preachers, conscientious voters and temperance reformers. There is a volcanic "Geyser" element here, into which every thrust lets out fiery steam, and the boiling fluids of animosity to everything sacred in civil and social life. I should not fancy a repetition of that procession in the streets of New York or Brooklyn.

The most popular motto borne in that motley crowd was: "The Chinese must go!" Hatred to the Mongolian was the war-cry which has decided the election in this city. Into the merits of the endlessly-discussed "Chinese question" I have no time nor space to enter to-day. One thing seems very clear to my mind, and that is, that, useful as John Chinaman has been in developing the industries of California, the continued flow of this mass of pagans into our country is not desirable. The growing antipathy of the lower orders to him effectually prevents his assimilation socially, and debars all efforts to secure to him common school instruction. It is not desirable to introduce into American society a large class of human beings who bring over with them very few wives and a vast number of prostitutes. There can be no Christian civilization without a home and a pure woman in it. John Chinaman has almost no such home in this city. Good Dr. Kerr and Dr. Loomis, and several faithful Sunday-school teachers, deserve great gratitude for their earnest efforts to Christianize a few Chinese; but the great mass are as paganish as ever. How can it be otherwise when the Chinese quarter in this city is both surrounded and interpenetrated by the vilest brothels and drinking-dens and lottery-holes in San Francisco? I firmly believe that God purposes to convert China to the gospel; but I am equally confident that it is not his purpose to do it by sending ship-loads of heathen over into such an atmosphere as John Chinaman now breathes up our yonder hillside among those Sabbath-breakers, harlots, and fiendish fellows of the baser sort. Very few will ever "carry the gospel back to China" from that quarter. I write these frank words after seeing some of the best of the Mongolians, and with the kindest sympathy for them all.

Every visitor to this coast in mid-summer must feel his feet and say with us about the extraordinary climate of San Francisco. My own chief impression is its tiresome monotony. Every morning the sun shines into my windows here at the Grand Hotel; every afternoon the savage sea-wind sweeps in from the Golden Gate, and I put on my overcoat and the ladies put on their sealskin sacques; every night I either shiver or turn to a soft-coal fire. If I go over to the superb Napa valley, or down to beautiful San Jose, I find the thermometer up among the nineties; for the people here go out of town in summer to get warm. The average temperature in this city, the year through, is just fifty-five. So monotonously regular is the sharp sea-wind from the west that out of one hundred and ninety consecutive days the wind was "due west" for one hundred and eighty-four! For only six days did it come from the "mother country" on the Atlantic side! Yet, in spite of its cutting airs, and its divers sins and sorrows, I am wonderfully impressed by this grand and growing capital of the Pacific; and if I could come back and live a second life on earth, it would be as a gospel-sower in the inviting soil of California.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 30, 1878.

The Interior says: "It is time to call attention to the gratifying fact that the taste for theological veal is not universal. The call of the Central church, Allegheny, and of the Central church, Cincinnati, for pastors rich in experience and learning, albeit ripe in years, is encouraging. The overture to the Assembly to appoint a committee to shoot every Presbyterian minister on his twelfth birthday, will not now be pressed to a vote, as was intended."

Seventh-Day Adventists.

MR. EDITOR: I have just read in the Nashville Advocate a communication from a brother in Texas in regard to the Seventh-Day Adventists. It seems that they are troubling his people. A few days since I received a letter from a very dear lady friend in one of the eastern counties in this State, in which she informed me that she had received through the mail several copies of the Signs of the Times, published at Oakland, Cal., also a number of tracts, with a request that she "pass them around." It seems that they are at work in various parts of the South circulating their literature and "lecturing" their doctrines. They have existed for some time in the Northern and Western States, and have made considerable progress in gaining members. They have missionaries in different lands, and publish papers and books in more than one language. They have two publishing houses in the United States—one at Battle Creek, Mich., and the other at Oakland, Cal. They are now endeavoring to make a conquest of the South. Will they do it? Some will say: "Pass them by unnoticed. They will amount to nothing." But I speak advisedly when I say that in the Seventh-Day Adventist Church the established churches have a formidable adversary. It is at least not out of place to warn our members against them.

The great secret of their success is their financial system, and unsurpassed zeal and energy. When a man is wholly converted to their doctrines his purse is converted too. Each member is expected to contribute to the support of the church a tithe of all that comes into his possession, and more if need be. Collections are made quarterly. All collections made for the support of the ministry go into a general fund. The churches have no particular pastors. The treasurer is posted as to the whereabouts of all their preachers, and remits to them weekly. The members all busy themselves in distributing tracts, selling books, getting subscribers for church papers, etc. They hold meetings every Saturday, even in the absence of ministers. Their ministers have a series of lectures, which they deliver wherever they go. When they are through they begin again at the first. I have seen their papers at intervals for three years. They write as they preach. They have all their arguments by heart. They are great sticklers for the letter of the law, especially the Sabbath law. The keeping Saturday as the Sabbath, say they, is God's mark. By this he knows his children. One hundred and forty and four thousand will be thus marked when our Savior makes his second appearance. The doctrine on the Sabbath is less objectionable than some others; for instance, that on soul sleeping. They are exclusive Immersionists, and consequently gain more proselytes from the Baptist than from other churches. They are great proselyters. They believe that they are commissioned from God to call upon his people to "come out from among them" that is, from among the churches.

Their leaders are Uriah Smith, J. N. Andrew, James White, and Mrs. E. G. White, who is their prophetess. They have no sympathy for the South, as can be found by reading "United States in Prophecy," by U. Smith, and other works.

I warn Methodists against them. Aid them in no manner, shape or form. Baptists may join them, but I do not see how Methodists can, even if they should agree with them on the Sabbath and second advent questions. If you read their books do not credit everything they say. They frequently misquote history. Persons who are not well versed in history are often led off by their misrepresentations. They are determined to conquer. Let Methodists determine to do the same. Let us learn a lesson from their zeal and energy. If our people would contribute as liberally to the support of the gospel, and were as zealous workers, Methodism would soon take the world for Christ.

I felt it my duty to say what I have said. May our people remember it when they come in contact with the disturbers of the peace.

W. P. ANDREWS.

SILVER CREEK, Mississippi.

Whitworth Commencement.

This very popular institution of southwest Mississippi for the education of females, situated in Brookhaven, on the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, one hundred and thirty miles above New Orleans, under the presidency of Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., had its thirteenth commencement June 25, and completed another year's work with that rare success of management, instruction and patronage that now annually distinguishes it among its many brilliant competitors.

An elaborate programme of exercises filled up the time for five days, affording opportunity for applying the criteria of personal taste and judgment to the scope of instruction pursued for adequate education, to the attainments of graduates and undergraduates, to the bearing and spirit of the young ladies, and the public sentiment of the school. The motto, "Do right," ornamenting an arch on the rostrum, the simplicity of dress, and evident discipline on the platform, and the unexampled decorum of the audience, give an intensely practical cast to the school. To those seeking the ripe fruits of education these results are satisfactory. To those seeking less substantial and more embellishing treatment no encouragement is offered. The overgrown popularity of the school has reached the ultimate of its present dormitory capacity, and creates the strain experienced in institutions of learning when, to meet public need, it must contrive or suffer. The present patronage, though so large, is also at the maximum expense to the management. Larger accommodations would invite increased patronage, and afford means and motives to enlarged facilities.

The Sabbath was hallowed by appropriate services, many members of the District Conference remaining over. Delightful singing by festive voices poured out natural gladness through strains of sacred music. Bishop H. N. McTyeire announced a captivating subject: "The Cult of the House of God;" his text, Psalms xxix, 2: "Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." An entertaining and edifying treatment left clear and strong in the memory, and deep in the soul's sentiment of admiration, the "beauty of holiness." The presiding elder conducted the evening devotions, presenting "the burden of the cross."—John xix, 17.

A feature of exciting interest on these annual occasions is the "debate." This time the question was: "Heroism—whether displayed in its highest degree by man or woman?" Cleverly and animatedly did the debate proceed, growing in assertiveness with each discussion, evidencing address and tact, even to the unexpected impromptu with which the excited debate was closed. Coolness is not a trait of woman. The cause she espouses engages her heart, and a woman's heart is never calculating nor cold, unless it is dead.

The essays of the graduating class were upon themes of personal selection, and in this instance of general public approbation. "The Boy" was a pronounced success. The greatest ingenuity is claimed for a general post office clerk who hits the explanation of many foreign-addressed letters to the United States, that baffles others; but the palm of ingenious discovery must be awarded to the young lady who so evidently identified the "fossil boy."

The morning chapel devotions, the religious and most tranquillizing for the day's exercises, are conducted by the president, who spends the early hour in song and supplication for quiet of spirit, and success of application to the day's tasks. If these rootlets of pious sentiments should meet no obstruction in finding the genial soil of the church, what a beautiful, harmonious and intensely interesting growth would follow; and how happily contiguous to their tendencies is the church, that ought to be enriched in church life by being there, and ought to enhance the religious prosperity of the school by its proximity. The suggestion comes of the near vicinity of church and chapel, of hymn and song, that in part differentiate the two; and how apt a pastoral system such as ours to assimilate this view. The next in turn for practical development is the utility of the church to the school.

One of the most perceptible excellencies of education is good reading. So uniform is that attainment appearing in the practice of the classes that, where the higher merits of dramatic or apt rendering may not always surprise attention, the ear is seldom offended by a false accent, or a lack of spirit and expression. The ladies educated in this institution form a perceptible and increasing percentage of our cultivated population in this vicinity, while many others of them grace like circles in other communities. Those of them we meet personally in the intercourse of life answer to this description, and justify all we have said of the solidity of their culture.

To the entire public, so largely interested intellectually, socially and pecuniarily in the success of an institution for female education of ample accommodations, adequate facilities, and the spur to sustained endeavor from honorable success and merited reputation, we refer to the promises of the president of Whitworth Female College.

W. E. M. LINFIELD,
For the Visiting Committee.

Commencement at Summerfield, Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: The Centenary commencement here was another great success for the institution. Rev. W. A. McCorry, D. D., preached an interesting, thoughtful and effective sermon, as he knows well how to do, and he was followed at night by the Rev. A. Hood with a good discourse. On Monday night the exercises of the Male Institute, under Prof. R. S. Holcombe, took place. Prof. Holcombe having been called away by the death of his mother before he could drill his boys, Prof. A. D. McVoy took his school in hand, in addition to his own labors, and the young gentlemen sustained themselves with great credit. Prof. Holcombe has had a good and successful school this year, which he well deserves.

Tuesday witnessed the junior exhibition of the girls, and it was as fine a one as we ever attended. The compositions were excellent, and most of them were read remarkably well, evincing the very best training.

At night the annual concert gave us a feast of song and instrumental music. The popular and amusing songs, "My Grandfather's Farm" and the "Spelling Song" were greatly relished and repeatedly called for. The concert was in admirable taste, and had not a single objectionable feature. The attendance was immense, and the people could not get into the building. It is said that more Selma people were in attendance than ever known before. The town was filled with vehicles of every description. Rev. T. F. Mangum performed a rare feat in lifting a handsome collection, in his own inimitable way, for the repairs on the buildings, in the midst of this elegant concert.

Commencement day came on Wednesday. The weather was everything one could wish. The decorations were very tasteful and beautiful. The music was charming and appropriate. Miss Samuel's commencement song will long linger in our ears and heart. Excellent compositions were read by Miss Minnie Hunt, of Clifton, Ala., who was awarded the salutatory for distinguished scholarship; Miss Mattie Culpepper, of Lower Peachtree, Ala.; Miss Julia Tate, of Summerfield, Ala.; Miss Leila Devan, of Clifton, Ala.; Miss Lizzie Jackson, and Miss Emma Reeves, of Dayton, Ala., to whom was awarded the valedictory address.

The work done in the Art Department was very creditable, showing great progress and admirable skill.

The literary address of the occasion was delivered by Prof. J. Lewis, of the Southern University, on "Home Life." It was strong, clear, well thought out, in chaste style and elegant diction, and delivered in his own happy manner, and fully appreciated by the audience. He inculcated many a useful and important lesson worthy of life-long remembrance.

After delivering the diplomas came the baccalaureate address by President McVoy. It was short, to the point, elegant, appropriate and effective.

At the close Rev. A. H. Mitchell, D. D., announced the unanimous re-election of Messrs. McVoy and Holcombe to their respective positions, and strongly commended them to the liberal patronage of the public. This announcement was greeted with long-continued applause, showing the appreciation of the audience of these gentlemen. We risk nothing in saying that no better men can be found anywhere—energetic, faithful, skillful, thorough Christian teachers. President McVoy excels in winning the love of his pupils, for such devotion on their part toward him we have seldom witnessed. A brighter prospect seems to dawn for these institutions. All needed repairs will be done on the buildings during vacation, and we solicit a liberal patronage for the first of October.

Let the boys and girls of Alabama and other States throng these halls, and they will be trained, taught and educated in the best schools of the church.

From the Work.

THE EUFAULA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Eufaula District Conference was held this year in Clayton, Ala. The opening sermon was preached on Wednesday night, the tenth instant, by Rev. J. Bancroft, and the business session organized at nine o'clock on Thursday morning, Rev. H. D. Moore, presiding elder of the district, in the chair.

We had a pleasant and, I trust, a profitable session. The different church interests were taken up severally, reported on and discussed; and while I do not care to enter into statistics and particulars, the outlook for the church on the district seems, on the whole, to be good. Religious services were regularly held in connection with the business session, with, I hope, good results. There was but little outburst of feeling during these services, but a deep and serious feeling was manifested by many in the congregation, and at the close of the services on Sunday eleven persons united with the church. I hope this is the dawning of a brighter day for the church in Clayton, and that God's grace and Spirit will be abundantly poured out on all its members, to the conversion of sinners and building up of the church.

Abbeville, Ala., was selected as the next place for the holding of the District Conference.

The following persons were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: S. H. Dent, B. F. Cassady, T. A. Craven and Rev. T. A. Johnson. Alternates—R. E. Wright, Rev. C. C. Lee, J. T. Floyd and W. H. Stuckey.

S. H. DENT, Secretary.

JULY 19, 1878.

KINGSTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: God has visited and abundantly watered the vine which he lately planted at Locust Grove, Adams county, Miss. On Saturday, June 29, the whole community met to have a two days' meeting. In spite of threatened rain, grassy crops, and other discouragements, the people came in such numbers that the little house could not contain them. Some young ladies walked over two miles through mud and heat. Best of all, a spirit of prayerful, quiet, earnestness pervaded the assembly. We began, continued and ended the meeting with prayer. Seventeen souls professed conversion, and twelve new members joined our church. Nearly every person residing in the community, down to children ten years old, has united with us in seeking salvation through the church. Our regular quarterly meeting came on the following Saturday and Sunday. Bro. Hunnicutt, our presiding elder, baptized and received into full membership the new applicants, among whom were seven young men, ranging from nineteen to thirty-five years. Most of these have felt the Spirit's power on their hearts, and the rest are seeking earnestly for the great change.

J. PERRY DRAKE.

THINGS HARD TO EXPLAIN.—You step into So and So's and ask how their souls are prospering, and begin to talk to them about Jesus. They don't like it, and would rather you talked of anybody but him. Next day they sit down at the communion table and sing: "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds in a believer's ear!" Can you explain that?

Then there's Mr. So and So, who is in the public house on the Saturday night before the communion, with his communion card in his pocket, and on Sabbath he sits down at the Lord's table, expecting to be taken knowledge of that he has been with Jesus. Can you explain that?

And there's Mr. So-and-So, the publican, who bundled you poor wretch into the gutter at eleven o'clock on Saturday night. There that very publican sits at the table of the Lord on Sabbath, praying that righteousness may run down our streets. Can you explain that?

And there's Mrs. So and So, who takes it highly amiss if you ask if she is saved through the blood of Christ. She, too, sits down at the communion and sings: "I'm not ashamed to own my Lord." Can you explain that?—English Paper.

HOW TO SPOIL EVERYTHING.—If you want to spoil all that God gives you, if you want to be miserable yourself, and a nuisance of misery to others, the way is easy enough. Only be selfish, and it is done at once. Think about yourself—what you want; what you like, what respect the people ought to pay you, what people think of you; and then to you nothing will be pure.—Charles Kingsley.

Tribulation may come as a thief into the church; we may be disappointed even in the brethren; but those who have the eye fixed on Christ "hold on their way." The word which they have heard and which they keep is a strong link binding them to him who is more than all else to them.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

W. T. HANCOCK, son of W. H. and Mary C. Hancock, was born in the State of Arkansas, September 29, 1855. When a little over ten years of age his mother died of measles (February 19, 1866,) leaving three children. The youngest child, an infant, died shortly after. The next fell his father carried the two remaining children to Virginia, to be reared by their aunts, Mrs. Towns and Mrs. Jackson. His father returned to Arkansas late in the fall to settle up his business and return to make his home in Virginia. Soon the children received the sad intelligence that their father had died of congestive chill. Hence these two children were left without father or mother. But God had provided two loving aunts for them, who supplied their wants, and with whom they both lived happily until August, 1872, when the subject of this notice came South to engage in telegraphing. On the fifteenth of last July he came to this place to take charge of the telegraph office. Though a young man of some excellent traits of character, yet he was wild and profane. I knew but little of him until last September, when he presented himself at the altar as a seeker of salvation. A few nights after this he was baptized and received into the Methodist Church, the church of his father and mother. He fell himself at once upon the altar, and was ready to do whatever was to be done. During the month of December he came to board with us. We soon learned to love him as a brother. During my absence from home he always held prayer in my family, and he was ready to do the best he could in the prayer meetings, in the Sunday-school, and indeed wherever duty called him.

Last fall a very sad affliction came upon him suddenly. His eyesight became greatly impaired. For awhile he could not see to read. This he bore with Christian fortitude, and said that if God thought best that he should be deprived of his sight it would be for his good. He visited Dr. Pope, an oculist of New Orleans, after which his eyes improved so that he could read pretty well. During his visit to the city his spiritual strength was greatly increased. The visit of the love-feasts and prayer-meetings and his soul was greatly blessed. Preacher Bro. Mathews will remember the young stranger at one of his love-feasts in January last, who arose and testified to the love of Jesus. This is he of whom I write.

He felt that he was called to the ministry, and was making preparation for this holy work.

The death of this noble young man came unexpectedly. I left home on Thursday morning, the thirteenth of June, for our District Conference. His health was as good as usual. That evening about dark he was taken violently ill, and suffered greatly with his head until Friday, at about twelve o'clock, when he became unconscious, save now and then bright moments. Just before his death he seemed to recognize a very warm friend who was in the room, and took him by the hand and drew him to him, but could not speak. That evening at six o'clock he fell asleep in Christ. Though he did nothing about dying, yet the consecrated life he was all the evidence we could ask.

D. P. BRADFORD, Pastor.

MARTIN GILMAN, M. D.

In accordance with a resolution of the board of stewards of Vicksburg station, Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, adopted April 28, 1878, the following narrative and resolutions were submitted to and adopted by the Quarterly Conference of said station, June 1, 1878:

Dr. Martin Gilman, late a member of the board of stewards of this station, was born July 21, 1821, near Lorraine, Jefferson county, N. Y. He moved to Port Gibson, Miss., in 1853. In 1854 he married Miss Mary F. Wherrett, in Richmond, Ky. Returning to Port Gibson, he and his now bereaved wife continued useful members of our church in that station until 1858, when they removed to Vicksburg, where they held their membership until his death.

Bro. Gilman efficiently served as steward of the church in Vicksburg from 1865-66-1870, under the pastorate of Rev. G. H. Clinton, and was again chosen to the same office in 1877, and in this relation continued until his death, March 27, 1878.

His parents were earnest Methodists, and trained their son, our deceased brother, in the doctrine and discipline of our church, to which he adhered all his life.

He was a man of more than ordinary intellectual vigor and culture. In his profession as a physician he commanded the respect of all, and the grateful remembrance of many for his Christian sympathy and kindness in seasons of distress.

During the fearful epidemic in Savannah in 1876, and counting his life dear unto him, he left the comforts and safety of home to minister to the sick and dying in that stricken city, cheering many a sad heart by his self-denying labors.

He suffered severely in his last illness, and exhibited the Christian endurance and fortitude which feared to add to the grief of his loved ones by even speaking of the pain he suffered, but rather endeavored to cheer and support them by his counsel and encouragement. He leaves a widow and daughter to mourn his loss. His end was peace. His record is on high.

On reception and consideration of the foregoing narrative it was

Resolved, That in the death of our late brother, Dr. M. Gilman, the church and this Quarterly Conference have sustained the loss of an esteemed and valued member, whose counsel, labor and example endear his memory, and inspire us to follow him as he followed Christ.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with our sisters, the widow and daughter of our deceased brother, in their sore bereavement, praying that he who is the refuge of his saints may be a father to the fatherless and husband to the widow, and finally bring them to rejoin him who has gone before, where there shall be no more death.

DIED, of consumption, June 12, 1878, in Prairieville, Ala., Mrs. SARAH FRANCES SIMPSON. She was the daughter of Dr. Matthew L. and Elizabeth Tilden, and granddaughter of Col. Samuel Henderson and Elizabeth Calloway. Miss Calloway was one of the young ladies captured by the Indians with Daniel Boone's daughter, and rescued by Col. Henderson and others.

Mrs. Simms joined the church in early life. In 1835 she moved, with her parents, from Tennessee—the place of her birth—to Talladega, Ala. Here she assisted Mr. Tilden as superintendent of the Sunday-school until her marriage with W. K. Simpson in 1841, after which she moved with her husband to Bradford, Ala. She engaged in Sunday-school work soon after she came to Prairieville, and ceased not to labor in this field until compelled to do so, last year, by bodily infirmity. She succeeded Mrs. [illegible] as the head of the sewing society, in which good results were accomplished. In the family and everywhere she combined with a remarkable way energy with kindness. The word kindness was so written upon her heart that she was never known to utter a harsh word. Some ten or perhaps a dozen children, relatives, in the order of Providence, were committed to her charge, and yet they considered themselves as tenderly guarded and provided for as her own. She was clear in her convictions and loyal to the doctrines and duty, while her heart was full of that "charity that" "suffereth long and is kind;" indeed she was foremost among those [illegible] actors from whose hearts and [illegible] gospel has eliminated all [illegible] herself and to prefer others [illegible] her no effort, so perfectly had she been molded by the Spirit of Christ. In every department of Christian enterprise her [illegible] was well and faithfully done. Such a life gives us better assurance of the power of the gospel, and is better comfort in [illegible] death, than could a thousand [illegible] testimonies (and yet this last was not denied). I visited her the evening before her death, but she was [illegible] to converse. Some time before this, however, she declared to me that "all was well," all was clear, that there was no trouble about the future."

W. A. MCCORRY.

MRS. CATHERINE S. A. MILLER died at Waterproof, Tensas parish, La., April 4, 1878, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. E. J. Drake, relict of Hon. H. W. Hunt, in her sixty-ninth year. The writer has been acquainted with her for more than forty years. She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church before our separation. With her husband, James Miller, she rode ten miles to class meeting. The [illegible] means of grace were scarce in her early days, preaching once in four or six weeks. Prayer and class meetings were observed. They were seasons of refreshing. Her religious history, if written, would be an interesting one. Her life in Christ Jesus was manifested through a [illegible] conversation, and a modest and retiring disposition. She was no stranger to the graces of our church in Tensas parish. Most of them were honored objects of her care, kindness and [illegible] hospitalities.

From the time she united with the church with the great object of her being to be a Christian in whom there is no guile. She lived not in vain. As a daughter she honored her parents [illegible] passed away. As a wife she was supremely [illegible] to [illegible]. As a mother she endeavored to bring up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and in [illegible] the strictest impartiality between them. As a mistress she was kind, exploit and decided. As a friend she was constant. As a member of the church she attended its ordinances, supported its institutions and [illegible] its disciplinary regulations. It has been said that our people die well. Her death was [illegible] well, feeling that the Christian's [illegible] Christ Jesus is sure to close in triumph. Hers was a peaceful, joyous and triumphant close, witnessed by Mr. Moore, her son-in-law, two daughters, grandchildren, [illegible] Tensas friends and servants. The chamber of death was the vestibule of heaven.

S. PERRANOSTE.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the Sunday school at Liberty:

Whereas, Our beloved brother and former superintendent, JOHN EVERETT, has been withdrawn from our midst to occupy his place in heaven; And whereas, His earnest devotion to the Sunday school cause and his intimate and tender relations with this school in particular, demand from us some expression of our sense of the deep loss we have sustained; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while our hearts are filled with sorrow over our great loss, we feel that he has only left us to receive the reward of the faithful.

Resolved, That in his pure and consistent life we recognize a worthy example for us all.

Resolved, That in his death the Sunday school, in common with the church and community, sustains a great loss.

Resolved, That to the bereaved we tender our heartfelt sympathies, and commend them to the mercy of our heavenly Father, who doeth all things well.

REV. A. LEGGETT, for Committee.

SISTER FRANCES RACHEL CHAMPENOIS, wife of John F. Champenois, of Shubuta, Miss., died June 8, 1878. She was born at Spring Hill, near Mobile, Ala., November 11, 1811, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1872. She was a faithful and most consistent member, exercising a fine influence over her family and in the community. She had a large family, many small children, and yet she was a power in the Sunday-school. She overcame difficulties to attend that many would have thought a fine excuse to stay away. I do not know that I ever stood by the death-bed of a lady whom the family and the community could so ill spare. But the Father wanted her for a place nearer his throne, and in grief we submit.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1878.

THE FATHER'S HOME.

The spring has less of brightness
Every year,
And the snow a ghastlier whiteness
Every year;
Nor do summer flowers quicken,
Nor autumn fruit take thicken,
As they once did, for we sicken
Every year.

Of joys and sorrows blended
Every year;
Of the ties of friendship ended
Every year;
Of the health that still might bind me,
Of the sickness that resigned me,
Sights and sounds remind me
Every year.

Dear ones sad to look before me
Every year,
While the locks grow darker o'er me
Every year;
Where we see the blossoms faded,
That in youth we mistook for shaded
And immortal garlands braided
Years ago.

Of the unprotected faces
Every year
Now come in their places
Every year;
Every sun that sets in sorrow,
Every morning's dusk they greet us,
And each day to them entreats us
Every year.

Lo, the gray clouds are shifting
Every year,
Hasting on which we're drifting
Every year.
Soon the ice will relevens,
Soon the fair haven receives us,
Death or heaven bereaves us
Every year.

The Christian Minister in His Sick-Chamber.

Angels are never poorly. As heralds of the throne they are exempt from all the ills to which flesh is heir. Christian ministers, heralds of the throne and the cross, are not thus privileged. The gradual of their message does not secure, unless guarantee, on their behalf a physical energy that shall never know sickness, "marking them for its own." On the contrary, precious though the treasure is with which they are entrusted, they are ever and anon reminded that these treasures are "earthen vessels." This allusion," says Hugh Stowell, "is possibly to the practice of Persian kings placing gold and silver in earthen jars, before the rabbinical story given by Wesseling of the reply of Rabbi Joshua to a daughter of the Emperor Hadrian, who, in burlesquing him with his plain appearance, was referred by him to the earthen vessels in which he often kept his wines, and, when after request the wines had been tried to silver vessels and there proved sour, was taunted by the rabbi with the observation that the humblest vessels best contained the highest wisdom."

Be this as it may, the fact of "this treasure"—"the unsearchable riches of Christ"—being deposited in vessels so brittle and frail, answers a double end. The bearers of the "treasure," while fully alive at once to the honor conferred upon them and to their native helplessness in sustaining it, become media through which the divine glory shines. Neither physical power nor mental vigor, neither varied learning, growing zeal, nor burning eloquence, can ever originate the wonderful change which is wrought in a man when he is "born again." Hence the inspired caution: "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us."

The first preachers of the gospel never forgot their own feebleness when the inhabitants of Lystra, beholding a cripple whom Paul had miraculously cured, proceeded to sacrifice to him and his brother Barnabas, as "gods come down to them in the likeness of men." Both these servants rent their clothes and ran in among the people, crying: "Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you," or, as the Vulgate renders it: "We are mortals like yourselves." Of such personal mortality, the preacher of even undying truth is frequently conscious. Ailments, in themselves trivial and temporary, are his reminders. We doubt not that Paul's "thorn in the flesh," though permitted him wondrous activity in his Master, was to himself every day vocal with the entreaty, "Remember thou must die," and his declaration, "I die daily," intensely—is felt by the Christian minister, when physical indisposition takes him captive and immures him in a sick chamber. That chamber, at least for a time, is transmuted into his study. The very walls become strangely eloquent.

The season is one of more than usual pensiveness. The illness of a Christian minister, we all know, may be variously induced. Disaster may overtake him while traveling; or, with appalling suddenness, in the precincts of his own dwelling some sinful, suffering results from simple want of care in nursing the body for Christ; at other times it is more directly the logical sequence of refusing obedience to physical laws. Occasionally it springs from exposure to atmospheric influences, which though weathered by some robust frames, proves dangerous to the sufferer, in whose case escape is almost impossible. It is not unfrequently the noble lax which a self-denying pastor has to pay for visiting a member of his flock laboring under infectious disease. Often its foundation is laid in the exuberance of anxiety—amounting sometimes to feverish worry—under numerous and nameless difficulties, as well as prostrating discouragements, in the prosecution of the most glorious employ in which man can engage. Alas! too often is it, in these days of multifarious and incessant demands on a minister's time and strength, the inevitable fruit of over-work. Now and then sickness is, as with other men, the minister's lot, when both himself and his medical attendant are puzzled to divine the cause.

But, discovered or undiscovered, be the secondary cause what it may, the sufferer's gratitude may well be great. He has reason to be thankful that, when indisposition seized him, it found him not—where once he was—in the service of satan but in that of the best of Masters. Let him be thankful, too, for the assurance which the whole tenor of revelation supplies; that the sickness has been either permitted or appointed by him whose wisdom never errs and whose love never changes.

That love and that wisdom have conducted him into his present seclusion. Solitude it is not. The Master is with him; he knows, he feels he is. The suspension of his ordinary course of systematic reading, the pause in his usual routine of pulpit study; his voice reduced in tone and volume; his retirement from the activities of the pastorate; his inability to share as heretofore, in the work of philanthropic association, and many other minutiæ of plaintive experience, all generate a silence and a hush which realize to him the fact, more impressive now than ever, that he is "face to face" with him "whom his soul loveth." In a sense he sees the invisible, and hears the voice which says: "I have brought thee into the wilderness, as I did Israel, that I may speak comfortably to thee"—literally, "to thy heart."

For the amount of health he has enjoyed in days that are gone he is grateful to him "whose he is and whom he serves." Its suspension now thrills his soul with the truth: "Our blessings brighten as they take their flight." He cannot help reviewing the past. It lays him low. Poor have been the services, he feels, that he has rendered to him who "counted him faithful, putting him into the ministry." How little he has done, and, of that little, how much the result of habit, how perfunctorily performed, how stained with mingled motive, how marred by questionable temper, how imperfect, how full of shortcoming! "His soul is humble within him." "He waters his couch with tears."

Afresh he feels the preciousness of the truths he has been privileged to make known to others. The Deity of Jesus, his mysterious incarnation, his all-atoning sacrifice, his attesting resurrection, his exquisite sympathy, his prevailing intercession, and the "exceeding great and precious promises" sealed on the cross, and radiant with the glory of the throne, are themes that seem now richer than ever. He was partially alive to their grandeur when permitted to proclaim them; but now in the shaded chamber they permeate his soul with redoubled blessing, while simple believer he gratefully reposes on their eternal verity. "I had perished in mine affliction unless thy law had been my delight."

Where'er on Thee my thoughts are cast,
As I have rested in the past,
As I have found in Thee.

He enters on a momentous inquiry—one calling for rigid scrutiny and immortal, solemn dwelling: "This ill-odored ointment—is it punitive or preventive?" Touching the former, memory and conscience go jointly to work. Confronted by these, he acknowledges there is a "need-be" for the "chastening." Deny it he cannot. Passage after passage in his spiritual history recurs to his mind, solving the present use of the divine rod: "If we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." But rich is the comfort which the next verse supplies: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Albeit, the affliction may have come as a preventive. Are we more humble than the man who acknowledges himself "less than the least of all saints?" Yet the Master saw even in him a germ which, if not crushed, would develop itself in sad if not fatal results: "Lest I should be exalted above measure there was given to me a thorn in the flesh." The present sorrow, for aught the invalid knows, may be commissioned to prove to him how easily, notwithstanding his labors, the Master can carry on his glorious cause independently of him altogether; or it may become a guardian angel, to "keep him" from yielding to temptation, that would cover him with shame, and elicit the cry from the Savior's lips: "These are the wounds where with I was wounded in the house of my friend."

Very solicitous is the ministerial invalid to act as did Jonathan Edwards when he wrote: "Resolved to improve all afflictions to the utmost." Hence his fervent desire that, however "grievous" and discouraging "for the present" it may continue to be through that mental and spiritual "exercise" which shall "afterward" enrich him with "the peaceable fruits of righteousness." While the chastening "of the Lord is not despised"—this being presumption—and when there is no "fainting under" the divine "rebuke"—this being despondency—these "precious fruits" are assuredly reaped. Who does not envy Robert Hall as he writes to a friend: "I presume the Lord sees that I require more hammering and hewing than almost any other stone that was ever selected for his spiritual building. Let me be broken into a thousand pieces, if I may be but made up again, and formed by his hand for purposes of his mercy!" Does not this remind us of Paul "most gladly glorying in his infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon him?" and does not the sufferer become more impressively than ever "a vessel meet for the Master's use?" Such increased "meetness" evinces itself, among other ways, in a fuller, deeper, tenderer sympathy with all in the school of suffering, as well as in a richer and more grateful appreciation of that healing balm when poured upon himself, eliciting his devout acknowledgment: "Sympathy is sweet—passing sweet is sympathy."

Musing on the experience of other ministerial invalids interests the sufferer not a little. He thinks of Traptus, "left at Miletum sick" by Paul, who would readily, if permitted, have imparted to him a "healing apron;" of Timothy with his "often infirmities;" of Epaphroditus, once "sick nigh unto death;" of the great apostle, with his "thorn" festering into "weakness;" and of some in more modern times—specially of Richard Baxter, who for the last thirty years of his life did not know what it was to spend a single day without pain. Such was the man who, during an illness, wrote the "Saints' Everlasting Rest"—"a book," says Dr Bates, "for which multitudes will have to bless God forever." Pernal, in the sick-chamber, of well-written biography is eminently profitable. So, too, is musing on the memories of ministerial brethren, of his own and other denominations, known and loved by the invalid, but who—many of them younger than himself—have exchanged labor for rest, and pulpits for thrones—suggesting the thought of the ecstatic moment when the Master shall say to him: "Come up hither."

Solemn and tranquillizing in his spirit though such meditations be, ever and anon they are mingled with solicitude—solicitude respecting the flock he is now unable to tend. He feels that his very indisposition renders his people increasingly dear to him, and in intervals of relief from suffering he sends them heart-epistles. These are succeeded by fervent prayer that, in the absence of the servant, the presence of the Master may be doubly realized in their midst. Anxiously he thinks of the supply of his pulpit; of the fidelity and affection of the officers of the church, the discharge of their several duties in their respective spheres; the budding and blossoming of the Sabbath school, that nursery of the church; the visitation of the sick, with whom he can have intercourse now only by letter; the Bible classes he has loved to conduct; the punctual oiling of the wheels of the different organizations so auxiliary to general prosperity; the impatient desire of some that he should resume his active labors without delay, contrasted with the affectionate solicitude felt by others lest a relapse should follow a premature return to work. Amid these and kindred sources of anxiety, what can he do but seek to realize the rich consolation of John Foster's remark? "I can pray, and that is a glorious thing."

Some ministerial brethren, compared with others, are signally blessed with wonderful immunity from physical suffering. A church whose pastor was not among the favorite ones felt they were by no means without compensation. At a ministerial and diaconal meeting the absence of this pastor was noted. One of his deacons said he was not well, but had preached with remarkable impressiveness on the preceding Sabbath. "I have noticed," he continued, "that ministers often preach best when they are poorly; have any of you ever observed this?" "Yes," replied another deacon, "I have frequently made the same remark." "What is that?" asked a stalwart ministerial brother, and an excellent preacher, but whose pulpit was seldom vacated because of illness; "what is that you are saying?" "Oh," responded a deacon, "we are just saying that ministers often preach best when they are poorly." "Oh," he rejoined, "Hah! that's it, all my best sermons are yet to come."

A question which a minister, during a protracted illness, is often constrained to put to himself is the following: "Am I ever to preach again?" While thus soliloquizing a passage of the holy writ seasonably occurs to him: "Be careful for nothing, but in everything, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God." He seeks to obey; he leaves himself, both as to his present and his future, in his hands who is "Light" and "Love," desirous, should he be spared, that the spiritual atmosphere he has breathed, and the solemn thoughts he has cherished in sickness, may be preserved in their purity and power, that he may always—even in the full bound of returned health and activity—have reason gratefully to repeat: "It was good for me that I was afflicted." Should he, on the other hand, have reason, from physical premonitions and medical testimony, to believe that "the sickness is unto death"—that the day is not far off when he shall "give an account of his stewardship," and enter the temple and the services of the skies—"long as he is in this tabernacle," it is his daily and devout solicitude that he may be ready to go out at an hour's notice.—Tropkimus, in London Baptist Magazine.

It is hard for the devil to counterfeit humility. People seem to think salvation is by doubts, instead of faith. If I had to keep myself satan would get my soul before dinner. There would be squirming in many fashionable churches if men were to interrupt the services with the Pentecostal cry, and yet the object of the churches is to win souls. No man who laid up treasure in heaven has ever been disappointed. From the cradle to the grave is the shortest part of life. There will be many crownless Christians in heaven. A man will does one thing is a terrible man. Paul's life has done more to upset infidelity than all the books that were ever written. Christ could have millions of followers if they didn't have to give up anything. Be sorry for your sins just long enough to give them up. If you want to find out about yourself study your children. The door of salvation hangs on the one hinge of the human will.—Moody.

HEART-BEATS OF A LIFETIME.—According to a French medical journal, Dr Guyot, after consulting the best authorities on the subject, and making the necessary calculations, has determined that the number of pulsations during the different ages of life are as follows: During the first year, 63 millions (in round numbers); during the first two years, 150 millions; during the first eight years, 435 millions; during the first twelve years, 614 millions; during the first fourteen years, 698 millions; during the first thirty six years (giving the figures in full,) 1 229 004 000; during a life of fifty years, 1,928,160,000; during a life of sixty years 2,208,800,000; and during a life of eighty years, 3,007,040,000.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Wesleyan Missionary Committee received and disbursed about $300,000, during the year ending May 1.

—The number of theological candidates for the Evangelical Church of Prussia has fallen off steadily for the past five years.

—A hundred Chinese have professed to believe in Christ as their Savior as the result of a recent revival at Peking, China.

—The number of native pastors connected with the Church Missionary Society is now about 180, having more than doubled during the last ten years.

—Seventy years ago there was but one Lutheran church in France, and that was in Paris. There are now 40 churches in that country, with 19 ministers.

—Several letters to the Missionary Herald from Eastern Turkey give startling details of the hopeless poverty which is settling down on the people, cursed with Turkish misrule. The debt, which since the Crimean war has steadily increased until it amounts to nearly $1,000,000,000, requires $75,000,000 annually for interest. Every possible device is used to increase the taxes, while the country yearly grows poorer. A low tariff has crushed out the little home industries, and foreign capitalists, afraid of the corruption of Turkish courts, will make no investments in manufactories or in mines. Mr. Parmlee gives several samples of what the people call good circumstances, in order that his readers may realize the utter poverty of the greater part of the population. A Protestant, regarded by his neighbors as being quite well off, after paying the government tithes, providing for the interest on his debts, and reserving food for his family, sold $25 worth of flour—the entire amount of his income for the year. Of this sum the government took in different forms of money-taxes $12, farm expenses required $3 more, leaving $8 with which to clothe a family of nine persons and meet all incidental expenses. Another man had sold $12 for the year, every penny of which had gone for taxes and the shoeing of oxen. And yet he would not be regarded by his neighbors as being poor. The primitive spinning machines are so slow and laborious that a mother with the utmost labor cannot clothe her children decently. Some of these go naked; others wear what a traveler called "rags worn out." The mortality among them is fearful; the deaths being one out of three. An appeal is made to American friends to furnish the mission with some simple machinery for carding, spinning and weaving. The missionaries desire in this way to furnish young men with their daily bread while studying for the ministry, and to relieve, to some degree at least, the nakedness of the people. "You might almost as appropriately speak of a poor-house supporting a school and church," says one of the missionaries, "as to develop self-support in the churches of these absolutely beggared people."—Independent.

—We spoke last week of the work of that tireless and fearless missionary, the Rev. G. L. MacKay, in Formosa. The March number of the Presbyterian Record, of Canada, has two letters from him, written in November (the second on November 28,) and neither mentions that his life was threatened. Both, however, are full of evidence of his ceaseless toil in his efforts to evangelize the island. In the first letter he writes an account of a week's work. On Monday he set out from An-po, with nine of his students, before dawn, wearing grass sandals. They traveled until dark, stopping at three places along the way to sing, preach and distribute medicines. At one station fifty teeth were extracted. On Tuesday morning the party left Ling-lek, and arrived in Tak Cham. Here Mr. MacKay had an attack of fever, and was not able to go out in the streets to preach; but he proceeded on his journey the next day, passing through "terrific sand-blasts, resembling great storms in America in winter." At Au-lang on Thursday he preached to a large and friendly crowd. Here his life was threatened four years ago. On Friday he ascended "lofty mountains" waded "rushing streams," preached and sung in numerous villages, and "halted within savage territory, near the spot where four Chinese were killed by the savages the day before." He lay down to rest that night after having walked forty miles under a burning sun. Saturday was spent at Sin-kang, in the examination of inquirers; and on Sunday fifteen converts were baptized, all of whom had been worshipers four years. In the second letter he says: "Last Sabbath I spent in our chapel at Pat-li-hun and had our usual services. As I intended to visit this place (Ang-mug-kang,) I arose very early in the morning, and started with several helpers and students. Proceeding in the dark along the sea-shore, we felt many times, when scrambling through weeds, tall, rough grass, and over sharp, pointed rocks. The sea roared furiously, lashed the rugged coast, and nearly carried us away. The rains descending, driven by the howling winds, beat against us and impeded our progress." Toiling along in this way, they had accomplished fifteen miles by sunrise. After breakfast they turned inland and traveled all day, stopping for the night's rest at dark. The next day six villages were visited. Thus does Mr. MacKay spend his time and strength. He is working in a very promising field, and we hope the Canada Presbyterians will speedily send out help to him. A letter from Mr. MacKay has just come to hand, showing that the report of his death, which the Associated Press gave, is happily untrue. He was assailed and the mission-house was burned; but he escaped with his life, and is doing as vigorous work as ever.—Independent.

LULLABY.

By, Baby, by, is over,
Bees are drowsing in the clover,
By, Baby, by,
Now the sun to bed is shilling,
All the pretty flowers are lilting,
By, Baby, by.

By, Baby, birds are peeping,
One by one the stars are peeping
By, Baby, by,
In the far off sky they twinkle,
While the cows come, tinkle tinkle
By, Baby, by.

By, Baby, mother holds thee,
Loving, tender care enfolds thee
By, Baby, by,
Angels in thy dreams caress thee,
Through the darkness guard and bless thee

Sammie's Question.

"Mother, are you sick?" asked little Sammie one beautiful Sabbath morning. "No," said his devoted mother. "Often have you asked me that question," said his mother, "and I must tell my darling boy why I am so sad. You were too young to remember what occurred three years ago. That beautiful cottage you pass every day on your way to school—that 'sweet home' surrounded by evergreen trees—that home was once our home. But what an exchange! That beautiful cottage for this log hut; that gushing spring for this rain-water; those beautiful flowers for this weedy yard; my once happy smiles for my face of sadness! Our home was your father's home. You were to him a treasure. But there was an enemy in the world, and your father did not know it. He went too often to town. He drank with his friends; he played cards for drinks. In a few years the saloon-keeper (the enemy of mankind) and his wife moved into our home. Your father had drank us out of home. They are still living there. They never speak to your father. Your father is ruining, and I will finish the story some other time, my boy."

Sammie's other came in, and his mother told her husband she would like him to get her a calico dress for the quarterly meeting occasion. His father's reply was that he had no money and no credit. His mother told him she had a cow for him to mortgage and get her some few articles of clothing. His father consented to mortgage the cow, and went to town next morning and purchased the dress. But he could not leave town until he had his drink. He must have it; so, late in the evening, he goes into the saloon (satan's throne) and asks to get a drink on credit. He is refused. He tells the saloon-keeper that he has a calico dress he will give him for some liquor. He gets the poison, the saloon-keeper gets the dress, and Sammie's father goes home drunk, with no dress for his mother, and the cow mortgaged. When Sammie's mother finished her first story she told him what went with the calico dress. Sammie looked up into his dear mother's eyes and said: "When I get big as father I do not intend to drink, for it makes you, mother, look sick. I do not want you to look sick." "God help you to keep your vow, my boy," and, thus saying, she kissed him, and left one more tear of hope on her darling's cheek.

You are blessed, dear children, if your fathers don't drink. You are under a curse if they do. IOTA.

About Bees.

Here is something which the Professor once wrote for another class. Would you like to see it? Next week the Professor will write about some wild-bee hunters of whom he read the other day.

"Perhaps you don't like bees. That's because you are afraid of them, and probably have been stung. But you must remember that, after all, the stinging was your own fault, for no doubt you troubled the bees in some way, and their sting is the only thing they have with which to protect their precious store of honey and wax. This sting is so small you couldn't see it even with a magnifying-glass that made the point of a needle appear to be a quarter of an inch broad!—and yet how that sting can hurt!

"Every swarm of bees contained in these little bee houses, that many of you who live in the country have been so often, is composed of three different kinds—the queen, the workers and the drones. The queen is not the only female in the swarm, but she is the only perfect female. All the worker bees are females, but not perfect ones, and the drones, who never do any work at all, are the males.

"How busy the workers are! They gather all the honey and beeglue, feed the young and keep the hives clean, and after the close of the honey season they kill off all the drones!

"With the exception of the queen, all the bees in a hive die in about nine months, so every winter finds new bees in the swarm. The queen lays from 1,000 to 2,000 eggs a day, and a hive sometimes contains 20,000 bees!

"There is a very funny thing about these eggs, and that is that, while all of them are alike when they are laid, the workers feed the maggots with different kinds of food, to make the different kinds of bee—the drones, workers and queens. The queens deposit eggs first for the workers, and then for the drones and queens. The queen has a sting which she never uses except in fighting with other queen bees. After the bees have been hard at work all day they go to bed by clinging to each other by the feet, thus making long chains hanging from the roof of the hive. One bee clings close to the ceiling, and the rest cling with its fore-feet to the hind feet of the one above, and so on until the ends are fastened together. We shouldn't think that the top bee who has to hold all the strain would call it much of a rest.

"The bees, beside knowing a great many other things, know enough to go into the house when it rains. If a cloud comes up in the west they fly away home as fast as their wings will carry them.

"Let us see how the workers make the bee-bread with which the young bees are fed. The worker starts out on her travels, and comes to a big flower and lies into it. When she comes out she is covered from head to tail with pollen, which sticks to her legs and the hairs over her body. She takes her first pair of legs and dusts the pollen off them, passes this dust to the middle pair, and from them to her hind legs. With the last pair of legs she works the pollen into small bits of balls. This she does before going home, and sometimes she gets so heavily laden that when she reaches the hive she has to call other bees to help her unload into the pollen-cells. Then the bee works over the pellets until they become a soft paste, and then it is in a condition to give to the little bees or larvæ. When the larva gets so big with eating as to fill its cell the workers don't feed it any more, but cover the mouth of the cell with wax. Then the larva, who is a prisoner, begins to cover the inside of its cell with silk, which it spins just as the silk-worm does.

"Then wonderful changes take place in the chrysalis, and by and by out comes the perfect bee.

"Let us see how they build their cells. Thomas says:

"They generally begin at the top or roof of their chamber and build downward, at first working irregularly, and, as it were, pasting over the surface, and building horizontal cells of a more perfect form. These at length become so numerous that they extend downward in the form of a vertical wall, other combs in a collection of several inches in one mass of cells are formed in succession, until the whole mass assumes the form of a series of perpendicular plates of partition. Each plate consists of a double set of cells, the bottoms of which are applied to each other, and form the partitions between each set. The cells are not always of the same size, but a sufficient number of a given depth are reserved for receiving eggs, and which are necessarily adapted to the size of the future maggot; the smaller or shallower cells are those in which the honey is stored.

"The breathings and store cells are placed horizontally, but the mouth of the cell is sometimes a little raised, the better to retain the honey. The interspace between the vertical combs is generally about half an inch; these streets, as they may be termed, in this city of industry, being just wide enough to allow two bees busied upon the opposite cells to pass without incommoding each other. In addition to these interspaces, the combs are perforated in various places, so as to allow a passage for the bees from one street to another, thus saving them much time."

"Don't you call that wonderful?"—Standard.

The Power of Gentleness.

It is related that a belated stranger staid all night at a farmer's house. He noticed that a slender little girl, by her gentle ways, had a great influence in the house. She seemed to be a bringer of peace and good will to the rougher ones of the household.

She had power over animals also, as the following shows: The farmer was going to town next morning, and agreed to take the stranger with him. The family came out to see them start. The farmer gathered up the reins, and, with a jerk, said: "Dick, go 'long!" But Dick didn't "go 'long." The whip cracked about the pony's ear, and he shouted: "Dick, you rascal, get up!" It availed not. Then came down the whip with a heavy hand; but the stubborn beast only shook his head silently. A stout lad came out and seized the bridle, and pulled, and yanked, and kicked the rebellious pony, but not a step would he move. At this crisis a sweet voice said: "Willie, don't do so." The voice was quickly recognized. And now that magic hand was laid on the neck of the seemingly incorrigible animal, and a simple low word was spoken. Instantly the right muscles relaxed, and the air of stubbornness vanished. "Poor Dick," said the sweet voice, and she stroked and patted softly his neck with the child-like hand; "now go along, you naughty fellow!" in a half-chiding, but in a tender voice, as she drew lightly on the bridle. The pony turned and rubbed his head against her arm for a moment, and started off on a cheerful trot, and there was no further trouble that day.

The stranger remarked to the farmer: "What a wonderful power that hand possesses!" The reply was: "Oh, she's good." Everybody and everything loves her."—Sunday School Advocate.

Mr. Albert S. Gatschet says that probably all the Kalapuya tribes of the Willamette valley are accustomed to invoke the celestial powers by working themselves violently into a state of utter exhaustion. They roam about all night without eating, put themselves into profuse perspiration by throwing up with their hands mounds of earth from three to seven feet long, and from 12 to 18 inches high, and scale high mountains to see the sun rise. Whenever the sun is above the horizon they thus appeal to it: "Oh, I am poor. Make me rich. Make a thief of me." Sometimes the exertions of the performers are kept up for five days in succession, and the incoming appears to be practiced also during the day.

Religion of the Tongue.

Much space in the inspired word is devoted to this subject. Isaiah, under the vision of the divine glory, confesses himself to be a man of unclean lips, and the people were also a people of unclean lips. David discloses the fact that he had fortified himself by special resolution and watchfulness: "I said, I will take heed to my ways that I sin not with my tongue; I will keep my mouth with a bridle while the wicked is before me." The admonition is in both Testaments: "Keep thy tongue from evil and thy lips from speaking guile." Christ solemnly warns against idle words. The character comes out in the words: "For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." James makes the control of the tongue the test of the genuineness of religion. A man may seem to be religious, but if "he bridleth not his tongue" he deceives himself, and his religion is vain. This is a strong and comprehensive declaration: "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." Nothing but the grace of God, and this in its maturest experience, can overcome the lawlessness of the lips. "But the tongue can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison."

The reasoning is clear and convincing: "Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh." "So can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh." Filthy communications cannot come from a clean heart. If the lips be polluted by sensual talk, the soul must be stained also by corrupt thoughts. The man who deals in dirty anecdotes, and in narratives larded with indelicacy, is not fit to expound the gospel of holiness, or to call sinners to repentance. The tongue that is given to tattle and uncharitable gossip is scarcely fit to utter the praises of a holy God. The lips that break out in anger and impatience cannot well be employed in sincere and acceptable prayer. Where patience has had her perfect work, so that the man is perfect and entire, wanting nothing, where perfect love that casteth out fear reigns in the heart, and wherever the perfect man is, there will be a bridled tongue. There will be no slander, no bitter and censorious words, no petulant expressions, no explosions of hatred, no uttered suspicions, no attempt to defame. The tongue will be kept from evil, and the lips from speaking guile.

The words are the outward signs of the inward state, and the most delicate and accurate of any. The deepest feelings and thoughts may find no expression in actions, while they may be most perfectly exhibited in word. As the vane tells to a hair's breadth the direction of the wind, and as the thermometer tells to the fraction of a degree the temperature, so accurately and truly does the tongue indicate the character and the work of grace in the heart. The tongue is in closer connection with the elements within than any other member, and is moved by the most subtle and secret influences which affect the heart. No barometer indicates the atmospheric pressure with greater nicety than does the tongue inform us of the mood of the spirit and the changes it is undergoing. There are times when no delicate instrument is needed to tell us of the atmospheric currents, and there are states of character in which the real condition is manifest to the most careless observer. A wicked life is apparent. But where men are honest in business, and free from the taint of licentiousness, and where there is the general seeming of sanctity, the tongue is the next thing to looking into the heart itself. If the tongue be not bridled, there is self-deception and an empty profession. The perfect man is he who offends not in word. He controls his appetites, he is honest, he is liberal, consecrated, zealous, benevolent, and, withal, he has a converted tongue. We never know people fully, until we know how they talk, and we judge of the Christian's profession by this infallible sign. It is not the only sign, but without this others may be misleading and insufficient.

That such prominence should be given in Scripture to the religion of the tongue is in itself suggestive. There is danger of being betrayed into sin of the lips. It is with too many the easily-besetting sin—that into which they may most easily be led, and that which requires most watchfulness and prayer to overcome. Like covetousness, it is a sin of which people are with difficulty convinced. There are many ways of extenuating idle words; sharp invective, unfavorable opinions and censure, so that an unbridled tongue is not seldom associated with the consciousness of exceptional inward purity. Sharp and wounding tongues are strangely at variance with the love that thinketh no evil; but these thistle-seeds are sometimes sown by the hands that of all others, should minister only peace. Then there is a closeness and intimacy in the Christian society that makes it peculiarly vulnerable to the abuse of the tongue. "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!" Churches are set by the ears, and bitter envying and strife grow out of unadvised words. Nothing more fearfully affects the communion of saints, and in no other way is the Spirit more deeply grieved. Every society has its range of gossip, of personal talk, and the church is often afflicted with an evil that should be confined to the world. There are individuals whom the other members come to regard with a sort of terror because of their tongues. The pastor must be on his guard against this poison of asps that is under the tongues of some of his flock, and their fellow-members shrink from contact with them lest there should be occasion to set the unruly evil a-going. "I am afraid of his tongue," "I am afraid of her tongue," are expressions sometimes dropped by the more wary brother or sister. And there is reason. The most innocent things are warped and twisted into rumor, and rumor grows into scandal, and the authors of the trouble seem to enjoy the commotion they have stirred up.

Considering the evils of an unbridled tongue to the Christian community, and the deplorable spiritual condition of the individual which it indicates, we are not surprised that the inspired writers have so much to say about it. Nor are we at a loss to know why it is made a mark of the perfect man that he offends not in word. If grace has obtained the victory over evil-speaking, if love is triumphant at this point, we may well conclude that the bridled tongue assures that the whole nature is under the dominion of the Spirit. If the rein is not upon the tongue there is looseness everywhere, and the religion is seeming rather than real. If conversion has ever been experienced, declension has taken place, and there is need of renewed repentance and the sanctifying work of the Holy Ghost.

Report of the Publishing Committee.

The Publishing Committee of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met at the Seashore camp ground on the twelfth instant, and held their last session on the sixteenth. It was a matter of deep regret that the venerable John G. Jones, so long and so fast a friend to the ADVOCATE, was absent from their deliberations. The very full and complete report of the publisher showed that, notwithstanding the financial distress of the country, about eight thousand copies of the paper were issued weekly, and that the receipts of the paper for the last year were, as compared with its expenses, in excess of any former year. There is yet a large amount due upon subscriptions; and, while right and justice demand payment, the liberality of the publisher is offering a favorable compromise.

Complaint is still made in some quarters of the character of a few of the advertisements, and the committee appreciate these complaints, but are satisfied to "let it be so now," with the confident belief that in a little while these will be excluded, and that nothing will appear in its columns that will excuse offense to the most refined and cultivated taste. It ought to be known by all that no paper is sustained by subscriptions alone, and that the most diligent carefulness will sometimes fail to keep a paper entirely free from terms or expressions amenable to fault-finding.

Of the mechanical execution of the paper no complaint is made. The paper, typography and press-work are equal, if not superior, to those of any of the family of Advocates.

The selections are discreetly made, with good taste, and calculated to furnish matter of general and profitable information. The news items, the commercial and agricultural departments bring the general reader into acquaintance with current events and facts of practical interest. The obituary columns keep before us bright examples of holy living and peaceful or triumphant dying. The editorials evince great ability. They flow out from a trained and thoughtful mind, are full of wholesome, godly suggestions, and shed an abundance of spiritual light and warmth upon the heart of the careful and devout reader. The published contributions are chosen from no redundant portfolio, and are not just to the talent and culture of the church. There are too few of them. Now and then a well-timed recurrence to doctrine and usage is commended, or a racy criticism stirs us; but there is too little of it. There are not wanting huge manuscripts ably treating subjects of science and polemic theology. These do for reviews, but not for a newspaper. It is here that we think the ADVOCATE can be improved. The cultured men and women of the church ought to contribute of their abundance to the intellectual and spiritual growth of our people, and the columns of the ADVOCATE furnish them ready and ample means of doing so.

The ADVOCATE must depend in great measure upon the preachers for collections, as well as for more general circulation. Every family ought to take it. Many only need to be applied to, and soon a generation of thorough Methodists would swell the enlarging triumphs of the church of Christ.

The committee, after a most patient and searching inquiry into the financial interests of the ADVOCATE, were satisfied that the publisher, with diligence and economy, would be able to continue his contract in its publication. Some fears had been expressed that the disaster which had befallen the Publishing House in Nashville and the Depository here would so embarrass the publisher that the interests, if not the very existence, of the ADVOCATE would be put in peril. We think that there is no ground of fear. The paper has no complication whatever with the Publishing House. The steady increase of subscribers from 3,500 in 1870 to 8,000 at the present time is proof of the fidelity of the publisher, the talent of the editor, and the appreciation of the public.

Our people having been educated into the belief that such a paper is a necessity to the church in the district of country it is intended to serve, are confidently expected to foster it with their material and moral aid.

JACKSON, MISS., July 22, 1878.

"Supreme Impudence."

Under the above title the New York Christian Advocate of July 18 has a rabid editorial. The following is the introductory sentence, and a fair sample of the entire article:

Jefferson Davis, an outlaw, an unpardoned traitor and rebel, the bloody dregs and debris of the "lost cause," ventures to instruct the American people on States rights, and talk about the cruelty and devastations of the government, whose greatest cruelty and crime consists in not having hung him long ago.

And all this from one who has felt called of God to preach a gospel of peace and good will to men! The late editor confesses his humiliation at "the weakness of a government that makes such impudence possible." Rather a candid confession. From editorial observations of months past we supposed him quite satisfied with the government. He thought that Providence appointed the electoral commission, manipulated its proceedings and ordered its decisions. He looked forward upon an era of greater prosperity and sectional harmony under the providential leadership of the new chief magistrate. Now he is humiliated at the weakness of the government. Its "greatest cruelty and crime" has been the sparing of human life.

I am neither the advocate nor the apologist of Mr. Davis. He needs neither advocacy nor apology from pen or tongue. His words and deeds have passed into history, and by them he will stand or fall, as he is judged by friends or enemies. But what word or sentiment his speech at Mississippi City contained to provoke such wrath and naughty language from the "great official" I have not been able to discover after an interested and careful reading. The reassertion of his profound belief in the doctrine of States rights, as taught by the constitution, is creditable both to his head and heart. It is but another evidence of uncorrupted honesty of purpose and opinion. Had he avowed a contrary sentiment it would have impeached his record in the past, and given occasion to be denounced as "an outlaw, an unpardoned traitor and rebel." Now the wisdom and truth of his opinions may be questioned, but none, unless a purblind partisan, can doubt his honesty and sincerity. Though mistaken, he felt his course to be right. Then why this wrathful froth and foam? Does the autocratic New York editor deny the doctrine of a free press and free speech? Shall a man be denounced and charged with "brazen audacity" because he ventures to express an honest opinion?

There are thousands in the South and many in the North who believed as honestly as Mr. Davis in his political doctrines. Like him, they have accepted the arbitrament of arms and "the logic of events." But to deny their belief would belie their course.

But why should Mr. Davis be hung? And why the editor's mourning that he could not officiate as chaplain, invoking the divine blessing upon the executioners? Was he the chief of Southern sinners? Here our brilliant editor is as illogical as his language is unchristian. Mr. Davis was made the leader of the "lost cause" by the free suffrages of his countrymen. They were with him in opinion and sympathy. If sinners, they were alike culpable, and should suffer a like condemnation. I do not champion the cause of Mr. Davis, nor wish to revive the "dead issues" of the past. I express no opinion upon the political doctrine which has ceased to be a question. This has been referred to simply to illustrate the inquisitorial vigilance and malignant spleen of our brother "across the Tweed."

I also confessed to being shocked not so much at the supreme impudence as brazen impiety of the Advocate editorial. For charity's sake I would hope the language exaggerated the editor's calm and honest sentiments. How a minister of the gospel, whose sacred office is to save men—to make alive, and not to kill—can sigh, because a human life has not been cut off, when at least there is doubt of his criminality, is beyond possible solution. So anxious is he for his execution that his salvation is considered the government's "greatest cruelty and crime." Cruel to spare life! A crime not to stain hands with a brother's blood! Surely in this section we have not so learned Christ. For the benefit of those who may not know who controls the columns of the New York Christian Advocate, I will say he is the Rev. Charles H. Fowler, D. D., LL. D., who delivered the eloquent fraternal address before the General Conference at Louisville. Alas! he must have fallen from the grace of fraternity.

Wesley on Sleep.

Our founder was an early riser on principle, and the pioneer Methodist preachers, following his example and precept, usually rose at four o'clock. Preaching at five o'clock in the morning was also regarded by Mr. Wesley as very wholesome for preachers and hearers. In these degenerate days what Methodist is such a stickler for "old Methodism" as to rise at four, or to preach or hear preaching at five in the morning! But our founder lived in the bracing climate of the British Isles, and perhaps even he would have granted indulgence in these matters to those of us who live in this relaxing latitude.

Mr. Wesley went to bed regularly at ten o'clock, and we believe he was in the habit of taking a noonday siesta. Here is what he wrote to one of his nieces, a young lady of probably twenty summers, on the subject:

NEW ORLEANS, July 6, 1781.

MY DEAR SALLY: Without an endeavor to please God, and to give up our own will, we never shall attain his favor. But till we have attained it, till we have the spirit of adoption, we cannot actually give up our own wills to him. Shall I tell you freely what I judge to be the grand hindrance to your attaining it? yea, to your attaining more health both of body and mind than you have ever had, or at least for a long season? I believe it is, what very few people are aware of, intemperance in sleep. All are intemperate in sleep who sleep more than nature requires; and how much it does require is easily known. There is, indeed, no universal rule—none that will suit all constitutions. But, after all the observations and experience I have been able to make for upward of fifty years, I am fully persuaded that men in general need between six and seven hours' sleep in twenty-four; and women in general a little more—namely, between seven and eight.

But what ill consequences are there in lying longer in bed—suppose nine hours in four-and-twenty?

1. It hurts the body. Whether you sleep or no (and, indeed, it commonly prevents sound sleep,) it, as it were, soddens and parboils the flesh and sows the seed of numerous disorders, of all nervous diseases in particular, as weakness, faintness, lowness of spirits, nervous headaches, and consequent weakness of sight.

2. It hurts the mind. It weakens the understanding, it blunts the imagination, it weakens the memory, it dulls all the nobler affections. It takes off the edge of the soul, impairs its vigor and firmness, and infuses a wrong softness, quite inconsistent with the character of a good soldier of Jesus Christ. It grieves the Holy Spirit of God, and prevents, or at least lessens, those blessed influences which tend to make you not almost, but altogether, a Christian.

I advise you, therefore, from this day forward, not trusting in yourself, but in him that raiseth the dead, to take exactly so much sleep as nature requires. If you need between seven and eight hours, then, in the name of God, begin this very night, in spite of all temptations to the contrary. Lie down at ten o'clock, and rise between five and six, whether you sleep or no. If your head aches in the day, bear it. In a week you will sleep sound. If you can take this advice you may receive more from, my dear Sally,

Yours most affectionately,

JOHN WESLEY.

The Yellow Fever.

For the twenty-four hours ending at 12 M. on Monday, July 29, there were five deaths from yellow fever. Up to that date there had been in all eighty cases and thirty-three deaths. It will be seen from these figures, which are carefully and accurately reported by the Board of Health, that the disease has as yet assumed small proportions. The first cases, because not recognized as yellow fever, are nearly always most fatal. Physicians are sent for when it is too late, and the sick, by their own imprudence, have made recovery almost impossible. Treated promptly, the disease nearly always yields; but where getting out of bed, changing the clothing or nourishment taken too soon brings on fatal results, it is not wonderful that many die through sheer ignorance of the necessary precautions. The real cause of alarm at present is not in the amount of fever we have here, for it is really inconsiderable, but in the fear that it will spread until it reaches an epidemic form. There are some grounds for this apprehension, but disinfectants are being used liberally, and the next week or two will show with what effect. We have no reason to believe that what fever we have is of a very virulent type. We know of numbers of cases that have been light, and that have yielded readily to judicious treatment. Reports abroad are generally greatly exaggerated, and the rumors that fly about us here in the city must be largely discounted. Thousands of people have left the city within the past week, but there are many thousands of the unacclimated who are compelled to remain. Our settled and permanent people are calm, and prepared to meet the emergency, if it comes, with a good heart. Let those get away who can; but for the rest let there be no flurry and no panic.

We notice that the Rev. W. H. Milburn, after an absence of over two years, has returned to his native land, and is again at his home in Jacksonville, Ill., where he may be addressed for the future. Mr. Milburn's sojourn abroad has been chiefly in Great Britain and Ireland. He has traveled all over those countries, in all more than thirty thousand miles, lectured and preached about six hundred times, and has made himself thoroughly acquainted with the people. We understand that he proposes to embody the results of his observations and experience in new lectures on Scotland, Ireland and England; and will have, in addition, a course on health, strength, beauty and length of days, and the means of securing them. We doubt not that the eloquent blind preacher has gathered materials for lectures of surpassing interest, and that he will again enter the lecture-field in America better equipped than ever to entertain and instruct those whose fortune it may be to hear him.

In the Nashville Christian Advocate of July 27 Dr. Fitzgerald sends out a graceful and appropriate salutatory, and enters upon his editorial duties. We would extend to him a hearty welcome. The doctor is one of the born editors, and loves the work. He will give the church a fresh paper, bright, attractive and tasteful, and one that will worthily advocate the doctrines of Christianity as held by Methodists. While we part with regret with the learned and industrious scholar and writer who has so long occupied the tripod of our Nashville cotemporary, we congratulate him on having so able a successor, and the whole church on the new editor which the General Conference has given us.

"Time out of mind" is the oldest fanatic on record.

The Christian Intelligencer sa very truly:

We might go no further than t editorial and business-rooms of a r ligious newspaper to prove what w say. In times like these, when su scriptions are more uncertain an advertisements are far less remune ative than formerly, nearly all reli ious newspapers are published at loss, or barely make expenses. B what right has a Christian denom ination to expect a few private ge tlemen to publish its periodicals a loss to themselves? A churc paper is not a charity. Yet for lac of adequate support by its own co munion, it may practically becom such to hundreds of people wh would scorn to ask a penny for an purpose. A church paper that worthy the name, even though may be private property, is really a incle an institution of the church which it represents as any of its be nevolent agencies. We make bol to say that any one of our leadin Protestant denominations could be ter afford to lose one of its organize boards of missions, education o publication than the church pape which speaks gratuitously and con stantly for them all, and for all th ecclesiastical interests of the church

Herein we find the highest reaso for the existence and full support o the denominational newspaper. It fills a place and does a specific wor which no other religious paper ca do or proposes to do. It is the prope organ of information, opinion an influence in the branch of the church which it represents. The union, un denominational and general religiou newspapers cannot and will not do this service. But the papers which are organized for it are not charities and they should be so supported a to maintain their independence an usefulness upon all subjects of which they treat.

The editor of the Pacific Methodist, writing of things about Atlanta says:

With Bishop McTyeire and Dr. Haygood I visited Oxford, the seat of Emory College, and spent a Sabbath. It is a delightful spot, redolent of Christian graces and beautiful in physical charms. The "academic grove" was full of poetic beauty, the halls were commodious and tasteful, and the total ensemble just what a lover of Christian education would desire. I was told that for forty years no one had died in the village who was not a professor of religion. Revivals of religion are chronic. They call for mourners on any occasion—at Sunday school, class meetings, prayer meetings, anywhere—and usually with success. We noted an answer to a question from Dr. Winfield to the Sunday-school which indicated a high degree of orthodoxy. The doctor was drawing the school through a catechetical labyrinth from "the first man" to "regeneration," and at the question: "What do you do when you are converted?" a little chap cried out: "We shout!" That's Oxford. With such an atmosphere it is no wonder that noble men come out from the walls of Emory College.

Rev. Dr. Tudor, of our church, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of July 20, has been making a brief visit to Baltimore. He preached with his usual ability at Fayette Street Methodist Episcopal Church on Sabbath morning last, and at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church South at night. The doctor is a native of our city, and has still a number of kindred residing among us. It was quite a gratification to his many friends in Baltimore to have the opportunity of seeing and hearing him again.

California must be a good country. We wish we could summer it in San Francisco. We are sweltering here in our editorial garret, with the thermometer at ninety and something, and there they have cool weather in abundance. The Pacific Methodist draws the contrast as follows:

The accounts of hot weather, with such fatal results as have occurred during the last two weeks in the valley of the Mississippi, read strangely to our people. In San Francisco during the same period the highest maximum thermometer was 72° and the lowest minimum 51°. Last Wednesday, while men and horses were dropping in the streets of Eastern cities, overpowered with heat, we were standing with a friend in one of the hotel saloons of this city and observed gentlemen closely gathered around a bright fire burning in a grate. A well-authenticated case of sunstroke has never been recorded in this country. While the thermometer frequently reaches 100° to 105° in the shade in our interior valleys, men continue their work in the harvest fields without much discomfort, and no fear. The clear, pure atmosphere is never stagnant with malaria. During the past season fearful storms of wind and rain have devastated whole sections of the Mississippi valley, from the Rocky mountains to the Atlantic. Lives are frequently lost during these cyclones and by lightning. Nothing of the kind occurs here. We have never heard of a wind strong enough to destroy the most ordinary frame. Lightning-holes are a rare phenomena.

The Sunday School Assembly at Round Lake, New York, convened July 6, Joseph Hillman, president of the association, made a speech of welcome, and introduced Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., who made a reply. Bishop Clarke, in charge of the assembly. A correspondent says: "Round Lake was constant progress as the main feature of its history. Ten years ago it was a desolate grove, chosen by a camp-meeting association as a convenient place to pitch tents and enjoy a week of Christian fellowship. Last year it had become a village of tents and cottages, with well-laid avenues, springs of fresh and mineral waters, gas and drainage, and opened, not improperly, to be a national religious resort, attracting visitors from all parts of the country. This year it has added unto itself a hotel and a tunnel, new avenues and cottages, a miniature park and city. It is named by an enthusiastic clergyman the Christian Saratoga of America. And yet the active and energetic management are not content, but have plans for the construction of an extensive and expensive hotel on the hill which confronts the grounds on the west, to say nothing of a dozen lesser projects. Nearly $50,000 have been expended in improvements here since last season."—Central Christian Advocate.

Private advices from the Rev. W. H. Patterson, city of Mexico, July 2, to the Western Methodist, convey the happy news that the little daughter Bessie, whom we reported dangerously ill some weeks ago, is again in the enjoyment of good health, and at last advices the United States circus was preparing for a week's engagement on the Fourth of July, and they had the promise of delightful weather on the occasion. The temperature was quite moderate—nights cool—while hereabouts have been for weeks and are still, melting day and night by heats almost beyond endurance. We are surprised to learn that the Patterson family are delighted with the climate of Mexico, also with the country, a small and select circle of refined people. Our good brother will work heartily and faithfully, and with a strong hope of success. Let us pray for his success, and help him in every way possible.

Good Notion.—The United Kingdom says:

An English gentleman who was some years expecting to become a foreign missionary, but was providentially prevented, finds himself able to give a considerable amount of money to the Church Missionary Society, and he offers to it $1,250 a year for ten years to be for a substitute. That is an idea which commend itself to some rich Christians, who find it impossible to engage themselves in missionary work.

Every Christian ought to be represented in the foreign field. If not able to support a whole missionary, could help to maintain one. If cannot go ourselves, let us have substitutes in the great Christian army of invasion and conquest.

Cattle were greatly shocked, says the Western Methodist of July 20, when they received the news of the sudden and untimely apoplexy, of the Rev. J. L. Nelson, of the Memphis Conference Sunday school agent. The preached us through the Rev. J. Walker, and a little later in the (Tuesday last) we received the following note from the Rev. S. H. Lake:

"The Rev. J. C. Acton, after a brief illness, died at his residence in Bolivar, Tenn., yesterday (Monday, July 15, at 5:30 P. M."

The Southern Christian Advocate resumes publication at Charleston, S. C., August 1. It will be published by Walker, Evans & Cogswell, with the Rev. F. M. Kennedy, D. D., as old, place as editor, and the Rev. S. A. Weber as associate editor.

Rev. J. S. Woods, of the West Texas Conference, and in charge of the San Antonio City Mission, is dead.

The total length of all the railways in the world, according to a German journal, is sufficient to go seven times around the earth at the equator.

THE DESTINY OF RUSSIA. By Theta. Chicago: Thomas Wilson, 1878.

The subject of the work, more fully stated, is: Russia in prophecy. What God's prophets have foretold concerning the destiny of that great empire, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa, and the Jews. About all these things the author knows no more than any other man who may choose to hazard conjectures concerning them. His application of prophecy to the nations mentioned is very unsatisfactory, and of little value to the reader. He has, however, chosen a good time to issue his book. The volume is a 12mo of 118 pages, handsomely bound, with a colored map.

—We have received a copy of the new Discipline. It contains the pastoral address of the Bishops of 1874 the boundaries of the Annual Conferences, and the plan of conducting our publishing interests, besides the Articles of Religion, General Rules, Ritual, and all other matters relating to the laws and discipline of the church. Orders for it can be sent at once to the Publishing House at Nashville. The prices are as follows: Single copies 40 cents; to preachers, when sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, per dozen $3 60; when sent by mail, $4. Terms—Cash, or its equivalent.

—Scribner's Monthly for August has: Portrait of William Cullen Bryant; A Seaport on the Pacific, illustrated; Sharp Eyes, illustrated; William Cullen Bryant, illustrated; Glimpses of New England Farm Life, Illustrated; Longstaff's Marriage; To South Africa for Diamonds, illustrated; Old Robin, illustrated; Midsummer, and other articles. A very superior number of this popular magazine.

—Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine for July, American edition—the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, New York—has the following articles: John Cablegate, part 4; Apples—A Comedy; Translations from Heine; Gordon Baldwin, part 1; Gaelic Lore and Modern Slang; Our Kentish Parish; The Two Muses; The South African Question; The Congress.

—The National Repository for August has: Mount Desert, Illustrated; Tears; Swiss Lakes and Mountains, Illustrated; Henry Rogers, Illustrated; Winding Tangled Skeins; Last Days of Mary Queen of Scots; Thou Loveist Me; Among the Thorns; About Witnesses; Heavenly Anticipations; Three Era's in a Woman's Life; Death of Gustavus Adolphus; Editorial Miscellany.

—The Complete Premium for July has: Oration at the Funeral of William Cullen Bryant, by Henry W. Bellows, D. D.; The Body of Christ, by Dennis Kenley, D. D.; The Prodigal Son, by Joseph Parker, D. D.; Catholicity in its Relationship to Protestantism and Romanism, by F. C. Ewer, S. T. D.; Fidelity and its Recompense, by W. M. Punshon, LL. D.

—We have received the catalogue of the Yazoo District High School for the session of 1877–78. This school is located at Blackhawk, Miss., and is under the care of the Yazoo district, Methodist Episcopal Church South. Such schools ought to be established and patronized in many sections of our country. This school is doing well.

Lippincott's Magazine for August has: Along the Danube, Illustrated; The Paris Exposition of 1878, Illustrated; A Welsh Watering-Place; A Sea-Sound; The British Soldier; A Saxon God; Sambo—A Man and a Brother; The Empress Eugenie, and other articles.

—We have received an International Sunday school wall map, series C, of Palestine at the time of Christ, and a map of the city of Jerusalem. The map is 40 by 60 inches, colored, and on cloth. M. A. Condy, publisher, St. Louis. Price, $2.50.

—Our Sunday school periodicals for August are to hand. We are glad to see that a supplemental lesson from the catechism is given each week. This number of the Magazine is unusually full and satisfactory in expository notes.

—Golden Hours for August is one of the best numbers of this excellent periodical. Children will be delighted with it. It will entertain and instruct them, and contribute to make them wiser, better and happier.

—The American Agricultural for August is an excellent number of this superior periodical. The fine portrait of the recently-deceased poet, William Cullen Bryant, is the best we have seen.

—Wide Awake for August has the usual number of beautiful illustrations, and is brimful of the choicest reading matter for the young people.

The price of Bishop McTyeire's Catechism on Church Government is 10 cents in cloth; half bound, 5 cents.

John B. Gough, says the Independent, sailed for Europe, with his wife, on the tenth, to be absent two years. The lecturer's friends and neighbors at Worcester, Mass., gave him a most pleasant farewell banquet just before he left them, and many capital things were said on the occasion. Mr. Gough's own reminiscences were, of course, very interesting, and he told them with much feeling. "I first came to Worcester," he said, "in 1840, with a diorama of the Battle of Bunker Hill. My business was to turn the crank and to sing songs in the pauses of the exhibition. It was but a poor life for a man to be engaged in. I always disliked it, and while here I went to Mr. Hutchinson and asked him to give me work as a book-binder. He said: 'Are you the young man who made me laugh so last night?' I answered: 'Yes. I can make others laugh, but I am very sad myself.' He gave me work and wages." Passing to his public life, he recalled his first speech in the old Worcester Town Hall. All he said there was: "What are you laughing at?"—"At the next meeting," Mr. Gough continued:

"I made my second speech. The chairman said: 'I see here the young man who signed the pledge last night. We would like to hear how he feels.' I replied that I felt pretty well—much better than I did a week ago. I have spoken often enough since then; but I have never endeavored to be an orator. I only just let what is in me spill over. All these reminiscences come before me today."

But, while he could now speak on temperance, Mr Gough declared that he couldn't say much on other subjects, as when, for instance, he once tore his coat while speaking hard on his favorite topic. "The mayor," he said, "sent a tailor to measure me for another. When it was done he came with a party of gentlemen to present the coat. What could I say about a coat? What do you suppose I did say? Why, I said: 'Gentlemen, if I'd known this was to be the result of my tearing my coat, I'd have torn my trousers too!' But, speaking in a more sober mood, he dwelt something of his struggles and trials, and of the great temperance cause. He expects to speak in England first in Spurgeon's Tabernacle, in London, the night before Christmas, when Canon Farrar will preside. Among those who were present or spoke at the Worcester banquet were Ex Gov. Claflin, Judge Aldrich, Hon. Emery Twichell, Rev. Dr. Gould, Congressman Rice, and a large number of prominent citizens.

THE QUICKEST TIME EAST.—The great Jackson Railroad is making the quickest time to New York ever known, leaving New Orleans daily at 6 P. M. and arriving at New York at 7 A. M. Allowing for the difference in time between the two cities, the run is made in the unprecedented time of fifty-nine and three-quarter hours. This record is made only by the great Jackson Route, and is the result of its enterprise in equipping its track with steel rails, and new engines, at heavy expense, and the thorough system of bracing that has been undergone. This fast time will be of great advantage to the people of Mississippi, which it is hoped they will show their appreciation of by their patronage. Only one change of cars, which is made at Columbus, Ohio, where breakfast is taken in the splendid dining hall at that place at 8 A. M.

The route also makes the quickest time to Boston, arriving at 10 P. M. Actual running time, 54 hours and 30 minutes. This makes it the most desirable route for all New England points. The time to all intermediate points is correspondingly low, thus making this the quickest and best route to the north and Eastern cities.

For tickets to Waukesha, Oconomowoc, and all the Northwestern summer resorts, to Niagara Falls, Put-in-Bay, etc., are on sale at the lowest rates, with the quickest time made by any line, and only one change of cars.

VANDALIA LINE.—The attention of our readers and the traveling public is called to the merits of the above line. For parties going East by way of St. Louis there is no better road. Comfortable connections and elegant palace cars, gliding noiselessly, safely and surely along over a track so smooth that one is almost unconscious of motion unless he chances to look out of the window. Either for the time absolute or relative comfort and luxurious ease by anything the most fastidious traveler of the past generation ever dreamed of. The popularity of this old and reliable road is constantly and steadily on the increase. The efficient and well-known and, I might say, respected general manager, Col. Simpson, are fully appreciated by the traveling public.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing from New York, says: "I am writing this up at one of the grandest and best of European plan hotels when you visit New York, do not fail to come to this grand. It is centrally and conveniently located, has one of the best ventilation perfect, the best delightful, and everything about the house betokens home comfort, elegance and refinement."

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 42 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

MR E. E. ROSS, one of the staff of this paper, leaves this evening for the West and East on business connected with the Advocate. Any attention shown him will be appreciated.

TOKEN OF RESPECT.

Among the nations of antiquity an olive or a palm was regarded as a token of the most pleasant and most loving. At the present time a present of a box of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder would not only be regarded as a token of respect, but as a token of the highest and most valuable kind.

THE UTILITY OF SOOT.

How disagreeable it is to be covered with soot; and what a quantity of the filthy stuff is yearly dumped into out-of-the way corners and holes. The writer has spent four fifths of his life in and about gardens. During these years he has been compelled to fight insects—many of them very small and others large—and this "nasty soot," has been one of the best aids in overcoming the myriads of insects that attack plants in a state of cultivation. He once lived on a place that lay on the edge of a marsh, or large tract of bog-land; and such a location is always favorable for insects. Nothing in the way of cabbage could be grown there successfully without the aid of soot; no densely-grained heads of snowy-white cauliflower would have graced the owner's table if soot had not been freely used. All the stirring of the soil and manuring that could be done would not avail to produce a fair crop. Soot was first sprinkled over the ground before the seeds were sown, then worked into the soil; and after the seedlings had made their second or proper leaves advantage was taken of a dewy morning to cover them with a light sprinkling of soot. Then when the young plants were transplanted they were dipped into a paint composed of equal parts of soot and soil, mixed up with water, or, what is better still, soapsuds, until the whole was like thin paint. Into this handsful of plants were placed, so that they were covered up to their first leaves, and even partly covering them. After doing this there was little or no trouble in producing cabbage, cauliflowers, or any of their brothers—such as Savoys, Brussels sprouts, or the curled kale of Aberdeen—fit for any piece of humanity, from a prince to a beggar.

Soot is one of the best friends that a gardener or farmer has, and if he permits an ounce of it to be thrown away he is casting away his own wealth. It will not kill the wire-worm or annihilate troublesome insects—but it will make it very annoying for them to be compelled to eat through it before they can get at the nice, succulent vegetables. If soot is first sown pretty thickly over the soil where onions, carrots and other root crops are to be grown, and then worked in, so as not to come in contact with the seed when it is sown, there is no fear of losing a crop by the ravages of wire worms, and other pests. Here in western America we complain of insects, while we throw away that which would drive them to seek their food in some other place. The cutter fly or moth comes regularly every May to disfigure our rose-bushes, often making them appear as if they had been burned by a hot sun; when, if the bushes had been dusted and soot-pinned on them in the first weeks in May, say once a week, the cutter fly would have been missing. Should any leaves have missed a coat of soot, look them over about five or six o'clock in the evening, and this insect may be easily seen on the top of the leaf, where it has gone to feed during the night; while in the day-time it lays quietly, underneath, to shade itself from the sun.

The farmers in England are great soot-peers, and it is no uncommon thing to see a whole train of soot bearing the towns for the farms and gardens at a distance. The turnip crop of England would be a failure each year were it not for soot, and this is a very important crop in many districts. After they get into the second leaf the soot begins to fly; or, if not, a small fly takes possession of the young, tender leaves, and leaves the farmer nothing for his labor.

Soot is not only a good thing to drive away insects, but is also a powerful stimulant. The ammonia it contains readily mixes with whatever moisture comes in contact with it, and makes the plants feel good, so to speak. The carbon and sulphurous gases in it also add their share to the health of the plants. Therefore, kind friends, don't waste your soot. Store it as you would gold, for it is quite as valuable in the economy of life.—An Old Gardener, in Vick's Illustrated Magazine.

RAISIN-MAKING.—Raisin-making has been shown long time to time to be much more profitable and respectable than wine making. While grapes for wine have this year sold for $10 per ton, raisin grapes pay a profit on $50 per ton or coring into raisins. And still there are grape-growers who pretend to despise the California Agriculturist for daring to call into question either the profit or the morality of wine making. The fact that their vineyards are generally mortgaged, and they cannot sell wine for enough to pay the cost of the casks in which it is stored, is as nothing compared to the delusion of phantom wealth they expect to see metamorphosed into a reality. They also often spoil their manhood trying to save their wine by drinking it. We pity the poor wine bibber who cannot see or will not listen to fruitful advice. And, however much enmity we incur, we propose to continue to give expression to our honest convictions.—California Agriculturist.

WATERING POULTRY.—It is the belief of the writer that many diseases incident to poultry are due to neglect to provide them with pure water. Particularly do we believe such to be the case, in the majority of instances, where chicken cholera prevails. The omission to furnish fowls with suitable drinking water is one of the worst features to be guilty of in animals. It is a neglect that is decidedly adverse to success, and hence tends to diminish individual and flock profits, and works detriment to poultry interests. Those whom we occasionally hear say that "there is no profit in poultry," are not qualified to have the management of a chicken, and their utterances may be classed with the thriftless and negligent parties who keep fowls but get drink when it rains.—Fancier's Journal.

A TULIP MANIA.—A magazine writer tells us of the tulip mania which broke out in Holland many years ago. The sturdy burghers took the tulip mania so badly that a single bulb that would not flower until another year sold for $2,000. A trader at Haarlem was actually known to pay half his fortune for a single root, not from any expectation of profit in its propagation, but to keep it in his conservatory for the admiration of his acquaintances. Wealthy burghers of Amsterdam sent direct to Constantinople for the precious bulbs, and paid extravagant prices for them.

BOSTON CREAM PIE.—Cream Part.—One pint of new milk, two eggs, three tablespoonfuls of sifted flour, five tablespoonfuls of sugar. Put two-thirds of the milk on to boil, and stir the sugar and flour in what is left. When the rest boils put in the whole and stir until it cooks thoroughly. When cool flavor with vanilla or lemon. Crust Part.—Three eggs, beaten separately, one cup of granulated sugar, one and a half cups of sifted flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder. Divide in half, put in two pie-tins, and bake in a quick oven to a straw color. When taken out, split in halves and spread the cream between.

EXTRACTED HONEY.—A correspondent of the Bee Keepers' Magazine says: I used to take any surplus honey in boxes, but since I have commenced the use of the extractor I have no notion of going back to the use of boxes again. I think I can make a home market for all my surplus in time. I keep my extracted honey from candying by letting it stand a few days after throwing out, when I heat it to 150 and seal in cans. This does not injure the flavor. Have some now, that is perfectly clear, and it stands in a cold room.

A worthy farmer, not a hundred miles from Lochgoilhead, was greatly exercised regarding the safety of his hay crop. The weather, though often threatening, favored his efforts till he succeeded in getting it safely gathered in—being in this respect more fortunate than several of his neighbors. After seeing the last wisp of straw tied round his stacks he exclaimed, with a self-satisfied air: "Now, sin' I hae gotten my hay a' safe in, I think the world wunld be greately the better o' a guid shower."

The Lost Atlantis.

BY PROF. E. T. NELSON, PH. D.

According to a tradition current in Egypt at the time of Plato, an island, larger than the then known worlds of Asia and Africa, had formerly existed in the Atlantic Ocean, stretching itself westward from the mouth of the Mediterranean perhaps as far as to the two Americas. Centuries before this date it had been the seat of a powerful empire, whose sway extended as far as Egypt on the south, and to Italy on the north. Other traditionary tales represent this island as of remarkable fertility, and covered by widespread forests of luxuriant pasture lands. It produced wine, the grains and the most exquisite fruits. The people, directly descended from Neptune, inherited a love for commerce and naval warfare. The seas were covered by their fleets, and their onward conquests were only checked by the united forces of all Greece. At last a submarine earthquake, ordered by Jupiter on account of the sins of the people, caused the island to sink beneath the ocean's level. For centuries its site was marked by shallow seas, and extensive banks and bars of sand.

This fabled "Atlantis" was allowed to sleep quietly in the bed of the sea until some twenty years since, when a German botanist suggested it as the bridge by which the flora of the early tertiary of America crossed the ocean, in order to reproduce itself in the middle tertiary of Europe.

America, during the early tertiary, was a world in itself, with a flora peculiar and unique. Maples, oaks, willows, hickories, poplars, dogwoods and magnolias had, to a large extent, driven out the palms and cycads of the preceding age and had clothed the land with a foliage similar to the types of the present day. The climate was warm temperate. Europe, on the other hand, was a land of palms and tropical plants with a vegetation on the whole closely resembling that of Australia. But in the middle tertiary these tropical species gave place to the oaks and other deciduous-leaved trees which had first appeared in America. The problem was, and is still, to account for this strange migration. Was it eastward by means of the Atlantic currents and this fabled island, or westward by way of Behring Straits and Asia?

Interest in the first supposition has revived on account of the return of the British ship Challenger, and the publication of the gifted record of travel and discovery. In a recent lectures at the South Kensington Museum Mr. W. S. Mitchell presented a chart of soundings from the North Atlantic. From the published abstract we learn that an elevated ridge of land rises from the bottom of the sea, starting north of the Azores, including in its sweep, besides that group of islands, St. Paul's, Ascension and Tristan de Acunha. This ridge, less than one thousand fathoms beneath the ocean, rises at the four points just named to the sea-level, or indeed some distance higher. The main ridge is connected with South America by a subordinate one, while it is separated from North America by a comparatively narrow channel. On either side of this ridge the water is from 1000 to 2,000 fathoms in depth. A change of level in the earth's crust, no greater than has several times occurred with the continents, might bring this elevated line to the condition of dry land. It would still be surrounded by water from two to three miles deep. The migrations of plant-life would then follow the ordinary method of dissemination of seed. The great agencies for scattering seeds over the world are the currents in the ocean and the movements in the atmosphere. Many seeds are furnished with winged appendages, or with a covering of soft downy hairs, which enable them to float in the air and to be carried about by the lightest breeze. Species of plants known to be natives of Florida and the West Indies have been discovered in Ireland, and even in Norway. The seeds of these species have been carried across the ocean with the Gulf Stream. Birds in their flight from island to island have often taken with them seeds of many different kinds of plants, which in some way become entangled in their feathers, or which formed part of their daily food. Animals in swimming from shore to shore have, in the same way, been unconscious agents in the dissemination of plant-life from one region to another. Hundreds of species of plants owe their present geographical distribution to these extraneous agencies. After the mingling of the flora of America and Europe, a subsidence of the island would again break off the connection between the two continents, and allow each to determine the life of the future, according to climatic laws. Some species might not be able to endure the cooler climate of Europe, and hence would give way to others.

While it would not be safe to assert that the island, the "Atlantis," has ever existed, we are authorized by the facts to claim that the interesting fable handed down to us from the time of Plato, and only revived by the modern naturalist, has at least a "figure" for a foundation.—Western Christian Advocate.

STEELE & PRICE.

For years the firm of Steele & Price have had the largest trade in their specialties of any house in the United States. Their Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder, Special Flavoring Extracts and Perfumes have given universal satisfaction, for we believe that no article of a similar kind have ever so well pleased.

WHITWORTH

FEMALE COLLEGE,

BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

Will Reopen September 25, 1878.

Tuition first term ..... $
Boarders ..... $
Music class ..... $
Graduating class ..... $

Board and tuition in English for eight months (one session) ..... $
Scholarship for ten years, board and tuition in English ..... $
Scholarship for four years, board and tuition college course ..... $
Piano, and Instrumental Music ..... $
Same, Instrumental Music and Drawing or Painting ..... $

The object of the scholarships is that of erecting the new college building.

The unprecedented success of the college is its best recommendation.

Bishop McTyeire writes in the Nashville Christian Advocate: "Several days spent in the delightful college family at Brookhaven left me in no doubt as to how this success has been achieved. The location is good, and the management better."

Long will I remember the morning hymns at chapel prayers. . . . Another fact not unworthy was the plainness of dressing—neat, tasteful, but plain."

The health record is as good as that of any school in Kentucky, Virginia or Tennessee.

The former site of the new college building will be laid by August.

Patronize this school and you will assist in further developing an institution which has been rapidly growing for eleven years. Send for catalogue.

H. T. JOHNSON, D. D., President.

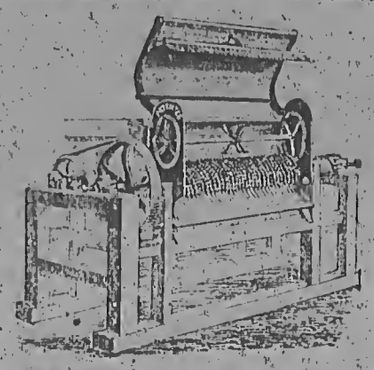
GENERAL AGENTS FOR

DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction of the seeds of the cotton fiber, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same horse-power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, rendering cotton on this account a greater market value. The improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 10 bales ginned. Test samples sent by mail on application.

ARE AT

No. 106 BOURBON St.,

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

ALL his medical preparations are put up from native-growing herbs gathered fresh from the soil they are to be used.

Diseases, ailments and complaints, whether of the young or old, males or females, and given a wonderful satisfaction generally in two weeks' treatment.

Especial attention is called to

The Wonder Doctor's Indian Acclimating Bitters.

This Bitters is a manufacture of roots from one of the most grand plantations in the mountainous districts of the South. I have used two of three different kinds of herbs at one time. This Bitters will give a wonderful satisfaction to all diseases of General Debility, and it will be found to be the only safe remedy against YELLOW FEVER. Remember that the Indians never suffer from diseases. My Bitters will cure all sorts of dyspeptic complaints, such as Swamp Fever, Bone Fever, Chills and Fever, Typhus, etc.

If my remedy can be found in a drug store or gentleman's cellar in case of Dyspepsia, Yellow Jaundice, Liver Complaints, General Spleen, Heart and Kidney Complaints, Sick Headache, Foul Stomach, Nervous Debility, Loss of Appetite, Improper Circulation of the Blood, Impure Blood, Boils, Erysipelas, Carbuncles, Scrofula, Tetter on the Bowels, the use of my INDIAN ACCLIMATING BITTERS will give entire satisfaction. It is especially a wonderful satisfaction in the case of or Enfeebled Constitutions, such as Debility of the Womanly Generally Weakness and Female Disorders.

This Bitters is used in Cuba every day as a general protect against complaints and diseases, keeping the air before it penetrates the lungs, and gives a digestive.

I would call the attention of my INDIAN ACCLIMATING BITTERS and am sure will be satisfied to buy to a little supply for family use.

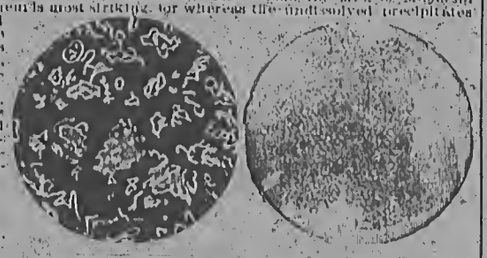
MILK OF MAGNESIA
IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH, and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach.
The pleasant texture and bulk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted for females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following Illustrations. They represent a triturated part of a single drop of acidified 25 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates, in fact, is perfectly dissolved.



Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

DO NOT WAIT FOR FEELING.—While you cannot feel too keenly, do not wait for feeling. No sorrow for the past can be too poignant; but do not wait for sorrow. If the prodigal had not arisen till he was satisfied with his own repentance he would have died in the far country. The tears which do not flow from the gaunt eyes of famine will come unbidden at the feast of fat things; and the fountains of the great deep, which freeze in the winter of remoteness and estrangement, will break up and brim over in the sunshine of mercy. The word which you take, be it what it may: "Father, I have sinned, and am no more worthy to be called thy son;" or "Take away mine iniquity, and receive me graciously"—whatever the word may be, let it be at once, and swifter than your return will be the footsteps of forthcoming pardon; and great as may be your own joy in weeping and restoring grace, far less will be the joy in Heaven over your repentance.

CHRIST THE SUN OF OUR SOULS.—Christ is to the souls of men what the sun is to the world. He is the center and source of all spiritual light, warmth, life, health, growth, beauty and fertility. Like the sun, he shines for the common benefit of all mankind—for high and for low, for rich and for poor, for Jew and for Greek. Like the sun, he is free to all. All may look at him, and drink health out of his light. If millions of mankind were mad enough to dwell in caves under ground, or to bandage their eyes, their darkness would be their own fault and not the fault of the sun. So, likewise if millions of men and women love spiritual "darkness rather than light," the blame must be laid on their blind hearts, and not on Christ. "The foolish hearts are darkened." John iii. 19. Romans i. 21. But whether men will see or not, Christ is the true sun, and the light of the world. There is no light for sinners except in the Lord Jesus. Ex.

INSUBORDINATION IN TRIAL.—A lady who had been deeply bereaved was found one day by a venerable Christian friend sitting in the deepest grief. "So, friend," said the visitor with deep solemnity, "thou hast not yet forgiven God." This timely reproof disclosed the real spirit of the mourner, and led her to a peaceful trust.

The Moniteur Universel of Paris is to send an exploring expedition to equatorial Africa, under the leadership of M. P. Soleillet. One of the chief objects of the expedition is to ascertain what facilities the region offers for commerce with France.

Each step that you take in holiness here will add new luster to that unfading crown of glory that awaits you in heaven.—Darling.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.—The seventh annual camp meeting at Crystal Springs, under the auspices of the Hedington Camp Meeting Association, will begin on Thursday, August 8, and continue not less than eight days.

Reduced fare on the railroad will be granted from all points on the road between New Orleans and Canton to Crystal Springs during the meeting.

Board and lodging can be had on the ground, as usual, at moderate rates.

Preachers are especially invited. Ample arrangements are made for their accommodation.

The services will be under the direction of Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, D. D., presiding elder of the district.

W. C. WILKINSON,
Secretary of Association.

THE delegates to the Prattville District Conference of the Alabama Conference will buy round-trip tickets on the Mobile and Montgomery, the Western and Selma, and Gulf railroads. Those who fail to buy round trip tickets will be denied the benefit of reduced rates. The steamer Billie Collins leaves Montgomery on Thursday evenings, and will bring delegates to Autauga Landing for $1. Arrangements will be made to meet the brethren at White Hall, on the Westerly road, on Wednesday evening at five o'clock, and on Thursday morning at eight o'clock.

NEIL GILLIS, P. C.

AT SMITH CAMP GROUND, Gaston circuit, Choctaw county, Ala., there will be a camp meeting, embracing the first Sunday in September, 1878—beginning on Friday night before. For this meeting we most earnestly solicit the cordial support of the entire circuit and adjacent communities. To ministers of the gospel we say: "Come over and help us."

ALEX. HOOD, P. C.

HEALING SPRINGS CAMP MEETING will begin on Thursday evening, August 22, and continue several days. The encampment is located near the mineral springs, and is a delightful summer resort. Ministers in delicate health will find this a good opportunity to visit the springs and recruit their strength. Hacks leave Hackatunnia station, Mobile and Ohio railroad, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays; distance, thirteen miles. Ministers will be taken from the station to the camp ground and returned there free of charge. Those who design coming will please inform me what day they will be at the station. Meals can be obtained at the hotel at forty cents. Lodging, fifty cents.

THE TRIUMPH
Steam COTTON BAND PULLER
AND BUCKLER.

THE ATTENTION of the Compress owners in the United States is called to this

NEW AND IMPORTANT INVENTION.

This STEAM PULLER has been thoroughly tested, and has demonstrated the fact that we can apply to Cotton Bands any required tensil strain and BUCKLE THEM AT EXACTLY THE HIGHEST POINT REACHED, and no slipping of the bands through the buckle, all the bands being drawn taut and buckled at the same instant, turning out a perfect bale, and without regard to the size, weight or shape of the bale.

THE BUCKLE is simply perfect; it is cheap and strong, and can be furnished on the order of a day by the million. The old bands are used as they come off the bales, and NOTHING is lost.

THE PULLER can be attached to any size or style of press, and at an expense that is slight compared to the benefit to be derived by the Compress. It is simple, and can be operated by regular compressmen without danger of getting out of order. The speed is equal or greater than ordinary hand-tying.

MIDSUMMER.

already round the circle of the year
There is a single perfect day that lies
Supremely fair, before our careless eyes,
After the spathe-sent floral bloom appear
Before is found the first dead leaf and sere,
It comes, precursor of the autumn skies,
And crown of spring's endeavor. Until dies
I do not dream the flawless day is here.
And thus, as on the way of life we speed,
Mindful but of the joys we hope to see,
We never think: "These present hours exceed
All that have been or that shall ever be;"
Somewhere on our journey we shall stay
Awhile to gaze on our midsummer day.

MEMPHIS Aug. 6.—Willie Warren, aged seventeen years, admitted to the quarantine hospital August 3, died yesterday. The deceased came from New Orleans, and is the only case of yellow fever that has reached Memphis.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA, July 30.—A special from Constantinople announces that the Sultan has ratified the treaty of Berlin.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—A dispatch to the Times from Frankfort confirms the report that the papal nuncio has had several interviews with Bismarck at Kissengen. The correspondent says he is in a position to state that direct negotiations between Germany and the Vatican will soon be opened. The German government is apparently bent on effecting a reconciliation, though it is impossible to say whether it is sincere.

BELGRADE, Aug. 1.—It is stated that the Austrians were fired at two hours after crossing the river Save, by united Mohammedan and Christian bands. It is also said that these will fall back and concentrate in the defiles leading to Herzegovina as the Austrians advance.

ROME, Aug. 1.—Cardinal Alessandro Franchi, pontifical secretary of State and Archbishop of Thessalonica, died at one o'clock this morning. He was a native of Italy, born in 1819, and nominated cardinal in 1877.

ROME, Aug. 2.—It is stated in clerical circles that Monsignor C. Alolsi Masselli, papal nuncio at Munich, has arrived at an understanding with Bismarck relative to the modus vivendi between Germany and the Vatican.

PARIS, Aug. 2.—The French government, at the request of the United States, has formally invited foreign powers to an international monetary congress, to begin in Paris, August 15.

KISSENGEN, Aug. 2.—Prince Bismarck to day visited the papal nuncio.

BERLIN, Aug. 3.—Ratifications of the treaty of Berlin have been exchanged between all the powers except Turkey; the Sultan, however, has signified that he recognizes the validity of the treaty.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 3.—The Russian troops are returning to Russia to the number of five thousand daily.

The Roumanian army is expected to make a triumphal entry into Bucharest, accompanied by Bulgarian trophies.

CITY OF MEXICO, July 30, via Havana, Aug. 5.—The revolutionary spirit has developed into action. The revolutionary Gen. Pedro Martinez, on July 25, with three hundred men, attacked a rich mining town called Catorles, and, it is reported, was badly repulsed. Later intelligence from revolutionary sources, however, states that Catorles was taken, with a large amount of bullion and specie falling into revolutionists' hands.

The telegraph line is cut, and there is no communication beyond Malyuhua.

A revolution is reported as going on in San Luis Potosi. It is assuming serious proportions. Communication throughout the interior is becoming difficult. Business is consequently depressed.

Elections for senators and representatives to Congress and three judges of the Supreme Court resulted favorably to the administration of Diaz. The political situation is developing, and when Congress meets both chambers will be pretty equally divided between the adherents of Vattarle and Justo Benitz the two prominent aspirants for the presidential succession.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—A Reuter dispatch from Belgrade says: The revolutionary excitement throughout Rosnia and Herzegovina is rapidly increasing as the Austrians advance, and bands of the inhabitants are collecting. Considerable uneasiness prevails in Servia at the aspect of affairs in the neighboring provinces. The Austrians were expected to enter Serajavo to-day.

ROME, Aug. 3.—It is stated in clerical circles that Bismarck and the papal nuncio have arrived at an arrangement, on the basis of amnesty for all offenses against the Falk laws, and the re establishment of the condition existing before the rupture. The Vatican will promptly give a formal reply to these propositions.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—The cab strike is spreading; there are hardly any cabs in the streets.

The strikes in the north of France are recommencing. All the coal-pits at Denain, in the Department of Nord, are deserted.

A LITTLE EVERY DAY.—A little helpfulness every day. We live for the good of others, if our living be in any sense true living. It is not in great deeds that the only blessing is found. In "little deeds of kindness," repeated every day, we find true happiness. At home, at school, in the street, in the neighbor's house, on the play-ground, we shall find opportunity every day for usefulness.

A little look into the Bible every day. One chapter a day! What a treasure of Bible knowledge one may acquire in ten years! Every day a verse committed to memory. What a volume in the mind at the end of twenty five years!

A little knowledge every day. One fact in a day. How small a fact is one fact! Only one! Ten years pass by. Three thousand six hundred and fifty facts are not a small thing.

About Methodism—Its Work and Its Aspersers.

NUMBER I.

Although Sydney Smith was a clergyman in the Church of England, he confessedly possessed a larger measure of wit and sarcasm than of personal piety and religious zeal. His wit, bon mots, piquancy of conversation, and his free and easy manners caused his presence to be sought for at every fashionable dinner, as much as vegetables out of season are hunted out. He was much more noted as a critic, a politician and a wit than as a minister of the gospel, intent upon the conversion of men and the salvation of souls. He was worldly-minded—fond of society, proud of his gift of wit and sarcasm, prone to launch into ridicule of whatsoever ran counter to his opinions; but his life and his actions plainly showed that his system of religion did not comprehend practical godliness. He adapted himself to the church to which he belonged. Now the rule of the Church of England appears to be [illegible]—to hate all innovation, to avoid all excitement, to abhor enthusiasm, to confound zeal for religion with fanaticism, to lay more stress on ritualism than on personal piety, and to make religion interfere as little as possible with the pursuits and pleasures of the world. It pays all possible deference and homage to wealth, and is on the best terms with fashion. It never shocks a titled sinner, nor quarrels with respectability, however immoral it happens to be.

Dignity, decorum and respectability seem to be far more deeply thought of than the "temperance, righteousness, and judgment to come," respecting which the apostle Paul preached with so much earnestness as to cause Felix to tremble even on his judgment-seat. A line of Tennyson's aptly paints the Christian religion as cast in the mold of the Church of England:

Forms and ceremonies are made of more consequence than personal piety and active zeal for religion.

Sydney Smith regarded religion as being a dignified, decorous, philosophical rationalism. It was morality, but considerably softened down and ingeniously dulcified; in fact put up in a capsule, like medicine, to avoid offending the palate. So one who was outwardly dignified and respectable, and generally moral in his life, the Church of England saw no particular harm in his being worldly-minded and covetous, in his getting drunk, keeping a mistress, and being immersed in the pleasures of the world. Preaching was to be marked by much dignity, but, above all things, was to be free from the vulgarity of enthusiasm and zeal; sermons were merely dissertations on morals, graced with all the graces of rhetoric and embellished with moral sentiments, but every manifestation of zeal and enthusiasm was voted vulgar and fanatical.

Such was the church to which Sydney Smith belonged, and for which he was so well adapted. It is certainly not meant to be insinuated that there are not good Christians in the Church of England. Good Christians are to be found in all sects; they exist independently of creeds; but the alliance of Church and State, existing in England, is immensely corrupting and benumbing to the church. Holding the views which he did, it was natural for Sydney Smith to look with disfavor and dislike on any divergence from the Church of England, which was established by law, which possessed most of the wealth and culture of the kingdom, and which was patronized by fashionable people. This is not, by any means, a caricature. Experience proves that mankind are prone to connect themselves with the sect that happens to be most affluent and fashionable. It requires a high degree of moral courage to join the "little church around the corner," where the poor and humble assemble to worship God. To join it causes a fashionable family to lose its social caste, and to be voted vulgar. There are thousands of people who, as they merely use the church as a stalking horse, join the wealthiest and most fashionable church in their town or city. There is a large class of professed Christians who expect to go prancing into heaven in diamonds, satin and broadcloth, and to gain admittance solely through these appendages of wealth; and, as a matter of course, this class hunts out the most wealthy and fashionable church. If the church they join chances, from any cause, to lose its pre-eminence in wealth, this class makes haste to quit its pale and to unite with the most wealthy sect. Dives feels an invincible repugnance to kneeling at the same altar with Lazarus, as it would not be respectable or decent. His "purple and linen" might be befouled by the rags that flutter about Lazarus, and compel his fashionable associates to put him in quarantine. Wealth is not religion, nor is it the key to unlock the gate at the end of the "straight and narrow way;" yet this notion seems to be quite prevalent, both among persons blessed with wealth and with the churches.

Methodism shocked and disgusted Sydney Smith, and aroused all the bile of his sub acid temper. Its earnestness brought into greater prominence the torpidity of his own most dignified and respectable church; its zeal boded no good to drowsy rectors and half starved curates. It was immensely vulgar and undignified in George Whitefield to preach in the open air, from a hillock, to the savage and ignorant miners near Bristol, who had never heard of the gospel. Why could they not come to the parish church, that had been duly consecrated, and where a clergyman, in gown and cassock, read a beautiful lecture about morality and virtue, of just fifteen minutes' duration? If these miners would not come to the parish church, why should they have any "inheritance in the house of Jesse?" It was vulgar and fanatical in Whitefield to hunt out these poor outcasts, and to preach to them wherever they would assemble! It was a symptom of madness in John Wesley to preach in barns, in the streets, and on the highways, to crowds of ignorant and rude men and women. What business had he to be preaching at five o'clock in the morning, at an hour when the rector was sleeping off the effects of the claret which he had drunk at Lord Noodle's dinner-table the day before? A sermon preached at five o'clock in the morning, in the open air, to accommodate laborers and servants, who could only attend at that hour, outraged the dignity of the Church of England. It was making religion too common and too cheap. Well-bred people would soon grow ashamed of this vulgar religion, thus hawked about the country.

The very zeal and earnestness shown by the Methodists in preaching to the poor and ignorant was vulgar and fanatical.

Sydney Smith poured out ridicule, sarcasm, invective and aspersion on the Methodists. He denounced them bitterly; he treated them most unfairly, as well as contemptuously. Voltaire says: Les bons mots sont souvent des mauvaises raisons. With much greater truth may it be said: Arguments against sects reappear periodically, like the ague. Aspersions and misrepresentations, like scum, are prone to rise to the top of the pot. Sects and men gotten mere ridicule and abuse. Ridicule, as it cannot be stereotyped, soon goes out of date. The sunlight causes it to fade and disappear. The term "Methodists," the nickname applied, by way of derision and contempt, to John Wesley and his friends—is now borne by a powerful and numerous sect of active and zealous Christians, not as a reproach, but as an honor. The ridicule could not be stereotyped.

As the accusations brought against Methodism by Sydney Smith in 1808 are still frequently urged at this day, it may not be altogether amiss to show that they are without any shadow of foundation in truth, as well as to show that Methodism has not only aroused all other sects from the torpor into which they had fallen, but has pioneered all other sects in the frontier States of the Union. Methodism, traveling afoot and on horseback, along paths scarcely discernible, entered the wilderness along with the settlers; the other churches waited until highways and roads permitted them to come in their coaches and carriages. Methodism sowed the seed; too often other sects reaped the harvest by proselytism rather than conversion. There is not a county or a neighborhood in the Union which has not been visited by the ill paid and overworked Methodist "circuit-rider;" there are hundreds of counties and thousands of neighborhoods in which an Episcopal preacher was never seen nor heard. This is a notorious fact.

Yellow Fever Treatment.

The following treatment, to our personal knowledge, has been used with great success. Mr. Notlee has been known to us for many years, and we can testify to his success in treating and nursing yellow fever. Several times during the last twenty-five years this has been published in the ADVOCATE:

MR. EDITOR: For thirty years I have used, with unfailing success, the following in yellow fever:

FIRST SYMPTOMS.

Violent pain in the forehead, with a chill or chilly sensations, quick pulse, eyes red and sparkling, hot, dry skin, perhaps a sick stomach, and pain in the back. Delirium soon follows if not quickly attended to, but will soon subside when perspiration takes place. A quick discernment of their condition and a mustard bath at once are of the utmost importance. If these symptoms are felt soon after eating, take an emetic of mustard and warm water.

TREATMENT.

Give a hot mustard foot-bath in a water bucket, while sitting; draw a blanket closely over all, with only space for breathing. Let the bucket be nearly full. Remain fifteen minutes, or until a free perspiration takes place. Drink a cup of hot elder-bloom or orange-leaf tea while in the bath, or soon after. Don't wipe the feet on getting into bed. Cover with two blankets; tuck closely round the neck. No medicine is necessary—only a simple purgative soon after going to bed. Give oil, salts or magnesia for two operations. A thick folded ice cloth or towel to be kept on the forehead; have two of these; place one in a bowl, with a lump of ice on it, without water. Change them every five minutes during the first stage of fever. This keeps the head cool and prevents delirium. Eat freely small lumps of ice. Drink ice lemonade, with cream of tartar or tamarind. Give a cup of hot elder-bloom or orange-leaf tea three or four times in the first thirty hours. If there is no ice, use cold water. A gentle perspiration must be kept up all the time till the fever passes away. If at any time it seems to dry in, or a rush of blood to the head, give a hot foot-bath for five or ten minutes; draw up the feet, place the bucket in bed, and draw the cover over all; use the first bath-water every time by adding now a handful of salt and a tumblerful of vinegar; use this bath once a day, more or less, as may be necessary. If after thirty hours the skin feels dry, sponge generally with tepid vinegar and water.

There are cases (but rarely) where there is difficulty in urinating. Give a wineglass, three or four times a day, of strong tea made of the inner bark of the young elder-tree.

Let the room be well ventilated, but no current of air near the patient. If on the second or third day there should be a soreness or burning sensation in the breast or stomach, apply a large, hot, ground flaxseed poultice. Sprinkle it with thirty or forty drops of landanum; repeat every four or five hours till relieved. If the fever has not run over five or six hours before being placed in the bath, and the proper attention thus been given, the fever will pass away in from thirty-six to fifty hours.

The third day is one of anxiety, and requires close attention, especially if there was any neglect or loss of time at first. As the fever gradually passes away the nervous forces are more or less unstrung. With some there may be nausea and vomiting. Then apply a plaster, made of equal parts of mustard and flour, to the chest. If apparently weak, faint and exhausted, with an oppression—a nervous sighing—pulse not over seventy-five, skin cooler than your own, give a teaspoonful of the best whisky, ale or porter, in the same quantity of crushed ice, with sugar, every fifteen minutes. If the feet and legs get too cold, rub gently with dry mustard, to keep up a good action on the skin. Sponge all over with tepid whisky, or warm vinegar and water. When a natural heat is restored, let the patient sleep. The third day well over, the critical moment has passed. Let the patient remain quiet three more days, without any change of bed or clothing. Let the cover be comfortable, with the room at an even temperature all the time, if possible. With sudden changes at night a fire is sometimes necessary.

On the fourth day take three spoonfuls of corn meal gruel or beef tea every two or three hours, and increase slowly. On the sixth or seventh day, if good weather, close the room, and change their clothes and bed. Do it carefully, as they do not know till now how weak and prostrate they are.

From this time, by the good judgment of nurse and patient, all will be well. They may try to sit up a few minutes several times a day. Be careful of a relapse from eating too much, or a cold, chilly room. Give chicken broth, tea and toast—a little at a time—two or three oysters, and increase the quantity slowly, with a little Scotch ale or porter, if desired.

With the first appearance of yellow fever the excitement is often increased by the statement of its being a very malignant type. It may have that appearance, as the first cases are often too far developed before its true character is known, and is therefore beyond recovery. I have never known this treatment, if taken in time for over thirty years—fail to be successful. The mildest form will always prove fatal if neglected.

It is often a saying with the nonacclimated: "I am not afraid of it." This is all talk. The way of wisdom is to make all necessary arrangements as to who shall be your nurse and medical adviser for the time, that with the first symptoms you can meet the enemy fully prepared. And any one who has never seen yellow fever before, and may know nothing of the disease or its proper treatment, but will determine to stand to their post, and, with a praying heart, nerve themselves to the fact that they are assuming the responsibility of a human life, where everything depends on their prompt attention—which in this is of the utmost importance—they may then with confidence claim for themselves the satisfaction of certain success.

CARROLLTON, Miss.

The correspondents at Paris, describing the proceedings of the Literary Congress, all have much to say about Victor Hugo's opening address, on June 17, as being a fine effort, even for Hugo. This famous Frenchman is now quite old. He is short and bulky, and still shows some of his former energy of movement. Thick, snow-white hair crowns a noble head. His voice is powerful and sonorous, and he speaks like an orator. His address was written, and read from the manuscript. "And what a manuscript!" says one correspondent. "Sheets of paper two feet square, covered with writing so large and free that you could almost read it from the balcony, fifty feet off; full, of corrections, of erasures, done as if with a painter's brush, or with the pen of a giant, as he is." His sight being poor, he had to have plenty of light; but when he was well agoing, everybody forgot incidents, and was carried off by the magnetic thoughts of the speaker. At the close he was applauded as "magnificent." The individual who proved the life and soul of the Congress was M. Edmond About, remarkable for his good sense and wit. Whether international copyright is nearer now than ever, after so much discussion and brilliancy, remains to be seen. Talk is talk.

The New England Methodist Conference, lately in session at Westfield, Mass., passed a unanimous vote "discouraging" the holding of more than three regular services in any church on the Sabbath, namely a sermon, a Bible service or Sabbath school, and a prayer meeting.

So abundant are the grasshoppers in the Echachepi Mountain that it is difficult for the Central Pacific trains to ascend the grade coming down which, too, the trains sometimes fail to accomplish their purpose.

Happy are they who think seriously of the truths of religion; but far more happy are they who feel and love them.—Fenelon.

In our last we promised that our next step would be an effort to show that man, under the gospel, might so answer the end of his being as to be denominated perfect. In conducting this inquiry we shall not consider the various sources of his physical powers and the ends to be accomplished by them; although in this branch of the subject we would find, in a most convincing point of light, man perfectly qualified to answer the design upon him. Neither is it our intention to analyze his moral powers further than they are concerned in accomplishing the end of his being as a servant of God. It is only by an abuse, willful abuse, of those powers that the gracious designs of Heaven are frustrated, and man the artificer of his own misery and ruin.

While we are compelled, by the irresistible force of evidence, to admit the track of man's apostasy from the condition in which he was at first placed, yet we shall find, upon candid investigation, that he may so answer his destination as to be pronounced perfect. To be as brief as the subject will allow, we say that one of the principal designs of God was, when he made man, that he should yield holy obedience to the will of his Maker; or, in other words, that he should live without sin. If the intention of the Almighty may be understood from what he actually did, and from his direct commands, then the position we have taken is unquestionable; for if made man pure, and commanded him to remain so.

From this fact, and from another, no less indisputable—namely, that he did sin, and by that act became unholy, and that, until entirely renovated by divine grace, he continues to sin—we are led to this conclusion: that man is now in an imperfect state; and from this conclusion another as infallibly certain follows: that all who live to sin contravene the constitution of their nature, and thereby fail to accomplish the object of their being.

We have so far reasoned from the original purpose of God in giving man a being. Now if it be equally clear that the design of God in redemption was that man should be holy—and of this who can entertain the smallest doubt?—by emancipating from the thraldom of sin, and restoring him to the image of his God, we shall arrive at the same result by proving that man, under the gospel, may yet be perfect. This was the very end for which Christ came into the world—suffered, died and rose—and is demonstrable from the most express declaration of holy writ: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." "That he would grant unto us, that we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life." The above are but a little of the passages that might be quoted in proof of the fact that the atonement saves to the uttermost all that come unto God by him, and that they are saved from all iniquity. All the works of the devil in their hearts are destroyed, and being washed in the blood of the Lamb, are perfectly pure, and the man is now perfectly qualified to perfectly love and perfectly obey God. Now if this gracious design is accomplished in any one, that individual is perfect, and it would be shocking impiety to say that the very object for which the Son of God came into the world is never accomplished, merely on account of the inveteracy of the disease he came to cure, or the stubbornness of the heart he came to change and purify, and impeach both his goodness and power by saying that the whole scheme of redemption failed for want of power on the part of its blessed Author to carry it into complete effect. All of God's works are perfect. When he justifies or regenerates the sinner the work is perfect, and then man is qualified to obey God perfectly, and therefore may be denominated perfect.

Now comes a question of great importance: Can this perfectly justified, regenerated and sanctified soul, by a life of perfect obedience, maintain its relation unbroken with God? If so, then Christian perfection is attainable now; and this I shall endeavor to show in my next.

ATLANTA, Louisiana.

Alabama Conference Female College.

According to appointment and invitation as a member of the visiting committee, we were at our post during all the commencement exercises of the Alabama Conference Female College, at Tuskegee, Ala., June 16-19. With the honors of a most cordial reception, we may truly say, as a son and brother, we were made a happy member, during our stay there, of the good and polite family residing in that grand scholastic palace. Therefore what we have to say is not the result of enchantment lent by distant view, but a voice from within, of one who has "walked about this stronghold of Mount Zion," and acquainted with curious eye the several nooks from the deep basement, where the base inclinations and foul impulses of the inner man, and the groans of burdened tables reciprocate sweet satiety, to the lofty dome, where a "panorama" of art and nature, bounded only by the distant meeting and blending of the green earth and blue heavens, feasts man's higher capacities on scenes of the beautiful and the sublime. We have "told the towers thereof, marked well her bulwarks, and considered her palaces," that we might "tell it to this generation;" for, in answer to our inquiry at first, we were informed by the master of ceremonies there that our duty was "to take notice of everything, and to go away and tell it." With this instruction as our charge, we took the catalogue of 1877-78, as the case to be tried, and, after considering an abundance of the very best testimony, we are prepared to report in confirmation of the statements in that paper. We are satisfied that all the specifications are true. There is nothing in the catalogue that is not in the school—a very peculiar and praiseworthy circumstance. We recommend and insist that all who have daughters should read this catalogue. If you have not seen it, send to the president, Prof. Massey, at once and get it. New ones will soon be out.

The board of trustees will perhaps soon publish a report on the financial condition and management of the institution, in which it will be seen that the college is out of debt, self-supporting, prosperous and permanent.

The faculty possess every element of competency and success. We congratulate the church on its good fortune in having this essential interest in such worthy and able hands. The president possesses the rare combination of superior scholarship and business capacity. While he gives all necessary diligence to teaching, and reproduces a high order of education in his pupils, he lives well and keeps out of debt, and thus demonstrates both capacity and character, which command for his school the respect, confidence and patronage of the public.

For many reasons, which we will not now mention, we are persuaded that God calls and qualifies men to teach his schools. For all these reasons we believe that Brother Massey is this a man come from God. He, with his teachers, belongs to that small number of teachers for whom, as such, we have any regret; for they are not only learned, but wise. The value of this institution to the world, and especially to the church, is incalculably great; and if we, who make loud professions of appreciation and preference for such education as it offers, do not sustain it, we must own our insincerity and cease to hope for prosperity again. This college enjoys many local advantages and attractions. It is accessible by railroad, and the distances to the different parts of the State are justly divided. Tuskegee is the commercial center of a densely populated, fertile, wealthy and prosperous region. It lives upon its own resources, and not upon the college students, at exorbitant charges. The climate is temperate and salubrious, as will appear from the fact that there was no need of a physician in the college during the whole of last session. Through the industry and economy of the president, an abundance and variety of wholesome food—vegetables, fruits and meats—is produced on the college lot. All the comforts, attractions and safety of a well-provided home are there, and the school constitutes a lovely, happy and contented family, in itself ignorant of and shut out from all outside, except in cases of a few well-guarded and prudent privileges. The citizens are refined and intelligent, religious, and friendly to the school, identifying themselves with its interests. There are churches of the different persuasions, and their spiritual status is good, commanding respect and confidence toward the church, and exercising a conservative and progressive influence upon the community.

We entreat all who read this article to turn their attention to the consideration of the merits of this institution, and satisfy themselves that so great benefits can be secured to their daughters nowhere else, and at the same cost.

Send for a catalogue if you fail to get one without sending.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.

MR. EDITOR: It was my privilege to visit Port Gibson Collegiate Academy twice during the last session, and spend several days on each visit—first in January, when it was in full working order, and again during the closing exercises of the session. The building, though not finished, is sufficiently commodious, and the rooms are large and well ventilated. The grounds are beautiful, water good, and the location healthy; and it is a fact easily observed that the pupils are all pleased, contented and happy. This is easily accounted for. The moment you enter the college you feel as if you were in the midst of a well-regulated family, where love presides. There is but one rule for the government of the college, and that is: "Do right." With Brother Jones presiding in the chapel, and that truly "elect lady," his wife, at the table, Miss M. Jones at the head of the literary, and Miss Hopkins of the music department, each pupil seems to strive, in the spirit of a laudable rivalry, to keep that one rule best. I feel fully justified in saying that they are watched over with the kindest parental solicitude, and are in safe hands.

The examination was an honest one, and gave evidence of faithfulness both on the part of the teachers and pupils. The musical entertainment, under the direction of Miss Hopkins, was highly creditable. The essays, recitations, etc., of the young ladies were unexceptionally good. On Wednesday we were favored with an excellent address on education, by Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, in which his utterances gave no uncertain sound touching the vital issues of the day. This was followed by an address from the writer on the "Moral and Religious Influence of Woman on Society." The whole was closed with an appropriate and happy address by Rev. E. H. Monnger, on delivering medals to two young ladies who had distinguished themselves during the session. Though this institution has suffered from the larpecuniosity that has pressed so heavily on every Southern enterprise, it is gradually growing in public favor and deserves increased patronage. Our people, especially from a section whence it has a right to expect patronage, should rally to its support. Here they will find a healthy location, good society, and thorough teaching, where strong church influences prevail. Here the strictest economy in dress, compatible with neatness, is practiced, and all superfluity and needless extravagance discouraged.

UNION SPRINGS DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The Union Springs District Conference, Alabama Conference, was held at Union Springs, commencing July 18, 1878, O. R. Blue presiding. The spiritual condition of the church was reported to be much better than at the last District Conference. In some charges the church is growing rapidly, even in the absence of that wonderful means of grace, class meeting. Quite a number of prayer meetings well attended; others poorly attended, which clearly exhibits a sad want of religious zeal. The financial interest is decidedly in advance of last year. The assessment plan seems to be the most popular, as also the most successful, for raising money for the support of the gospel. Other plans were suggested. The Sabbath school reports were a considerable improvement over last year, the majority of them being our own literature. I must not fail to mention two remarkable Sabbath schools on the district, one of which has in it all of the children of the church, the other having in it all the children of the church save one. One other school was reported as having all the members of the church in the Sabbath school. From the various Sabbath school reports it was very clear that the only reason why our Sabbath schools are not a success is a failure on the part of the parents to co-operate with the superintendents and teachers. There is some interest manifested on the parsonage subject, and a probability of two or three new parsonages during this year. The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It is very evident, from the reports that have come from different parts of the work, especially where our District Conferences have been held, that our District Conferences are proving to be a great means of grace, resulting in advancing the spiritual interests of the church; And whereas, The non-attendance, on the part of some of our preachers, is calculated, to a great extent, to weaken its efficacy, as well as produce a carelessness on the part of lay delegates to attend the District Conference; therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sense of this District Conference that hereafter our beloved preachers use all possible means to avoid clashing their protracted services with the District Conference, and make it a point to be in attendance, as also to urge a prompt and full attendance on the part of lay delegates.

Resolved, That in the event the preacher in charge fails, from sickness or some other providential cause, to attend the District Conference, said preacher be requested to send up a written report, formal, full and explicit, stating all the facts under their respective heads.

The following were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference: E. B. Wilkerson, J. B. Stanly, J. R. Rogers and E. C. Henry. Alternates—F. Law, William Gilmer, J. A. Giddens and I. H. Park. Our next District Conference is to be held at Fort Deposit, on the Mobile and Montgomery railroad.

Holiness Meetings.

MR. EDITOR: On the twenty-eighth of June, 1878, there was a meeting commenced for the promotion of Christian holiness at Atlanta, La., on the Montgomery circuit, Louisiana Annual Conference. There were people in attendance from various parts of the Alexandria district professing entire sanctification—preachers and laymen and women. Our first service was a prayer meeting, and we had only one or two regular sermons during the meeting. The services were exhortations, and pointed experience, related by men and women, and the result was a powerful baptism of the Holy Ghost. Sinners sought pardon and peace through faith in Christ's blood, and those who had been pardoned sought pure hearts through faith in the same precious fountain.

The gracious and blessed state of regeneration was not lowered or ignored, and those who had been before and those who were converted at the meeting were exhorted to go on to seek and enjoy, as a special grace, perfect love. Several of them did so, there being eight or ten professing regeneration and twenty in the sanctification. Those who were in the enjoyment of holiness were baptized with greater power to live and work for Christ. Nine were added to the church. Similar meetings were appointed: God willing, to be held at Holloway's Prairie, to commence on Friday, July 19, 1878, to include the third Sunday; and at Columbia, La., to commence on Friday, the ninth of August, to include the second Sunday.

I am your brother in Christ,

A BIT OF ENGLISH ROMANCE.—Once upon a time, many years ago, there was an Indian prince who visited these shores in search of adventures. Among others he made the acquaintance of an English lady, to whom he became devoted. At last he was forced to leave for his native land, and on parting—like other princes in fairy stories—he gave his "only friend" a ring, saying: "Whatever the bearer of this bids me do I will do." Years rolled on, and the ring lay unused in the lady's jewel-box until the Indian mutiny broke out. And then the aforesaid Indian potentate having joined the rebels, it became a matter of great moment to the English government of the day to recover his allegiance. Somehow the romantic story of the gift of the ring leaked out, and a cabinet minister (or was this wonderful tale set afloat in a great hurry from Downing street to seek our heroine's residence in Grosvenor square, let us say. The ring was obtained, the promise was kept, and the English troops saved at a most critical juncture. Now it is said, the lady by whose means this desirable conversion was brought about obtains the new order of the Crown of India as her reward.

If we have grace whereby we can live near to God, as we think, one day in the week, we should be glad; but should we be satisfied without at least trying to live equally near to God on all the other days?

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient, if, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. MARY MORRIS was born in Jasper county, Ga., October 7, 1800, and died in Butler county, Ala., April 7, 1878. Her maiden name was Kendall, daughter of Isaac Kendall. She was twice married—first to a Mr. Sessions, by whom she had four children. Her second husband was Isham Morris, and she bore him eight children. All these children, by both marriages, lived to be grown before any of them died, and the youngest attained to the age of thirty-one years before the mother's death.

W. SHOWS.

MRS. H. L. JOHNSTON, wife of Rev. P. A. Johnston, of the Mississippi Conference, and daughter of A. H. and M. M. Sistare, died in Greenville, April 11, 1878. She was born January 15, 1844, and was thus called home on earth at the early age of thirty-three. During the year 1860 she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and to the present closing of her beautiful life was a Christian of pure and heavenly type. On the twelfth of July, 1865, she married the Rev. P. A. Johnston, whose heart is now crushed and bereaved of one of its most sacred love. As a wife she was faithful to all wifely duties. The frequent changes consequent upon a Methodist itinerant preacher's life never provoked murmur or opposition. She was happiest when her husband was doing heaviest service for the Master. She shared the joys of his successes, and he with tenderest sympathy all his discouragements and disappointments. Whether by land or sea she went up to pray. In her home she presided with cheerful contentment. Five children are left without a mother's love and watchful care. Of late she had the Christian's profoundest solicitude. As the loss of their little physician was one also thoughtful and watchful of their moral and spiritual training. That thing might grow up the children of the church, polished after the similitude of a palace, was her constant care and earnest prayer.

As a Christian she was characterized by a quiet beauty of faith and sweet serenity of spirit. Her trust was unwavering to the last. Her experience was vivid, and her spiritual life progressive, constantly growing, going on to perfection. For every one, high and low, she had a kind word and a cheerful smile. As an example of Christian charity and sympathy she is worthy of all emulation. Though fixed in her opinions, and firm in her advocacy of the highest standard of moral conduct, she was never harsh in her judgments. She was singularly free from all cussing and criticising the frailties and follies of others. Wherever known, she was affectionately esteemed, and, when the sad news of her death is heard, will be greatly lamented. At camp-meetings, where her hospitality was unbounded, she will miss the happy Christian face.

Her death was a fitting close to a noble life—the golden setting of a glorious day. The waters were neither bitter nor chilly. She passed over in triumph, welcomed by the songs of the redeemed, and is set down upon a throne of light. Dear ones were escorted to meet her in the [illegible] bright forever. ANATOMY.

BY WM. ALLEN BRYANT.

[illegible]

A Visit from Dr. Gervase Smith.

Rev. Gervase Smith, D. D., ex-president of the British Wesleyan Methodist Conference, spent last week in this city, New York, and on Saturday left by the City of Berlin for England. On reaching home he will have completed, with Mrs. Smith, his constant companion in travel, a tour "round the world," which nearly a year ago, under appointment from his Conference, on an official visit to the Wesleyan churches and Conferences of Australasia, surveying thither by way of the Suez Canal and the Indian Ocean. After a thorough visitation of the various departments of the Australian work, including that of the Fiji Islands, he returned by way of the Pacific Ocean, San Francisco, and the Pacific Railway, and New York, having spent nearly a year in interesting tours.

We need not say that Dr. Smith was everywhere most cordially welcomed, and, owing as he himself is wont to say, to the influence of the British Conference rather than to the qualities of the first preacher who was sent forward with singing and shouting, to prepare the way and open the door for the ministry to enter, the gospel has spread through the length and breadth of the land, and the grandeur of their magnificent cathedrals, the beauty of their churches and parsonages, and the liberality of the missionary contributions, are the result of the labors of the early Methodist preachers. They then retired, making room for the next school and the next class, of seven or eight times as many lessons in reading, in history, and another in religion.

The scene was intensely exciting. The young Fijians appeared at their best. Many of them had nibbed themselves with cocoanut oil to such an extent that, under the brilliant sun, they appeared very shining characters. The girls were clad in every variety of style. Some were decked with flowers and scented evergreens, others were content with more quiet attire, while a few, clothed in rich native cloths, were dressed with exquisite taste. A large number of offerings were brought by the teachers and children, and presented to Dr. Smith as the British representative. He counted among the gifts eight chickens, a hundred yams, and many sugar-canes. It became a serious question what he should do with some of the presents. At last a thought struck him: that, as the native preacher was to be married that afternoon, they might be given to him toward his wedding breakfast. Dr. Smith pleasantly says he hopes his "Conference will sanction that appropriation." Before the exercises closed Dr. Smith gave an address, and the whole assembly sang heartily the national anthem, "God Save the Queen."

Before leaving Fiji Dr. Smith had an interview with the English Governor, at the special request of the latter, who wished to say a few things to him before his return to England. First, he desired to assure him, in the strongest terms, of his sense of the worth to Fiji of the Wesleyan missions. Secondly, to state his conviction of the prudence and sagacity of the Wesleyan Missionary Society in not forcing upon the natives a change in their harmless customs, such as dress, sitting at worship, etc. He believed that this liberty had been most wise and beneficial. Thirdly, he desired to say how much he admired the character and work of the British Wesleyan missionaries, and that he had confidence in their ability and integrity. He wished, at the same time, to intimate that, as time wore on and the government of the colony developed, care would be required on the part of the missionaries and assistant missionaries to prevent clashing between the colonial and church authorities.—New York Christian Advocate.

Nazareth.

FROM HANNA'S LIFE OF CHRIST.

After a description of the eastern part of the plain of Esdraelon, passing northward past Mount Gilboa and Jezreel, by Shunem, and over Little Hermon and through the village of Nain, Dr. Hanna makes the following description of Nazareth:

The third plain passed, a steep ascent carried us to the summit of that range of hills which forms the north-eastern boundary of the plain of Esdraelon. Descending, we came upon a circular, basin-shaped depression, girdled all around by a dozen or more swelling hill-tops, that rise from three to four hundred feet above the valley they inclose. Near to the foot of the highest of these surrounding hills, nestled in a secluded upland hollow, lies the village of Nazareth. No village in Palestine is like what it was in the days of Jesus Christ, and none more fitting to have been his residence during the greater part of his life on earth. The seclusion is perfect—greater than that of Bethany, which, on one side looks out openly on the country that stretches away to the shore of the Dead Sea. Nazareth is closed in on every side, offering to us an emblem of the seclusion of those thirty years which were passed there so quietly. Pure hill breezes play over the village and temper the summer heat. The soil around is rich, and yields the fairest flowers and richest fruits of Palestine. You seem shut out from the world, and yet you have but to climb a few hundred feet to the top of the overlooking hill, and one of the widest, finest prospects in all the Holy Land bursts upon your view. Away in the west a sparkling light plays upon the waters of the Mediterranean, revealing a portion of the great sea that formed the highway to the isles of the Gentiles. The ridge of Carmel runs out into the waters closing the bold promontory on the top of which Elijah stood and discomfited the prophets of Baal. Southward, below your feet, stretches the great battle plain of Palestine, behind which rises the hilly district of Samaria, through the opening between which and the mountains of Gilboa the eye wanders away eastward across the whole breadth of the Holy Land till it rests upon that range, the everlasting eastern background of every Syrian prospect—the mountain range of Bashan and Gilead and Moab. Turning northward, the whole hill country of Galilee lies spread out before us, the Sea of Gennesaret hidden, but a glimpse of Safed obtained, the city set upon a hill, above and beyond which there rise the snowy heights of Hermon, called by the Arabs the Shelkh of the Mountains.

Up to the hill-top, which commands this magnificent prospect, how often in childhood, youth and early manhood must Jesus have ascended to gaze—who shall tell us with what thoughts!—upon the chosen scenes of his earthly ministry, and upon that sea over whose waters the glad tidings of salvation were to be borne to so many lands. It pleases us to think that so many years of our Lord's life were spent in such a home as that which Nazareth supplied—one so tented, so rich in natural beauty, with glimpses of the wide world around for the morning or evening hours.

THE LARGEST WORKSHOP IN THE WORLD.—We have received the annual report of the establishment of Krupp, of Essen, Germany, just published, and translate an extract, which is a valuable addition to what we have before communicated to our readers respecting this famous workshop. The manufacture of cast steel and rolled steel alone employs 2,938 men, and 509 men. It turns out daily 14 miles of rails, with a corresponding amount of wheels, springs, axles, and all the complete materials for the railroad carriages. This is Krupp's contribution to the arts of peace; what he does for the art of war is shown by the fact that he completes 30 large cannon every month, and since 1847 he has turned out over 1,000 cannon. The establishment is lighted up every night with 2,000 gas burners; its different parts are connected with 37 miles of railway, employing 21 locomotives and 500 cars, while the various offices are connected by 61 telegraph stations. In the mineral works and coal mines outside, belonging to the firm, they employ 5,300 workmen; for the forges, 700 workmen; they have built 3,277 dwelling-houses, which are occupied by the workmen and their families, which number 16,000 persons, and form a small town, with 22 stores for groceries, meat, clothes, shoes, furniture, and similar daily needs. Messrs. Krupp have provided for the education of the children of their workmen by 4 primary schools, divided into 21 classes, an industrial school for girls, and a school for adult women, all attended by thousands of learners, and provided with the best kind of teachers, who, according to the German system, teach the things to be known and understood, and not merely lessons from books.—Manufacturer and Builder.

When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful Creator, and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying.—Jeremy Taylor.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Bombay Guardian says that there are now 116 lady missionaries in India, not including missionaries' wives.

—Miss Whately's mission at Cairo employs a head native missionary, six male and six female teachers, and a Bible-woman. There are 150 boys and 130 girls in her schools.

—Buddhism is said to be rapidly declining in Japan. In a single district or ken, 71 temples have since 1873 been converted into dwelling-houses or used for other secular purposes. During the last six years upward of 600 temples have thus been diverted from their orighal object.

—The Moravian announces the death, at Bertheldorf, June 19, of Bishop Ernst Frederick Reichel, in the seventy-second year of his life. This is the third bishop of that church who has been called recently from labor to reward. Bishop Reichel served the church for over fifty years, and for twenty-eight years as bishop.

—Bishop Merrill has been holding the annual meeting of the Methodist mission in the city of Mexico. Twenty-six preachers were present. The Bishop called upon President Diaz, who expressed the belief that freedom of worship was essential to true religion, and he thought competition among churches was as salutary as competition in politics or trade.

—Efforts are making to resist the establishment of the Roman Catholic hierarchy in Scotland. A conference of Protestant delegates met recently in Edinburg and took measures for a vigorous agitation of the country. Arrangements are made for public meetings in all the principal Scotch cities. One Scotchman has subscribed £5,000 to a fund which is to be raised to defray the expenses of a legal resistance.

—A missionary at Osaka writes that a year ago a huge preaching-place was built close to the mission chapel, with the avowed purpose of preaching down the "Jesus" religion. For a time it was thronged day and night by hundreds of Japanese. After awhile the interest subsided and the building was offered to the missionary as a place of Christian worship. The offer was declined, and the long-closed edifice has now been torn down.

—After two years of untiring and careful search, the successor of the Dahi Lama, the Pope of Buddhism, has been discovered and crowned. The Grand Lama, who resides at Lhasa, Tibet, died two years ago, and it devolved on a Council of Lamas to ascertain on whom the spirit of the Dalai had passed and to crown him. The sessions of the council are secret, and the manner of making a selection is shrouded in mystery. The choice, it is known, has fallen on a child, as is usually the case, who becomes the potent ruler of some millions of people.

—The Bible Christians of Canada, a Methodist body closely resembling the Primitive Methodists, have been holding their twenty-fourth Annual Conference at Mitchell. The Rev. J. J. Rice was chosen president. The business of the Conference, according to the English custom, had been prepared by committees. The stationing of the preachers is also done by committee. It appears from the list of appointments that there are 9 districts, each of which has a superintendent and secretary, and 50 stations. Of the districts, 2 the Wisconsin and the Cleveland, are in the United States. The statistical report showed that there are 7,714 members, a decrease of 49 during the year. The church property is valued at $125,000. The missionary secretary reported 38 ministers and 2,807 members in connection with that department, and receipts of $18,221. Correspondence is kept up with the body in England, which is about four times as large as the Canada church.

—The name Amish or Omish quite frequently appears on the press of the country; but few who see it know much about it, except that it belongs to a religious body of German origin, whose members wear hooks on their clothes, instead of buttons, and hence are often called "Hookers." The Amish, who number only about ten thousand, in the United States and Canada, meet annually in Conference, which is their most important ecclesiastical event. They are a branch of the Mennonites, originating in Germany, and derive their name from Jacob Amen, a rigid Mennonite preacher of the seventeenth century, though it was first applied to them in this country. The Amish adhere to the Mennonite Confession of Faith, and differ but little from the regular Mennonites. The Amish Conference this year was held in or near Eureka, Ill., in June. On the first day some four hundred or five hundred people met together in a chapel which is four miles from any town, or rather in a large shed, for the church proper was occupied by women and babies. As there are many Amish families in the surrounding country, the delegates from a distance were taken to and from the place of meeting morning and night by the farmers who became their hosts. This was their sixteenth Annual Conference, and it continued in session four days. Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather and the almost impassable roads, the attendance was good. The meeting-house being too small to accommodate the people, a large shed, covered with fencing boards, was erected at one side; and in the center of this was a platform, occupied by the preachers and a few of the elder and elect ladies. The listeners were carefully separated. The women and girls, with heads covered by tidy black silk caps or stiffly starched sunbonnets none of them wear hats, meekly and modestly looked up to the preacher from the rough board seats on one side of the platform; while the men and boys, with coats and vests fastened with hooks and eyes, occupied the seats on the other side, and with honest and attentive faces gave heed to the spoken word.—Independent.

SEEING THE WORLD.

John Leap Frog sighed to see the world.
"They never are in luck
Who spend their lives in a single pond,"
Piped Jack Johnnie, with a croak.

So he sailed away in a mushroom boat
And soon was lost to view;
But what awaited him, out in the world,
John Leap Frog little knew.

Yet only a day, and back he comes,
Racing with all his might
Back to the dreggie home he had left,
Panting and pale with fright.

For what do you think? A dragon fly
They brought him for his meal!
A dish of [illegible] he digressed!
"How ever I made him feel!

"I've lost my appetite," he gasped,
And crouched in sudden pain.
"I've had enough of seeing the world.
Guess I'll go home again."

And when at last he reached the pond
He cried: "Now I'm in luck
And flinging his hind legs high in the air
Quite jumping Leap Frog [illegible]

Meaning of Names.

The evening shadows were lengthening on the hills, and the air began to grow cool and balmy, and the tired children gathered in a group under the great walnut-tree, where Mrs. Hope sat at her work watching their sports, with the pleasant smile that made them all love her so dearly.

"Where is Patience Rose?" asked Mrs. Hope. "I do not see her among you."

"Mamma," said Emma, "she is seeking for Johnnie Irving under all the haycocks in the little corner meadow; and while she was at the other end, we have got Johnnie away, and here he is beside me, so she will hunt in vain. But I know she will not give up till she has tried every one of the haycocks, for she has patience enough for anything."

"Patient by name and patience by nature," said her mother, smiling.

"Did Patience Rose's mamma call her Patience because she knew she would be patient little girls?" asked Amy Leigh, who was only seven years old. The children laughed.

"How could her mother know what sort of a child she would be," said Gertrude Scott, "but I only wish I was half as patient as she is; mamma is always telling me of being hasty and careless."

"Your name seems hasty, perhaps," suggested her brother Frank, a merry boy of twelve; "if names really do mean anything."

"No, my dear; you are wrong there," said Mrs. Hope. "Your sister's name means 'Truth,' a beautiful and noble name. I trust it will be her aim to deserve it, and live up to its meaning through life."

"Oh, mamma, can you tell the meaning of names, really?" cried Emma, eagerly; "and will you tell us all ours? Do, dear mamma, please!" And here comes Patience—ah! she has caught sight of Johnnie, and is shaking her finger at him. Come, Patience darling, the game is up now, and mamma is going to tell us the meanings of all our names; won't it be nice?" and Emma made room for her little friend on the grass beside her, with a kiss and a hug, and gave a droll little imperative nod for the rest to listen.

"Mamma, may mine be the next?" she asked.

"Your name is a very old Saxon one, dear, and means 'a nurse.'"

"Oh, how odd," cried the little ones.

"I like the meaning," went on Mrs. Hope; "it sounds so helpful and womanly, and full of the sweet power to soothe and comfort in weakness or pain. I hope my Emma will gladly take up that blessed duty, if it should come to her in after-life, as it does to most of us sooner or later."

"That is pretty, mamma; and now for wee Johnnie. What can his name mean, I wonder?"

"John and Jane also," said Mrs. Hope, "have a very lovely meaning. Your names, little brother and sister, in this happy group," pointing to Johnnie Irving and his twin sister, "your names are one, and mean 'the grace of God.' A blessed thing for you, dear little ones, if that divine grace abide with you, on your way through this world, unto the life eternal. Pray God it may be so with us all." The children looked thoughtful, and kept silence for a little.

"Has my name any meaning, ma'ma?" asked Sarah Gwynne, a gentle girl about Emma's age.

"Surely, my love; yours is a Bible name, and to most of these very significant meanings were attached, thus: Noah means 'comfort;' Isaac, 'laughter;' Naomi, 'pleasant;' Mara, 'bitterness;' and Samuel, 'asked of God;' Peter, 'a rock' or stone; Barnabas, 'the son of consolation,' and many others. Your name of Sarah means 'a princess.'"

"Oh, how grand!" cried Emma.

"Now, Sarah, you will feel quite proud, as if you were a king's daughter. Princesses are king's daughters, are they not, mamma?"

"The king's daughter is all glorious within," said Mrs. Hope, softly. "There is a royalty which all may share by God's good grace. I trust dear Sarah will try and cultivate those royal graces which make our poor nature truly noble and lovely in the sight of God—Faith, Truth, Purity, Meekness, Charity."

"Who can find a meaning to my name?" asked Frank, presently.

"That is very easy, my dear boy. It is from the German, like your sister's, and means just what it says; frankness, ingenuousness, bold simplicity. I think it is a pleasant name to bear; one could not, even in fancy, associate fraud or deceit of any sort with the honest name of Frank."

Frank blushed a little at these words, and then looked rather grave. I do not know what he was thinking about, but I think some wholesome, though humbling, thoughts were passing through his mind.

"Now, Amy Leigh," said Gertrude, stroking back the soft curls from a very fair, winsome little face and nestled her shoulder.

"That, too, is easy to guess," said Mrs. Hope, with a smile. "Any tolerable boy or girl, as well as many a little Patience, can read for itself, like 'Mercy,' 'Comfort,' 'Charity,' and many others, derived from our Puritan ancestors, who loved these quaint, expressive names. And now, dears," Mrs. Hope went on more gravely, "let us think of one name more, the name above all others, even our dear Savior's, who was called 'Jesus,' because he came to save his people from their sins. Ah, my children, a little matters if our earthly names are sweet of sound, or noble of meaning, if only they are written in the Book of Life above! Pray, each of you, to that dear Lord to write and keep yours there. He is the Good Shepherd, who knows his sheep by their names, and hearkens with loving ear to the cry of the feeblest little lamb in his fold. May his blessed name grow dearer to us all day by day, as long as we live. And now let us sing, before parting, that lovely hymn, 'How sweet the name of Jesus sounds.' You all know it well."

Then the children all stood up and sang softly and clearly, and their voices sounded very sweetly on the still evening air.

The silver stars were peeping in the sky, and the twilight was gathering peacefully after the long, bright summer day. And so the little party kissed and wished each other good night, and the birthday treat was over.

How Sunnyhair Went Fishing.

Sunnyhair had been out for an hour with her butterfly-net after the butterflies, but had caught none. She wondered what had become of them all. There were hundreds of the bright things flitting about in the sunshine only yesterday. Looking up and around her, she saw that the sky was white with clouds; there was no sunshine, and, of course, no butterflies. They must have flown away with yesterday's sun.

Running into the house, she exclaimed: "This is not the right kind of a day to go fishing, and I must go."

So her hat was tied over the soft fluffy locks, and with her small fishing-rod over her shoulder off she went, with a faraway neighbor's child to keep her company.

They had a basket containing their luncheon, and they walked along over the green fields, with the sweet country air blowing the red into their cheeks, till they reached just the right spot, a mossy bank under big trees, on the edge of a pretty brook. The water was so clear that the children could see the bright pebbles on the bottom in many places.

They were not fishing just for the sake of it, for they were getting their breakfast for the next day, these two small people.

Perhaps you exclaim: "As if such a midget as she could catch any real fish." Well, you should have seen her when she came home, tugging three big ones, the smallest fourteen inches long and the largest seventeen inches.

We looked at them and at her in amazement. She tossed back her hair from her face, and, with a funny shake of her little head, said with a laugh: "This big one 'most pulled me into the brook; I had to tug and tug, but I got him at last, you see. I thought he'd get me though once."

What a queer little fishwoman she was, to be sure! and we shuddered to think: "What if she had gone into the brook!"

She never seems to meet with any serious accident, however. I sometimes think she is just the one of the fairy folk who slip through life unharmed by anything in earth, or air, or water.

She is not a fairy though; she is only our own dear baby, but she is guarded in all sorts of ways by a loving care that goes to make little, small as she is, and is kept from harm by day and by night.

What Mary Did.—Mary Lyon used to say that character grew. That is not something to fall on ready-made, with womanhood or manhood; but day by day, here a little and there a little, grows with the growth and strengthens with the strength until a girl or boy, it becomes almost a coat of mail. Look at a man of business, prompt, reliable, conscientious, yet clear-headed and energetic. When do you suppose he developed all these admirable qualities? When he was a boy.

Let us see the way in which a boy of ten years gets up in the morning, works, plays, studies, and we will tell you just what kind of a man he will make. The boy who is late at breakfast, and late at school, stands a poor chance to be a prompt man. The boy who neglects his duties, be they ever so small, and then excuses himself by saying, "I forgot" "I didn't think!" will never be a reliable man. And the boy who finds pleasure in the suffering of weaker things will never be a noble, generous, kindly man—a gentleman.

An uncle recently found his nephew playing the violin, and the following dialogue took place: "I fear, nephew, you lose a great deal of time with this fiddling." "Sir, I endeavor to keep time." "Your object, rather, to kill time?" "No, I only beat time."

Priest—Well, Pat, and what did the landlord say to ye about the farm? Pat—Shure, yer Riverence, he told me I could have immediate possession in six months time."

A pretty girl once said to Leigh Hunt: "I am very sad, sir, to see you here." Whereupon, he replied: "Oh, no! you belong to the other Jewish sect: you are very fair, I see."

How the Blood of Christ Cleanses.

Let us remember that the blood of Christ usually stands for his death. "Being now justified by his blood," may be explained: Having now received pardon through faith in his death as an atoning sacrifice. Christ died for us. He, as our substitute, died for us. "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." The statement, at least, is clear that the death of Christ was such a vindication of the divine justice, and such an exhibition of the righteousness of God, that sin could be forgiven consistently with the authority and maintenance of the universal government. With the exact extent and amount of the sufferings of Christ we have no further concern than this: that they were such as to satisfy the demand, and to make the sinner's pardon, on the condition of faith, possible. Besides its end as a judicial expedient, the moral effect of the death of Christ, as manifesting the love of God, was contemplated. On the minds of angels and of men nothing else could so impress the wonderful tenderness and compassion of God. By the love exhibited in the death of Christ for sinners all men are drawn most powerfully, and the heavenly intelligences by it are filled with surprise and adoration.

Faith in Christ's death as the atonement for sin is the condition of forgiveness, and it is because of this death that the Holy Spirit is given and the heart is regenerated at the same time. The vicarious death of Christ is a satisfactory provision to the divine wisdom and holiness; but in order to secure its benefits the faith of the sinner is required. He must believe this specific thing: that Christ died for him, and that upon this ground only God forgives his sins. The sum of it is: "Who loved me and gave himself for me." To believe in the Lord Jesus Christ is to believe these special declarations: "Who bore our sins in his own body on the tree;" "that he, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man." To say that the blood cleanses is to say that Christ has been "set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood." The death of Christ is the meritorious cause, and faith in that death the condition of salvation. The provisions of salvation must be accepted by us, and they are accepted in the act of faith.

There is no more mystery in all this than there is in anything else with which we have to do. The principles of redemption are as lucid and comprehensible as are the principles of human government, or those which control the relations between man and man, and the plan itself could not be more clearly stated. Christ washes us from our sins in his own blood when we believe in him as an atoning sacrifice. There is something figurative in the expression, but nothing that is either mystical or mysterious. Forgiveness is through faith in the blood—in the death of Christ—but the inward purification is wrought by the Holy Spirit. And yet the cleansing is ascribed to the blood, because it is through Christ that the regenerating and sanctifying spirit is given. We are complete in Christ—pardon, regeneration and the maturest sanctification are all through him, although the last are wrought in us by the Spirit. There may be something inexplicable in the work of the Spirit in the heart, but there is no mystery in the connection between the blood and the gracious operations which faith in the blood secures. And as to the mystery of spiritual operations and of the supernatural in general, it is really no greater than the mystery that inheres in the remote causes and real essence of everything in the world.

We are yielding too much when we concede that we do not know how the blood of Christ cleanses, and that the atonement is inexplicable. This is the cant of the world, and the refrain of infidelity. It is also the theme of the broad and so-called liberal school. It is a fault of the modern preaching that doctrinal statements in reference to the plan of redemption, the atonement and faith are not more common. In the attempt to please and entertain, the people are left in ignorance of the vital truths. Vague notions there are that a great mystery lies behind the more superficial and obvious teachings of repentance and morality. If a man takes Christ it is enough; but how he is to take Christ, and what he is to take him for, are not explained. We tell sinners to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and they may still be ignorant of what they are to believe. They still do not know precisely what they are to believe. We may talk of the blood in an indefinite way, and we may tell men that it cleanses, but the penitent inquirer is left in the dark. How does it cleanse? what is its relation to all the plan of redemption? and how is the cleansing to be secured? are pertinent and vital questions. Less of random allusions, and more definite, accurate and scriptural statements of the plan of salvation are needed. Paul explained the atonement and reasoned about it as one who felt that it could be understood, and that it must be sharply apprehended if men would be saved by it.

The Solution.

The labor problem seems to admit of but one solution. There are millions and millions of acres of unoccupied land in the United States. The necessaries of life can be produced from the soil. If the unemployed in the older sections and in the large cities can be transferred to the country, and put to cultivating the ground, they can live in comparative comfort. This abundance of land, cheap and accessible, is the real safety-valve. The European nations have found relief in emigration. Their surplus population has been and is being distributed upon nearly every island and continent in the world.

There is an indisposition on the part of the masses of laboring people, mechanics and artisans to leave the great centers, and to change their pursuits and habits of life. Nothing but stern necessity will move them. The world may owe them a living, but when they find that they can get it only by the field, they will go thither to seek it. The lack of means to move is in the way of thousands. They are ignorant of agriculture, of the country, and they have nothing with which to make a beginning. Philanthropists, political economists and capitalists would do well to turn their attention to this subject, and endeavor to devise plans by which the unemployed can be placed upon the uncultivated lands.

The use of labor-saving machinery has not only thrown the people out of employment in the manufacturing districts, but it has in most sections reduced the demand for agricultural laborers. The grain and hay of the North and West require not a tenth part of the labor that would be needed if sowers, reapers, binders, threshers and mowing machines were not in use. In the cultivation of our cotton no labor-saving implements have as yet been introduced. It is only in the separation of the lint from the seed by the use of the cotton gin, that machinery has come to the aid of the cotton-grower. We have heard old people tell of the time when this process was done by hand, and when, during the autumn and winter evenings, servants and children were kept busily at work in doing slowly and tediously, and on a very small scale, what the gin now accomplishes so rapidly and in such vast quantities. The human fingers, however, are the only implements that have thus far been found adapted to picking cotton. Every single boll that goes to make up the millions of bales produced yearly is gathered by hand. There have been improvements in the machinery of the sugar-house, but the labor of planting, cultivating and cutting cane is about the same as it was a hundred years ago. Implements for cultivating are, of course, much improved, and there is some saving of labor in this direction, but it is comparatively inconsiderable. In the culture of these Southern staples more laborers are needed by twenty-fold than in Northern and Western farming. And this demand is likely to increase with the improvement and adequate protection of our alluvial lands. These facts would seem to point to the South as the region where the most agricultural labor will be in demand, and where labor-saving inventions are least likely to come in competition with it.

The country, whether for people North or South, is the true refuge from enforced idleness and starvation, and from those commotions and riots which threaten to shake the foundations of society. There is as yet plenty of elbow-room in this country, and its capacity to sustain population has scarcely been touched. If the people will only expand, move out from the centers, and till the soil, there need be no straitness here for centuries to come. The land-owners and cultivators will be the rich and permanently prosperous people in this country within the lifetime of the young man of to-day. As between a profession, the hazards of commercial pursuits, or a trade, and a moderately good farm, we should choose the last. It is true there may be a temporary excess in agricultural products, but people can be housed, fed and clothed on the land they cultivate, with a very small expenditure of money. Farming at the very worst is better than riot, destitution and crime in the large cities.

This, so far as we can see, is the only solution of the great problem. The cities that are burdened with surplus population must distribute that surplus, and send it to the fields. There is to be no retrograde in the use of labor-saving machinery. When the limit of consumption is reached the idle operative must turn to something else. If the workshops, factories, and even the fields of the older sections have a surplus of labor, the ground is the last and best resource. It would be a mercy and a kindness to thousands and thousands of the people in the large cities if they could be thrust out of their pinched and unwholesome tenements, and set down somewhere in the open country, where cheap and productive lands are waiting to respond generously to the hand of industry.

After all the land on the earth is taken up and occupied, the end of the world may then come, and the problem will need no further study.

The New Orleans Depository.

We infer from inquiries and statements made in various quarters that there is considerable misunderstanding in reference to the New Orleans Depository.

1. The Depository building, No. 112 Camp street, is the property of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and is held by a board of nine trustees, appointed by the Conference. By the provisions of the act of incorporation the property was purchased and is held for the purposes of conducting therein a Methodist book depository, for the use of the NEW-ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and for such other purposes as the Conference may direct.

2. From soon after the purchase of the building a portion of it has been occupied by the agent of the Publishing House at Nashville in conducting the business of a depository. This business for the last twelve years has been in charge of an agent or employee appointed by and under the control, supervision and direction of the agent of the Publishing House at Nashville. Neither the trustees of the building, nor any other persons in New Orleans, except the agent who was appointed by the book agent, and who holds his power of attorney, has had anything to do, advisory or otherwise, with the business of the Depository. It has always been exclusively under the control and management of the book agent.

3. Some time during the latter part of June of this year the stock of the Depository was seized and sold by the sheriff. The stock was appraised at $20,000, and was sold for something less than $6,000—a sum probably not more than sufficient to meet one-fourth of the liabilities, and for the balance of which the Publishing House is liable.

4. We know not what action, if any, the book agent has taken, but we suppose the Depository here, as to the supply and sale of books, is closed. Mr. G. T. Lathrop, formerly book-keeper for Mr. Harp, bought the most of the Methodist books, and for the present occupies the first floor of the Depository building, and keeps our publications, general stationery and school-books on sale. This is his own private business, and the room which he occupies is rented from the trustees.

The Southern University, Greensboro, Ala.

The commencement at Greensboro this year was unusually interesting—so, at least, to the writer and many others whom he heard speaking of it.

There was a decided improvement in the appearance of the campus and buildings. The newly-graded walks and well-trimmed trees, and white fences and tall grass, and clover freed from every noxious weed, gave an aspect of freshness and life that made one feel pleasant as soon as he mounted the steps and looked at the imposing structure across the beautiful plane. On entering the building the effects of work and taste were evident there also in the freshly-whitewashed walls, and the newly-painted columns and seats. No spot from which the plaster had fallen, no charcoal sketch, not even a pencil-mark, was to be seen. The cost of this work, so important, had been paid by the faculty—a fact that manifests the interest they feel in everything pertaining to the culture of the young men committed to their training.

The sermon by Dr. McCarty, of the Alabama Conference, I did not hear, but learned, from those who did, that it was excellent, both in thought and style. Nor did I hear the declamation of the contestants for the sophomore prizes. On the delivery of the prizes, however, it was stated by Col. Reeves, to whom was assigned that pleasure, that the declamation was good.

The original speeches of the older students, on Monday night, Tuesday night and Wednesday, were very much to my liking, because they were rich enough in thought and in expression to show that the young men had been well taught and had studied hard, but were not so rich as to force one to believe that the young men had stolen from books, or (what is the same thing to them) had gotten somebody else to write them. Next to a stolen sermon, a stolen commencement speech or composition is the biggest theft in all the catalogue; and any school, male or female, that countenances such a fraud should be denounced as a school of ignorance and vice. Humbug is too mild a term to define such an institution. The college at Greensboro gives no encouragement to so vile a practice. It would be a disgrace.

The address of Maj. F. G. Ferguson, of Montgomery, the commencement orator, was thoughtful, strong and chaste, and was delivered with that peculiar grace and dignity so proper to such an occasion, but so seldom seen. I believe it satisfied every one.

Next came Rev. J. McCrews, of the Alabama Conference, the alumni orator, in a speech full of common sense, wit and pathos. He made us laugh and cry, and resolve to work and await results in uncomplaining patience.

After him Dr. L. M. Smith delivered the baccalaureate. This address was a masterly exposure of high-cut roads to diplomas of gradination and collegiate honors, and also a defense of the old method of college government by moral and religious principles, as against the method of military discipline, so much in favor at present. It was a brave speech, fearlessly spoken, and marked by some passages of great eloquence. And for one I was glad to hear those sentiments from that rostrum. The standard should be kept high, and honors, if they ought to be given to such as have worthily won them, should not be given to those who have not done so. Titles conferred on dignity command our admiration. Titles conferred on mediocrity compel our contempt, both for the colleges that ignorantly award them, and for the men who pusillanimously receive them. And as to the military system, all I have to say is that we may well fear for the future of the church and the country if the youth are to be educated under the club of the policeman and the bayonet of the soldier, rather than under the simple principles of the gospel of Christ. To put physical force in the place of religious truth here may—nay, does—charm some minds with its uniform pomp and parade; but the time will inevitably come when the evils of the system upon the characters of those thus trained will be seen in many ways.

The exercises closed with a pleasant reunion of the friends in the society halls at night.

The meetings of the trustees, in comparison with those we used to have when the horrible incubus of debt was upon us, were simply delightful. Thank the Lord, we have no longer any trouble on that score. The reports of the agent, Rev. W. I. Powers, contributed much, very much, to our delight. He has traveled much and reports the college growing in favor with the people. He has received $4,200 in cash and good subscriptions for endowment. There is no reason in sight why, if he has done this much up to the present, he may not run up to $10,000 by Conference. May it be so! It ought to be, certainly. He also reported the prospect and promise of quite an addition to the list of pupils next session, and that he had secured an excellent member of our church to take charge of the boarding hall, who will feed and lodge young men at $10 per month.

The college work will be resumed at its regular time—the first Monday of October—under the same faculty, with brighter prospects, we think, than it has had in a long time.

The number of students has not been large, but really larger than we could expect with such a tide of State influence against us. Let us hope that the Methodists will sustain their own schools, especially when they are just as good, if not better than those of the State, and that the next session of the Southern University will be one of largely increased prosperity and usefulness.

Deficits and Inefficiency.

The allowance of the preachers in a certain Conference was $18,000, but their receipts showed a deficit of $10,412. "Observer," in the Texas Christian Advocate, writing to laymen on the suggestive theme, closes as follows:

"This deficit represents, in our honest judgment, just that much unavoidable inefficiency on the part of your ministers. They represent just so many fetters which hold them down from rising upward to their proper ideal. Your minister cannot be the cultured gentleman, the spiritual teacher, the devoted pastor that you demand, when you allow worldly cares to sap his strength, waste his time, and blunt and secularize his spirit. There is a deep philosophy, a divine wisdom, in that sentence of our Savior where he says that not only the deceitfulness of riches, but "the cares of the world choke the word and render it unfruitful." There is a worldliness which comes from bitter poverty. There is cowardly shrinking and timid trembling at disasters. There is wearing and earking care which makes it impossible for many a pastor to rise to the height of spiritual thought and life. He cannot rise, because the mean, petty, degrading cares of the world are dragging him down to the very earth. It is comparatively easy for you laymen, and perhaps for those of us to whom "the lines have fallen in pleasant places," to set before some poor, hard-worked pastor a high ideal of study, and literary culture and brave self-denial, but too often he is utterly unable to approximate the ideal, because he is crushed into utter helplessness by the grinding pressure of daily care.

How is he to go in and out among his people as "a son of consolation," when he is bearing in his own heart a fiercer fire of suffering and of trial than the very man he goes forth to sustain? How is he to have the leisure and the heart for study when brain and heart are absorbed in the thought of how he shall find bread for his children? You may think these utterances rash. You may call the picture overdrawn, and insist that few are reduced to such extremity. But believe us, brethren, these things weigh heavily upon the heart of many a pastor, who does not, will not, show them to you.

That man who meets you as your friend, who is cheerful at your fireside, who listens to the story of your sorrows, and counsels you in difficulties—that man goes home and shuts the door of his closet, and pours out to his Father in heaven what for the world he would not tell you nor the dearest friend he has—the sorrows and cares that are breaking his heart, and hindering his ministry in the church.

And now for all this we say you are to the measure of your ability responsible. You are not slow to set a high standard before your ministers—to make upon them a large demand: You want them to be men of culture, men of spirituality, severed by that very spirituality from the errors and infirmities of the world. You want them to be kindly, companionable, polished—men prepared to clasp in love the hand of the lowest, while they stand as peers of the highest in the land. You set before them a high standard—and we pray God that you may set before them a still higher standard—of their duty to you as ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God; but how far, permit us to ask, do your help them to attain it? How earnestly have you striven to help them to be all that you say and believe they ought to be? Let that $10,412 deficit answer.

The Rev. T. A. S. Adams, pastor at Columbus, Miss., says the Western Methodist, has been elected president of Soule Female College, Murfreesboro, Tenn., and will take charge at the opening of the fall session. President Adams, in leaving the North Mississippi Conference, will leave a host of brethren and friends, who highly esteem and dearly love him. We bespeak for him a hearty welcome from the brethren of the Tennessee Conference. Our old mother has sent off to the South and West so many sons, who have been received as brethren indeed, that it is but right for the South and West, now growing stronger, to repay her, part literally with a first-class transfer now and then.

At the late commencement of Emory College, Georgia, the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred on Rev. E. R. Hendrix, president of Central College, Missouri; also on Rev. A. P. W. McKenzie, of the North Texas Conference.

Yellow Fever.

The deaths from this disease the twenty-four hours ending twelve M. on Tuesday, August were 5. Number of new cases the same period, 35. There is a considerable decrease in the number deaths, while the number of cases is about what it has been several days. The total number deaths from yellow fever, up Tuesday noon, was 88. The average mortality since the first appearance of the disease—say one month ago would be less than three a day. The prospects at present are that fever will not become epidemic. Physicians inform us that the is generally mild and easily managed. The use of disinfectants seems to have repressed and checked the progress of the disease. It will, however, continue as a prevalent disease in our midst for some time and may possibly become much more serious than at present. Unacclimated persons should be careful, and avoid all unnecessary exposure. Southern Methodist preachers are at their posts, and thus far in excellent health, although several of them have never had the fever. The pastors of the other denominations also nearly all in their places. The services are held as usual, and people are about their business as in other times. The scare and excitement are at a distance. There is no panic here. The weather has been cooler for the past few days, and this has brought a sense of relief and strength after a heated term of unusual duration and severity.

A Want of the Church.

To come to the point at once, the Richmond Christian Advocate says a great want of the church is stewards—men who will feel the importance of the office and fulfill its duties. There are stewards who could make any assessment made upon their charge, but they can serve only in one place. The work of their station or circuits they do; but they cannot be transported to supply lack of service elsewhere. These men do not approach persons with complaints that the assessment is too heavy, and then give the original information that the times are hard. They do not defer collections till the day before the quarterly meeting, or wait until Sunday morning in the hope that the persons they wish to see will come to church, and give them a chance to collect. And they take time to collect what is due them personally, so they take time to do this part of the Lord's work. The system is admirable, but it needs to be worked more diligently. If the stewards fail in their office, either the preacher's family must suffer, or he must obtrude his wants upon the church, beg the money due, and fasten upon himself the stigma that he is a sordid man.

Let the stewards be prompt and faithful; this will relieve the preachers of a burden, and leave them at liberty to attend more fully to their proper work. They will still have care enough, if without any regard to the necessaries of life. The people should have the tithes ready, and the stewards should bring them into the storehouse; then a blessing may be expected, which there will not be room enough to receive.

We extremely regret to learn that Rev. Dr. McAnally, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, and his family have been greatly afflicted of late. We pray that God may restore them all to health speedily. The St. Louis Christian Advocate of July 31 says:

"The editor of this paper prepared most or all of the matter it contains, but did it at his home in South St. Louis, where he has been and still is closely confined by the sore affliction of his family; and while he offers sincere thanks for the many kind words of sympathy and condolence from persons in various parts of the country, he also asks for the prayers of all Christian people that God may be gracious to him and his." At the time every member of the family, including himself, were in a critical condition. He is now glad we can say that other members of his family are very sorely afflicted indeed. His burden is heavy; but his trust is in God. For ten days past he has not been away from his home, but watching and waiting, by day and by night. Only those who have had a like experience can fully appreciate his condition.

In our obituary columns this week will be found a notice of the character and death of the venerable Mrs. Mary Morris, who died in Hale county, Ala., in April last. Three of her sons are in the traveling ministry—one in the South Georgia Conference—Rev. J. V. M. Morris—one in the Alabama Conference—Rev. William H. Morris; and one in the Texas Conference—Rev. Isaac Z. Morris. Sister Morris was a model of Christian excellence, revered and loved by all who knew her. Her children rise up and call her blessed.

The Southern Christian Advocate comes to us from its old home in Charleston, S. C., in the number of August 6. Dr. Kennedy will not enter on his editorial duties before January. In the meantime the associate editor, Rev. Samuel A. Webb, has exclusive possession of the tripod. We wish the Southern a long and prosperous career.

An Appeal to Subscribers.

There never has been a time in the history of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE when we needed your prompt remittances as we need them now. We are in the midst of the season of the year when collections from our advertising patrons are always difficult; but at present it is impossible. Business, dull enough before the city was quarantined from all its trade, is now suspended, the merchants not being able to ship goods, or even send their accounts through the mails to a large number of their customers for collection. Our Northern customers, too, have ceased to remit; we cannot tell why, unless they think we will all be dead before it could reach us, and we would not need it. But we hope our subscribers will consider that the horrors of a death from starvation are as great as from any other curse. We have not a doubt that more persons die in this city from want of money to get proper nourishment, medicine, clothing and fuel than die from yellow fever; and if any of our force working to supply you with the ADVOCATE—from the editor to the printer boy—were taken with the yellow fever, or any other disease, we could not furnish them the amount they would require to procure the necessaries in such cases; yet we have thousands of dollars due to the [illegible] in small amounts, which they have earned by hard work, and which the subscribers could pay in most instances if they would. They are faithful, patient, good men and boys, quiet, industrious and temperate, and on the continent has a better set. If they should take sick and for want of the money to get the medicine and nourishment they need, who would be the [illegible]?

We suppose you have not viewed [illegible] that light, but the publisher is [illegible] of money, and has no other means of getting it. Unless subscribers remit we must suffer. To pass through this great trial we [illegible] any subscriber who has paid [illegible] and to do it soon. SEND AT ONCE by registered letter or post-office money order. Can't that many of our readers help us by procuring a few subscribers? Some have done nobly in past years. Try it again. Let all help. If you cannot send all, send part.

Our Own Schools.

The subject is now being canvassed: Where shall our daughters be educated? The question is truly an important one. The claims of a few colleges are before us, each claiming superior advantages. To the Methodists in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference there is no reason why they should bestow a thought on any institution beyond the limits of our own Conference. Whitworth College, East Mississippi Female College, and Port Gibson Collegiate Academy are all conducted under the presidency of members of our own Conference, fully indorsed not only as Christian ministers of unblemished character, but as men of unquestioned scholarship and experienced educators. I know of no preferences that can boast of three centuries to the "manor born." All of these institutions are situated in healthy localities, with well-selected teachers in every department. What we want is a healthy location, accessibility, faithful, but not rigid discipline, thorough instruction and a high grade of scholarship, combined with refined society, and moral and religious influences. All these our schools can compare favorably with any in the South. Then, should our people be at the needless expense of sending their daughters to Virginia, Tennessee or elsewhere, when equal if not better facilities are offered at home. By it we do themselves injustice and injure our own schools. There are persons who do not even discountenance of our own church [illegible] patronize those that offer [illegible] passport to a diploma; [illegible] also, yield to the caprices of their children, even [illegible] them into the nunnery [illegible] final. Oh! that the [illegible] and bitter regrets [illegible] by such a sinful [illegible] have come to the knowledge of some of us, were known to all our people, and that they would profit thereby. We cannot afford to commit the molding of our children's characters to any other, much less to Romanism. Our people ought to patronize our own schools in preference to all others. Every girl or boy who goes from the Methodist Church to other institutions weakens so much the institutions of the church by giving others the patronage that should build up and strengthen our own. But more especially should we patronize our own because they are better adapted to the wants of our Methodist children. Let us keep our children in our own church by sending them to our own schools, where they will be educated into the church. There is nothing narrow or illiberal toward others in this. I love my neighbors and mingle with them freely, socially and religiously, and bid them God-speed in all their laudable enterprises; but they do not claim from this that I am to commit to them the training of my children. The college years of our children cover the most important period of their lives. During these years their religious opinions generally become settled, and their religious characters formed for life. Can it, then, be a matter of small moment with religious parents as to where their children shall be educated? Dollars and cents, in name nor anything else should be allowed for a moment to come in competition with the vast interests of the soul.

Books and Periodicals.

MRS. PETER CRAWFORD'S NOVELS.

These two works are by the author of "That Husband of Mine," "That Wife of Mine," "Rothmell," etc. Lee & Shepard, Boston; Charles T. Dillingham, New York, publishers.

The volumes are 12mo, paper, binding, good type. The author's other works have a popular run. We know nothing of the character or merits of any of them. They are adequate fictions, sometimes pathetic. Probably suited to the dog-days.

THE CREW OF THE SAN WELLER.

A story of adventure, spiced with some very graphic characterizations, and containing hints that may be useful to religious people.

The British Quarterly Review, July. American edition—the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, New York—has the following articles: 1. Taine's Philosophy of Art. 2. Ethics of Evolution. 3. Bryan Walker Printer. 4. The Russian and Turkish War. 5. Future Punishments. 6. Recent History of the Burmese Question. 7. The Later Greek Nation. 8. The Congregational View of Religious Examination. Contemporary Literature.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine is the first of the monthlies for September to reach us. It is, as usual, wonderful for the variety and excellence of its articles, and for the profusion of its illustrations. Each number is a volume of superior merit. Only $4 a year—the cheapest of all the magazines when we consider the amount of entertaining and instructive reading matter given.

The Farm Journal for August has been received. This is an excellent agricultural monthly. W. H. Chambers, editor, Owichee, Ala. Terms, $2 a year. Published by the Herald and Times Steam Print, Union Springs, Ala.

—The Southern Cultivator for August has been received. W. L. Jones, editor and proprietor, Athens, Ga. Price, $2 a year.

—Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine for August is filled with matters of interest to gardeners and florists.

The following notice speaks well for the vigorous administration of President Johnson, and for the prosperous condition, present and prospective, of Whitworth. We believe Brookhaven has not yet established a quarantine.

The earth for the new college building was publicly broken, on the thirty-first ultimo, by Judge J. B. Chrisman. The corner stone will be laid on the twenty first instant, with Masonic ceremonies, Dr. Murphy, grand master of the Grand Lodge of the State of Mississippi, presiding.

Hons. Jefferson Davis and Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar have been invited to deliver addresses.

You are respectfully invited to honor us with your presence, and participate in the festivities.

The Order of the Garter.

The Order of the Garter, with which Earl Beaconsfield and Lord Salisbury have been invested by the Queen of Great Britain, is one of the oldest and most famous of the orders of knighthood that remain in Europe. The exact date of its foundation is not known. One authority ascribes it to 1192, when, in a battle with the Saracens on St. George's day, Richard Cœur de Lion commanded twenty-six of his knights to wear around their legs thongs of blue leather. But most writers agree that it dates from Edward the Third, though the precise date is in dispute, Froissart giving 1344 and Stow 1350. General tournaments in that time were held at Windsor. At one of them, says the familiar story, the Countess of Salisbury let fall her garter when dancing with the King, and the King, picking it up, tied it round his own leg. There were smiles from the company and jealous glances from the Queen; noticing which, Edward restored the garter to the Countess, saying, "Honi soit qui mal y pense," and added that those who smiled would shortly see the garter advanced to such honor and renown as to account themselves happy to wear it. There have been writers to ridicule this story, but none to suggest a more probable theory. The order was founded in honor of the Holy Trinity, the Virgin Mary, St. Edward the Confessor, and St. George, the latter of whom had then become the guardian saint of England, and was considered the special patron of the order. It has always borne the title of "The Order of St. George," as well as of "The Garter."

It has been claimed that, though founded in 1344, the order was not fully organized nor were its knight companions chosen until 1350. The companions were twenty-five in number, the sovereign making twenty-six, and having authority to nominate the others.

The original dress of knights was a blue mantle, tunic and capuchin, embroidered with garters of gold and blue silk, the largest of which was worn on the left shoulder of the mantle. As now used, it consists of a dark-blue velvet garter, edged with gold and bearing the motto in letters of gold, and worn below the knee on the left leg; a mantle of blue velvet, lined with white taffeta; a hood of crimson velvet; a surcoat, also of crimson velvet and lined with white taffeta; a hat of black velvet, lined with taffeta and bearing a plume of ostrich and heron feathers, fastened by a band of diamonds. The collar is of gold, being composed of twenty-six pieces, each in the form of a garter, and has appended to it a figure of St. George on horseback. A lesser St. George is enameled, on gold and set with diamonds, being suspended over the left shoulder by a dark blue ribbon. The star has eight points and is of silver, having the cross of St. George in the center and being embroidered on the left breast.

Of the eagerness with which the honor has been sought, a writer in Belgravia says: "For five centuries it may almost be said to have been the last infirmity of noble minds in England, and since 1603 in Scotland too. Probably, indeed, a good deal of the social bitterness with which North Britons were long regarded in London was due to the fact that they obtained from the Stuart kings far more than their share of honors, and notably an undue proportion of blue ribbons. James the First, by the way, while as yet only the Sixth of Scotland, was generally understood to have accepted the garter from Queen Elizabeth by way of compensation for his mother's loss of her head. But the English Queen judiciously supplemented the gift of George with a pension of £5,000 a year. One of William the Third's allies among the German princes thought money could hardly be weighed in the scale with a garter. His serene highness had long and persistently demanded a subsidy of £100,000, but cheerfully agreed to accept £100,000, plus the blue ribbon."—New York Tribune.

The missionary cause in Turkey has come out of the war with improved prospects. The services which the missionaries have been able to perform to the distressed people have greatly commended them to popular favor. Dr. Dwight, in writing to the Missionary Herald from Constantinople, says: "Long-closed doors are opening, and opportunities of seed-sowing are multiplying. I think all missionaries are finding that the events of these days are giving them constantly new lines of influence. Messrs. Locke and Jenny, at Samokov, binding up wounds of Turkish soldiers in the hospital, have become known and respected by the Turks as never before; and the escape of the city from destruction, which had been ordered, is perhaps due, under God, to their presence in it. At the same time leading Bulgarians of Samokov, who have never before recognized the missionaries, called repeatedly at their houses for comfort and counsel. Everywhere the people look up to the missionaries in just that way. Even the Imam of the mosque near us comes into the Bible-house several times a week to ask 'the truth' as to what is to be next. All these people are drawn to the missionaries for political information, it is true; but missionaries keenly alive to the opportunities of the crisis, will not readily let them fall back into the old feeling of suspicion." Advance.

The famine in northern China is abated, and it is affirmed that over 9,000,000 of lives have already perished. The region lies north of the great mountain range, and is accessible only by camels and donkeys, laden with provisions.

A Frenchman, intending to compliment a young lady by calling her a gentle lamb, said: "She is one mutton as is small."

THE QUICKEST TIME EAST.—The Great Jackson Route is now making the quickest time to New York ever known, leaving New Orleans daily at 3:45 P. M., and arriving at New York at 8:35 A. M. Allowing for the difference in time between the two cities, the run is made in the unprecedented time of fifty-nine and three-quarter hours. This quick time is made only by the Great Jackson Route, and is the result of its enterprise in rebuilding its track with steel rails and new ties at heavy expense, and the thorough system of ballasting that has been undertaken. This fast train will be of great advantage to the people of this city, which it is hoped they will show their appreciation of by their patronage. Only one change of cars, which is made at Rojum Junction, where breakfast is taken in the splendid dining hall at that place at 8 A. M.

This route also makes the quickest time to Boston, arriving at 2:40 P. M. Actual running time, sixty-seven and one-half hours. This makes it the most desirable route for all New England points. The time to all intermediate points is correspondingly less, thus making this the quickest and best route to all the Northern and Eastern cities.

Excursion tickets to Waukesha, Oconomowoc and all the Northwestern summer resorts, to Niagara Falls, Put-in-Bay, etc., are on sale at the lowest rates, with the quickest time made by any line, and only one change of cars.

VANDALIA LINE.—The attention of our readers and the traveling public is called to the merits of the above line. For parties going East by way of St. Louis there is no better route. Comfortable, roomy coaches and elegant palace sleepers gliding noiselessly, swiftly and safely along over a track so smooth that meals might be served on both sides the cars without the change in look out of the window, other for the time a home magnified in splendor and luxurious ease by anything the most fastidious traveler of the past generation ever dreamed of. The popularity of this cool and reliable road is constantly and steadily on the increase. The efforts of the well-known and jolly-rotund old general manager, Col. Simpson, are fully appreciated by the traveling public.

THE proprietors of the Grand Hotel, New York—Broadway and Thirty-First street—attend personally to every detail connected with the management of their great hotel. All parts of the hotel exhibit unremitting care. It is bright as a fresh-blown flower, and clean as a new pin.—Newark Daily Gazette.

Farm, Garden and Household.

THOUGHTS FOR THE MONTH.

After a short breathing spell, the farmer must again gird up his loins, and prepare for autumn and winter crops. These include turnips, grass, clover, oats, rye, barley and wheat—quite a formidable array. The management of a turnip crop has been pretty fully discussed on former occasions, and we will only add here that, while very rich ground and thorough tilth are essential to all turnips, they become more and more important the later the sowings are made. As the sun's heat declines, and what may be termed the "growing forces" of nature diminish, increased supplies of food, and better facilities for getting it, must make up for these deficiencies. Acting upon this, and selecting quickly-maturing varieties, sowings may be made, with good prospects of success, as late as the middle of September. Always plant in drills far enough apart to admit good cultivation—plowing as well as hoeing—as this also contributes greatly to rapid growth. A hint about the method of securing a stand may not be out of place. Open shallow drills the latter half of the afternoon, sow seed, and with the edge of a plank press them into the soil, and then cover lightly with loose earth. Two hands, using a narrow plank sixteen or twenty feet long, can do the work quite rapidly. Thin out early and bring to a final stand—one plant every ten or twelve inches—as fast as soon as can be done with safety.

GRASSES.

Accustomed to see grass grow anywhere and everywhere, and knowing from experience how hard it often is to kill it, the majority of Southern farmers do not appreciate the wants of what are known as the cultivated grasses. These all require very rich land and specific manuring. Like corn and cotton, and other cultivated crops, they cannot contend successfully with weeds and plants, of little value, if unaided by man. It is perfectly useless to plant any of the grasses. Bermuda excepted, on poor land and leave them to themselves—it is a waste of time and labor. The [illegible] manure needed by the grasses is one in which nitrogen predominates; give abundance of this substance, together with moderate quantities of the others, as phosphates and potash, and the grasses will not only grow vigorously, but will in due time drive out intruders, bushes and briars excepted.

As no after-cultivation is possible, the land should be most thoroughly broken and pulverized, as well as enriched, before the seed are sown, and the vigor of the plants must be kept up by annual top-dressings afterward. If not willing to take this trouble, our advice is: Let the grasses alone. Supposing one willing to take the requisite trouble, let the ground be ready, as above, by the middle of September, which is a most excellent time to sow the seed, if extreme drouth does not prevail. Do not sow with small grain—give the land up entirely to the grass. The soil being thoroughly pulverized, sow seed, brush in very lightly and then roll the land. The latter is very important; if not done the seed will not come up well.

COMBINATIONS OF VARIETIES.

Where pasture is the object, sow a mixture of every variety which will grow in our climate—orchard, tall meadow oat, herds, blue, the fescues and white clover. On another page will be found some of the combinations used in Great Britain. They are not adapted to our country, but are given to illustrate the value attached to sowing mixtures, and as furnishing some guidance to the proportions of different kinds. On the other hand, where hay is the consideration, only those maturing at the same time should be sown together as orchard and tall oat, or timothy together with red clover. Stiff clay soils are best adapted to the grasses. The tall oat, however, succeeds quite well on light soils.

may be sown at September of in March, using clay land, rich in mineral elements, suits it best. Heavy applications of stable manure will insure a good "catch." In our own experience, two hundred to three hundred pounds of superphosphate has done the same. The land ought to be clean and in good tilth, the seed almost less than twelve pounds per acre sown, and very lightly brushed in. Some have reported good success by sowing in cotton-bolls after the crop is laid by. If these really get seed in once, and test their vitality a count one hundred, and spread on damp cotton in a dark place and see how many germinate. Old clover seed do not come up well.

LUCERNE.

September is the best time to sow lucerne as the young plants can then get a much better start of its great enemy grass than they can if sown in spring. Select rather light loamy soils, or such as have a subsoil easily penetrated by the long tap-roots. Some admixture of clay is not objectionable, on the contrary, it is highly desirable. Make the land excessively rich, and, by successive plowings and harrowings, as clean and mellow as it can be made. Then sow seed twelve pounds per acre in drills twelve inches apart, covering not more than half to one inch in depth. When up, cultivate carefully till frost arrests the growth of grass and weeds.

OATS.

The value of fall-sown oats is so general as to appreciated as hardly to require to be given more than the attention of our readers. Oats may be sown from now till cotton and upon cotton-stubble. The time assuming up of testimony based upon experience, is that plowing in is better than harrowing in on cotton land. Run a furrow close to the cotton before sowing. This prevents the seed from rolling down into the middles, as they will do if the ground has been impacted by rain since the last plowing. Sow at least two bushels of seed (rust-proof) per acre—a smaller quantity will not give a good stand.

RYE.

A rye patch will be found very convenient and useful for early spring grazing. Sow early—by the middle of September at farthest—and only Southern-raised seed. Rye will grow on poorer land than barley; that may commend it to some, but it is decidedly the best policy to have the ground extremely rich, even for rye, that it may come forward early; and spring up rapidly after being cut.

BARLEY

excels rye as a forage plant; indeed we do not know anything superior to barley when sown on rich land, and it is useless to sow on any other. Sow early in September, four bushels seed per acre; and if the ground is rich enough, there is no such thing as failure. No grass lots will equal it.

WHEAT.

Preparations for this crop may be very profitably begun now by sowing down the land intended for it in peas, if it is stubble or rested land. It is better to sow in drills and cultivate the peas, with a view to securing good tilth. This cannot be done after the wheat crop is sown, (if broadcasted,) and should by all means be done before. It is better, however, to drill the wheat and cultivate it in the spring. Where that plan is adopted the peas might be sown broadcast.—Southern Cultivator.

TO CURE BIRD-SKINS.

Birds, such as pelican, musk-duck, and especially sea-birds, as they contain so much oil, can be cured to last for years by the following process: In skinning the bird cut the fat off the skin close to the end of the quills, care being taken not to cut the root of the quills, which will appear in little ridges—that is, break through the epidermis, and leave it on the body of the bird. Take spirits of turpentine or benzine and a soft cloth, and rub the skin till the fat dissolves; take brown paper and lay on the skin, and iron it with a hot iron till all the oil is extracted, which will be seen when there is no oil on the paper; then wash the skin with a half ounce of oil of vitriol (pure,) and a quarter pint of salt dissolved in two pints of water; apply with a soft cloth. Watch the skin till it appears like a number of matted white threads, when it will be ready to fill and sew up. It may require the solution three or four times, according to the thickness of the skin. Take starch and a little violet powder, mix into a paste; wash the feathers that are soiled in cold spring water, and then cover the feathers with the paste. Let it dry; when dry, tap with the fingers, and shake the skin, when it will fall off, and the feathers will have a bright, healthy gloss. The above process is better than scraping and using chalk, as you do not cut the roots of the quills and destroy the life in the feathers. An amateur may not be successful at first.

THE CELERY CROP.—This is the month to set out celery plants, and we advise that the entire crop be set out by the twentieth. For early use it should be set out at once. We have long thought that the failure of celery is more frequently to be ascribed to late planting than to any other cause. The ground in the trenches, which should be about six inches deep, should be well pulverized and made as rich as possible. For this purpose cow manure mixed with mold is excellent. An application of this mixture, to form the first "hilling up," cannot be surpassed in effect. Guano water or liquid manure from the dung-yard is excellent. Care must be taken, in hilling up, that the "leaders" of the celery are not buried, that the soil be made fine and that the mingling of it among the plants be done with the hands. It is a good plan to plant celery between alternate rows of corn. The corn stalks are excellent protection against the hot July and August suns; the corn-stalks to be removed as soon as the corn has been consumed, and the plants have attained sufficient size and strength to take care of themselves.

The best soil for celery should be rich and moist. Celery cannot be too highly manured.

Where there is no other protection to the young plants, boards should be laid over the trenches every clear day from ten to four o'clock.—Germantown Telegraph.

FLOWER GARDEN.—To all who love beautiful flowers the arrangement of the beds in tasteful forms to show well, as well as the placing of plants relative to color, is a work of considerable thought, and too often results in failure, because of too great haste and want of consideration. Do not get the beds larger than your plants will fully fill. A small form well filled is better than more breadth and with a bold show of naked soil. Place your brightest colors—as crimsons, scarlets, etc.—in the center, and surround with lighter shades. An edging of dark purple or rich shades of pink and white is also sometimes effective, especially with beds of quite small size. It is important to have the plants well hardened before placing them in the beds, by careful exposure to the weather—at the first by day only, but in the end by night also. Choose dull, dry weather for planting, if possible, and have the plants rather dry; for, if recently watered they will not turn out as nicely. Water them freely when set, and cover the surface with a light mulch. The Variegated or Striped Japan Maize forms one of the most showy and desirable plants for the center of large beds, or for creating a bold, attractive point in the distance.—Horticulturist.

RAISINS.—According to Sir William Gull, Queen Victoria's physician, and, of course, eminent in his profession, it is better, in case of fatigue from overwork, to eat raisins than to resort to alcohol. In his testimony before the Lord's Commission in London, a few months ago, he affirmed "that instead of flying to alcohol, as many people do when exhausted, they might very well drink water, or that they might very well take food, and they would be very much better without the alcohol." He added, as to the form of food he himself resorts to: "In case of fatigue from overwork, I would say that if I am thus fatigued my food is very simple; I eat the raisins, instead of drinking the wine. For thirty years I have had large experience in this practice. I have recommended it to my personal friends. It is a limited experience; but I believe it is a very good and true experience." We commend this testimony in favor of raisins as better than wine to the thoughtful consideration of all those who are in the habit, with or without professional prescription, of resorting to "a little wine for the stomach's sake and thine often infirmities." And raisins, we believe, have never been known to intoxicate.

BRUNSWIGIA.—The gigantic bulbs of that splendid amaryllis, the Brunswigia, are frequently imported into this country, but are rarely seen in bloom. Many of them are rotted by impatient efforts to force them into growth. These bulbs are dug from their native habitat by European plant collectors, and are usually of great age. On being received they should be potted in good strong loam, and kept dry until they show signs of growth.

During the summer set the pot in the sunniest, hottest place you have, and bide your time in patience. After growth has commenced they cannot get too much water. Twice a day they should be well saturated.

A correspondent of the London Times writes: "There is a simple method—apparently sufficiently well known—of discriminating between real and spurious diamonds. If the specimen is immersed in water, should it be a diamond it will sparkle with almost undiminished light and brilliancy of color; but if it be spurious, whether paste or rock crystal, the fire of the jewel will be completely quenched."

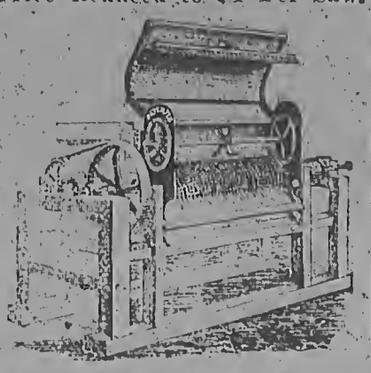
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It covers all the points of the cotton fiber, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any Other Gin in use. The Revolving Head achieves the good and endless, together with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same valve with [illegible] steam or amount of power than any other. Increased [illegible] is increased proportionately, as the [illegible] is increased [illegible] Saving with the extra production of lint, added to increased amount [illegible] more than covers the cost of the Gin in every bale ginned. The object of the scholarship is to assist in erecting the new college building.

The unprecedented success of the college is its best recommendation.

Bishop McTyeire writes in the Nashville Christian Advocate: "Several days spent in the delightful college family at Brookhaven left me in no doubt as to how this success has been achieved. The location is good, and the [illegible] better. Long will I remember the morning hymns of chapel prayers. Another fact not to be overlooked was the plainness of dressing—neat, tasteful but plain."

The health record is as good as that of any school in Kentucky, Virginia or Tennessee.

The corner stone of the new college building will be laid in August.

Patronize this school and send classes in further development of an institution which has been rapidly growing for eleven years, and for a noble purpose.

SCIENTIFIC.

A glass ball castor has been invented which will roll equally well in any direction, an improvement on the present style greatly to be desired.

Nature remarks that among the most remarkable indications of scientific progress to be noted in our time is the extent to which scientific works circulate in the United States, and of which circulation Nature itself has so large a share.

The Hon. J. D. Cox contributes to the American Naturalist an illustrated account of the smallest insect known (Pteratomus Putnamii.) It is a mite of an icheumon which attacks the common leaf-cutter bee, usually described by Packard from an incomplete specimen. Mr. Cox gives a carefully-prepared figure of the perfect specimen which he dissected, and clears up some unknown points in its structure. This hymenopterous insect, with the wings long and narrow, linear and beautifully ciliated—not being distinct as erroneously supposed by Packard. The winged atom is one-sixtieth of an inch long, and bears the palm among all known insects for extreme exiguity.

The Journal of Chemistry says: "Many persons suffer nowadays from sleeplessness that every contribution to the literature of the subject is interesting. Dr. Alfred Hollis, of London, Practitioner, maintains that, although the quantity of blood in the brain is diminished during sleep, this diminution is not the cause of slumber, for we may have the former without the latter. One of the most efficient means of producing natural sleep is the application of mustard plasters to the soles of the feet. Prayer, of Jena, advocates the administration of a carefully-made solution of lactate of soda, or of some other salt, on the hypothesis that sleep may be induced by the injection of the foreign products of decay. Where the insomnia depends upon brain exhaustion, Dr. Hollis recommends the administration, just before bed-time, of a tumbler of hot claret and water, with a little nutmeg. The alkalies and alkaline earths are useful when dyspepsia is associated with the insomnia. Electricity has been used in cases of the vaso-motor paresis of the worn-out brain. In hot weather, sprinkling the floor of the sleeping apartment with water, the irritant properties of the evaporating much to the comfort of sleepers, possibly the quantity of oxygen at the same time increased, sleep is broken by severe pain, or morphia is of value, not by relieving the pain, but by its power in producing anæmia of cerebral vessels. In the wakefulness due to neuralgia, it is often useful to inject a small dose of morphia hypodermically near the branch of affected nerve than to administer by the mouth. It is doubtful if the bromides possess hypnotic properties, although they usually act as sedatives of the nervous system, and as such may occasionally induce sleep."

"When I hear it said that anybody can learn to sing if he tries, I do not strictly believe it. There are people who are absolutely deaf to musical notes, as there are to colors. Indeed, notwithstanding the frequency of such deafness, it is probably a lack of attention or training in the hearing of each one of these sorts of combinations, according to Helmholtz's theory, better than to refer it to any particular act of inaudibility, that is, it is capable of being sympathetically with air-vibrations of its own natural rate of oscillation. In this case we may say that each one of the Creator's organs is tuned, so that it will answer to a large number of tones, or with various degrees of loudness to a considerable range of pitch. Different wave rates will then excite the same fibers, producing the same sensation. It would, however, be possible that nerve centers, and the fibers connected with them, might be so differentiated that separate sensations would result from the action of the separate fibers, only cause which is necessary for a rare phenomenon called diplacusis, in which a note of a different tone is perceived respectively by the right and left ear with the consciousness of the difference. To all noises, sounds as sound only, he was insensitive, thus making up for deafness to tone. The cause of the deafness

A MURDEROUS SEA-FLOWER.—One of the exquisite wonders of the sea is called the opelet, and is about as large as the German aster, looking indeed very much like one. Imagine a very large double aster, with a great many long petals of a light green color, glossy satin, and each one tipped with rose color. These lovely petals do not lie quietly in their places, but wave about in the water, while the opelet clings to a rock. How innocent and lovely it looks on its rocky bed! Who should suspect that it would eat anything grosser than dew and sunlight? But those beautiful waving arms, as you call them, have use besides looking pretty. They have to provide for a large, open mouth, which is hidden down deep among them—so hidden that one can scarcely find it. Well do they perform their duty, for the instant a foolish little fish touches one of the rosy tips he is stuck with poison as fatal to him as lightning. He immediately becomes numb, and in a moment stops struggling, and then the other arms wrap themselves around him, and he is drawn into the huge, greedy mouth, and is seen no more. Then the lovely arms unclose, and wave again in the water.

THE MICROPHONE IN THE PULPIT.—The Halifax Englishman gives the following account of an interesting experiment with the microphone: A microphone was placed in the pulpit of a chapel in this town on a recent Sunday, and connected by a private telegraph line with the residence of a gentleman over a mile distant. Every part of the service was distinctly heard at the gentleman's house, with the exception of a few words rendered indistinct by the preacher's becoming a little excited and shaking the microphone. So faithfully did the instrument do its work that the chapel-keeper was heard to close the doors after service, walk up the aisle, and up the pulpit steps, in conversation with some one else. The idea is about to be put to practical use, the gentleman already referred to having given instructions that his house should be connected with another in the neighborhood, in order that an invalid may hear the service from one of the churches in the town.

"God made the soul to correspond with truth. Truth is its own evidence, as the lightning flash is, as the blessed sunshine is.—N. Y. Ledger.

"What would you do without a mother?" asked a fond parent of her little boy. "Do as I liked," was the reply of the young hopeful.

Our ancestors, the monkeys, could not have been so ignorant, after all. They were all educated in the high branches.

THE DIFFERENCE.

Dr. Price's Extract of Vanilla is made from the true Mexican Vanilla bean, while most of the so-called extract of vanilla in the market is but an imitation, made from the tonqua, or snuff bean. Dr. Price's Extract of Vanilla has the true, delicate flavor of the fruit.

Religious Notices.

THE camp meeting for Spring Creek will commence on Friday, October 11, and continue until Thursday night following. The camp meeting is to be self-sustaining—by which we mean that all persons are expected to arrange for their own comfort. There will be a public tent on the ground, at which board and lodging may be had on reasonable terms. There will be a daily (except Sunday) market on the ground, at which corn, fodder, fresh beef, pork, mutton, etc., may be had on reasonable terms. Ministers are specially invited. Ample arrangements will be made for them and their families.

8 J. W. HEARN, P. C.

THE camp meeting on the Union circuit, Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, will embrace the fifth Sunday in September, commencing on Thursday night before. This meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan. The ministers of the Meridian and Brandon districts are invited to attend; also all others who can come. There will be conveyance for ministers at Hickory station on Friday morning. Provision will be made for the preachers and their horses.

5 J. H. HOLLAND, P. C.

PROVIDENCE CAMP MEETING will begin on Tuesday, September 3, and continue one week. The camp ground is situated fifteen miles east of Hazlehurst. Commodious public tents will be in readiness to accommodate visitors at moderate prices. The services will be under the direction of Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, D. D., presiding elder of the district. Provision is made for the transportation of preachers, landing at Hazlehurst, free of charge. Come, brethren! Do not wait for special invitations.

8 C. C. BRALLIER, Pastor.

WILLIAMS' CAMP GROUND is located on the Pensacola railroad, thirty-five miles from Pensacola. The time for holding the meeting will embrace the second Sunday in September commencing on Thursday night. Ample arrangements are made for ministers. All are cordially invited. Arrangements are made for visitors. The meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan.

Steam COTTON BAND PULLER

AND BUCKLER.

THE ATTENTION of the Cotton Planters in the United States is called to this

NEW AND IMPORTANT INVENTION.

This STEAM PULLER has been thoroughly tested, and has demonstrated the fact that we can apply to Cotton Bands any required tensile strain and BUCKLE THEM AT EXACTLY THE HIGHEST POINT REACHED, and no slipping of the bands through the buckle, all the bands being drawn taut and buckled at the same instant, turning out a perfect bale, and without regard to the size, weight or shape of the bale.

THE BUCKLE is simply perfect; it is cheap and strong, and can be furnished on the order of a day by the million. The old bands are used over and over again, and NOTHING is lost.

THE PULLER can be attached to any size or style of press, and at an expense that is slight compared to the benefit to be derived by the cotton planter. It is simple, and can be operated by regular compressmen without danger of getting out of order. The speed is applied greater than ordinary hand-tying.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 7.—The fast line of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis railroad, which left this city last night, met with a terrible accident at a point one and a half miles west of Mingo Junction, Ohio. The train was composed of two sleepers, one hotel car, one baggage, two postal cars and two coaches, the latter being occupied by emigrants. At Mingo, at the point named, the engine, which was twenty minutes behind time, running at the rate of forty miles an hour, collided with a freight train, and the entire train, except the hotel car and sleepers, was thrown from the track and fearfully wrecked. Eleven or twelve persons were killed, and fifteen to twenty more severely wounded.

All the passengers in the sleepers and hotel car without serious injury, the latter being confined to those in the forward cars, occupied by postal clerks and emigrants.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—A Washington dispatch to Bismarck's D. T. says: Major Walsh, of the Dominion mounted police, reports sitting Bull and his destitute of food, and the very for American occupation is daily and in their camps. He thinks fast approaching, and the allies must either starve it or ...

WALLINGFORD, Aug. ...—A terrific tornado passed over Wallingford six o'clock this evening, and blew ... houses, uprooted trees and caused the greatest devastation. It is estimated that the killed will number twenty, while the wounded will reach twice that number.

The tornado was confined to a belt about half a mile wide. It came up almost a second and seemed to last only a moment. By actual count forty dwelling-houses and fifty barns were demolished.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—Mexican affairs were again discussed in the Cabinet to-day. The result was instructions to the Secretary of War to issue an order reiterating the provisions of that already existing, requiring our forces to protect the property of Americans on the Rio Grande at all hazards. If necessary to pursue raiders into Mexican territory, it is to be done, no matter what show of resistance is made.

HARTFORD, Aug. 10.—The Chinese embassy arrived here at noon by special car, and were escorted to the building owned by their government in this city.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 11.—Yellow fever is reported at Grenada, Miss., the past two days. Telegrams from reliable sources announce the existence of fifty or sixty cases, and five deaths are reported to-day. Gen. Smith and Col. B. F. Anderson left for that place to-day with a number of nurses and physicians. There is considerable excitement here over the news.

GRENADA, MISS., Aug. 8.—To Col. Howard, Secretary Howard Association, Memphis: Our people are suffering fearfully. Please send us fifteen or twenty nurses and one or two physicians.

JOHN L. MILTON, Mayor.

I will take care of the nurses.

BRIGHT P. ANDERSON.

The Howard Association promptly called for nurses and physicians, and saw them dispatched by the next train.

The latest news we have from Grenada indicates a sad condition of affairs. Eighteen deaths have occurred and sixty-two cases of fever. It appears that new cases manifested themselves yesterday.

The Howard Association sent four nurses there by last evening's train, and the instance asked for will leave to-day.

Dr. Stone was telegraphed to at Fort Eads, and in response Dr. William Mandeville, who had gone there to assist Dr. Stone, left immediately on a tug and was expected to reach the city in time to take this morning's train for Grenada.

GRENADA, Aug. 12.—One hundred cases of yellow fever here up to twelve M. Ten deaths within the last twenty-four hours.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 12.—There being no statement of the yellow fever in New Orleans, the health officers have decided to put the quarantine hospital, situated on the river, fourteen miles below here, in condition for occupation, and keep a certain degree of surveillance upon steamers and trains arriving from infected points below.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 12.—There was ... shot out of town yesterday ... himself by a fatal case of ... originating here. Although doctors disagree, the ... quieted. Three other ... reported at the city hospital ... reported to-day.

Aug. 13.—Up to the ... only the one case of ... reported to-day, has been found in the city. The square in which this case occurred was thoroughly fumigated, disinfected, and quarantined against all outside communication.

The most stringent measures have been resorted to to keep the disease from spreading. Some excitement prevails, and people are leaving the city.

Yellow fever is reported at Winona and Canton, Miss.

VICKSBURG, Aug. 13.—The health officer reports that no new case of yellow fever has appeared in the city up to noon to-day. No case now in the city.

GRENADA, Miss., Aug. 13.—Seven fever deaths and eight new cases in the last twenty-four hours. There are at least one hundred down with the fever. The weather is cloudy, with threatening rains. The indications are bad for the patients. Four cases of black vomit are reported by Dr. Hughes, which he says cannot recover. Business is entirely suspended, and trains pass by without noticing the place. The distress is truly fearful.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, Aug. 7.—A meeting of Cuban merchants and planters was held to-day for the purpose of framing an address to the King of Spain regarding the injury suffered by this island and by Spanish ... owners, by reason of the high import duty levied on sugars in Spain.

The official report shows that ... deaths from yellow fever and ... from small-pox occurred in Havana during the month of July.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 8.—The Official Messenger to-day dwells upon the smallness of the material advantages which, it says, have accrued to Russia through the disregard by the Berlin Congress of considerations of fairness in fixing frontiers. It says the task of Russia is now to secure the conclusions reached are carried into execution to the smallest point, and that if the Porte does not observe strictly the conditions of the treaty, it signs its own sentence.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—Rev. Mr. Mackonochie, of St. Alban's, Holborn, having been suspended from his clerical functions for three years by sentence of Lord Penzance, Dean of Arches, for contempt of court in refusing to obey a decree prohibiting his ritualistic practices, appealed his case from the Court of Arches to the High Court of Justice. The appeal was heard this week, and a decision rendered yesterday in favor of appellant. The court issued a writ of prohibition directed against the sentence of suspension.

MANCHESTER, Aug. 9.—A dispatch from Constantinople to the Manchester Guardian says that letters received from a person on board her British majesty's steamship Swiftsure, in the Gulf of Saros, declare that the Russians are still busily engaged in fortifying the coast, and do not expect peace to be permanent.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—The session of the International Monetary Conference opened here to-day. M. Leon Say was elected president, on motion of Hon. Reuben E. Fenton.

After the nomination of secretaries and the delivery of a short address of welcome by the president, Mr. Fenton briefly explained the objects of the conference. He thanked the powers who responded to the appeal of the United States, and hoped the distinguished men taking part in the conference would facilitate the accomplishment of a work which would further the pacific interests of the world. Several members not having arrived, the conference adjourned for a few days.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—A dispatch from Alexandria to the Daily Standard says: The river Nile is rising favorably, and is now higher than at any time last year, and the prospects for crops are excellent. It is estimated the cotton crop will yield 12,000,000 pounds.

VIENNA, Aug. 11.—Official intelligence has been received fully confirming the report of a battle on the eighth instant, along the line from Maglai to Sheptsche, as telegraphed by the correspondent of the London Daily News.

Official reports place the number of insurgents at considerably over 6,000, with four cannon and a rocket battery. Fighting lasted eight hours. The Bosnians lost 400 killed and wounded, and 700 prisoners.

On Friday the Austrians advanced against Vrandek.

RUSTSCHUK, Aug. 11.—News from insurgent sources is to the effect that the opponents to Austrian occupation, consisting of Bosnians, Turkish troops, Arnautes and Albanians, number over 100,000 men, well armed. All strategic points on the road to Serajavo are occupied and intrenched, both insurgents and Austrians being reinforced daily.

LONDON, Aug. 12.—A Calcutta dispatch says: The heavy rains have caused universal floods throughout India. Much damage done in Scinde, Patna and elsewhere. The dam of the Vetna is in danger of bursting which would stop the water supply of Bombay.

The Times' Calcutta dispatch says: The rains have been abnormally heavy. Great damage has been done to crops.

VIENNA, Aug. 13.—Gen. Philippovich telegraphed that he would effect a junction with the army of the Grand Duke of Wurtemburg, near Vitez, to-day. The twentieth Austrian division has not yet been able to reach Seworanik.

The outposts fought a battle with the insurgents near Gratschanitza on the fourth instant. A division was also engaged on the eighth, ninth and tenth. It advanced close to Tusla, but in consequence of the scarcity of supplies and the exhaustion of draught animals was obliged to fall back on Gratschanitza to secure its communications, though not because compelled to do so by the enemy.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—In reference to the Porte's more pliant attitude on the Batoum and Bosnian question, the Standard's Berlin dispatch says: Bismarck has instructed the German attache at Constantinople to inform the Porte that continuance of an ambiguous policy would risk the existence of Turkey in Europe.

The Standard's Vienna dispatch says: Riots continue at Odessa, and the proclamation of a state of siege is expected to be issued.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—It is rumored the Western powers agreed to a French protectorate over Tunis.

About Methodism—Its Work and Its Aspersers.

NUMBER II.

I shall briefly glance at the moral condition of England, before and at the beginning of the career of John Wesley, in order to show the largest need of a religious reform which existed, and what manner of man was wrought by Wesley and the Methodists.

Religion, during the seventeenth century, had received two fatal blows, sinking it to a state of prostration, by which morality and virtue were overwhelmed as a flood. The Church of England, as the depository of religion, was little better than a mere organized hypocrisy. Sir Robert Walpole, the prime minister, said openly and proudly of it, "Why, because it was a popular thing and most of us were of it, everybody could not be wrong." His political creed was that "every man had his price," and he acted up to this immoral creed by openly buying the votes of members of Parliament. George the First not only had his mistresses, but he consulted his wife respecting his quarrels with these coarse, greedy German women. The mistresses lived openly at court; they were made peeresses, and enriched by grants and pensions. But what more forcibly illustrates the moral deadness of the age is the fact that the nobility and the dignitaries of the church—the men of culture and wealth—courted and flattered these minions of the king with shameless abjectness. They "fawned and bent the pregnant hinges of the knee" to these mistresses of the king, that, "thrift might follow fawning." Mitered bishops courting and fawning upon the strumpets of a king is a sorry sight. The Church of England furnished no Nathan to tell the English Ahab to "Thou art the man."

"They played high at court" George the Second promoting the amusement. Sunday was the great day for their amusements. Their religion consisted in ostentatiously showing themselves at church, and their wit found vent in indelicate innuendoes.

"Among men, and especially men of fashion, to be profligate, drunken, given to play, and profane, was not only not discreditable, but quite correct. The club-houses and especially Brookes'—were the scenes, night after night, of orgies which would not now be tolerated in the worst-conducted gin-shop in London. He who could boast of having betrayed the largest number of women was received with the greatest favor in all circles.

"Nor were the manners and morals of the aristocracy, and even the clergy, much more elevated. Drunkenness was regarded as a necessary incident on hospitality. The country gentleman who allowed his guests to leave the dinner-table except in a state of elevation would have been despised as a screw. He was the best fellow who saw them all first gorged with meat and wine, and then put to bed. As to the clergy, their habits continued to be pretty much what they learned to make them when students at Oxford or Cambridge. Even the fellows' common room, and not unfrequently the master's lodge, taught them anything rather than the graces of sobriety. In a word, the age was a drunken age, a profligate age—an age either of daring profanity or of indifference to religion—of course dark, coarse manners, and the worst possible morals."—Blackwood's Magazine for August, 1865.

Again, speaking of the age in which John Wesley was born, Blackwood's Magazine for October, 1867, says: "It was one of the moments in which the world had fallen out of the thought of God. Other ages may have been as wicked, but we doubt whether any age had learned so entirely to forget its connection with higher things, or the fact that a soul which did not die—an immortal being akin to other spheres—was within its clay. The good men were inoperative—the bad men were dauntless; the vast crowd between the two, which forms the bulk of humanity, felt no stimulus toward religion, and drowsed in comfortable content. Even the sentiment of cleanness, purity and honor was lost to the generation. Its soul was good for nothing but to point an oath. The name of God was still used in public documents as giving victories and confounding enemies, and such like; and in private very freely, as the most round syllable to clinch the perpetual curse; but was of no more significance than the name of George or James, and not half so much external weight." In 1743 Bishop Burnet said: "I have observed the clergy in all the places through which I have passed—Papists, Calvinists, Lutherans and Dissenters—but, of them all, our clergy is much the most remiss in their labors in private, and the least severe in their lives." Bishop Warburton wrote to Hurd: "Reckon upon it that Durham goes to some methodistical enthusiastic." "Tis a misery for them, Dear Grandees, he added, "have not at last found their way back into the church. I only wonder they have been so long about it." "But be sure of that nothing but a new religious revolution, to sweep away the fragments that Henry the Eighth left after banqueting his courtiers, will drive them out again." Both Burnet and Warburton were bishops in the Anglican church, and not prejudiced against it.

We have thus shown, by the most unexceptionable witnesses, the moral deadness that prevailed at the moment that John Wesley came to the front as a religious reformer.

But what occasion was there for a religious reformer? Did not the Church of England still exist in all its splendor and wealth, and all its ritualistic amplitude? Did it not enjoy a monopoly of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and comprehend within its pale the men of education and culture? Very true; and it had existed for centuries, yet vice, immorality and profanity had become general and rampant in spite of the "savor of the salt" of the Anglican Church. The devil had glided into the fold, and fallen foul of the lambs, while the Church of England—the shepherd—dozed and drowsed at the door which it undertook to guard. This circumstance of sleeping while standing guard was of no consequence at all. All people had to do was to join the Church of England, and to leave it to transport them to heaven as a railroad train transports passengers from New Orleans to Boston, without the least bother to the passengers. The notion that the Anglican church, not religion, was to carry persons to heaven in a sleeping-car was the true cause of the moral paralysis and religious deadness which had afflicted England; but the gross fallacy of this theory had not been discovered by the Established Church. Orthodoxy was still wrapped up in self-complacency—still thanking God it was not like other men—publicans, extortioners and whoremongers.

There was no need of John Wesley, or any other religious reformer, so long as the Church of England was in existence. Such was the belief of the Anglican Church. Its actions corresponded with this belief. There was both truth and sarcasm in the language put into the mouth of the Anglican Church by Carlyle: "You incendiary brudels, and emotional, enthusiastic Christians, hold! say the orthodox. You should be quiet. Haven't we a church? Haven't we kept a church this long while—best-behaved of churches, which meddles with nobody—assiduously grinding its organs, reading its liturgies, homilies, and excellent old moral horn-books; so patiently as never church did? Can't we doff our hats to it—even look into it occasionally on a wet Sunday, and so serve both God and the devil?"

Did the prophet Isaiah ever eat at a railroad station? It certainly looks so, for how could he have described it so literally if he had not? "And he shall snatch on the right hand and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied."

Status of Little Children.

A perplexed "correspondent" entreats Dr. S. to reconcile David and the Master in reference to the condition of children. David having represented them as "shapen in iniquity and conceived in sin," while the Master said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven;" and, lest some doubt of his meaning should be suggested, he adds: "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Nashville Christian Advocate, June 8.

The confident theologian does not hesitate to encounter the contradictions utterances, and at the end seems persuaded that by the help of "our commentary," he has eased an anxious mind and brought the teachings into accord.

Now this question is not new, nor is it to be set at rest by the ad captandum style of the venerable editor. What does he mean, for instance, when he says: "They are subjects of natural depravity," and "in a gracious state of acceptance with God"? Does he mean that they are actually depraved, or that they may become "depraved"? Is the former, are they "in a state of gracious acceptance with God"? If the latter, will it not require some personal act to order that they become depraved? Is there anything in the Scriptures, I exclaim this belief that more is needed in order to salvation than to be in a state of gracious acceptance with God? We ask again by what authority Dr. S. says that, "whosoever babes" of such is the kingdom of heaven," he does not refer to their moral character, he simply means: "To them the kingdom of heaven—that is, the Christian dispensation or church—belongs;" and that when he adds: "Except ye be converted and become as a little child ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven," he had no reference to their spiritual state? Will the doctor tell us at what time the redemptive economy began to take effect? All of our text-books teach us that faith in the Messiah was the ground of acceptance from the date of the first promise, and that the merit of the atonement operated not less surely before than after the final act of crucifixion. Children were embraced in the promises made to the patriarchs, and as such were "in a gracious state of acceptance" then, and the actual sacrifice of Jesus does not place them in any new relation to the divine economy. Certainly we shall not be told that under the gospel or Christian dispensation a new church was established, and more ample spiritual benefits were conferred upon the involuntary recipients of recovering grace. In the eternal now-ness of the divine nature redemption was as perfectly consummated back of the boundary of our thought as it will be to us when all things shall be accomplished, and the Son himself shall be subject to the Father. No system is developed in the divine mind; succession is only known to the finite, and hence Judaism is Christianity incarnated, and Christianity is Judaism transfigured before us. That is a very narrow and material view of the atonement which finds in it motives by which the divine favor is inclined toward man, or regards it as operating less certainly or extensively upon its passive beneficiaries than did the ruin of the fall. That the Savior, as Dr. S. says, intended to rebuke the ambition of his hearers is evident, and yet the rebuke would have been pointless unless actual character was contrasted; and the language would have obviously misled his hearers if he had only intended them to understand that "children had a chartered right" to a place in the visible church. They had enjoyed this from the first, and by virtue of this charter they were entitled to receive the sign of circumcision. I can but think that it is a strange perversion of language and design to attribute so little significance to the words of Jesus. Are we to understand him as meaning nothing when he tells his disciples that unless they be converted and become as a little child they cannot enter the kingdom of heaven? We are willing to give respectful heed to all the commentaries, but we are not willing to have a venerable dogma or venerable dogma-makers thrust between us and the oracles of God.—W. H. W.

It has been decided that Moody shall spend next fall and winter in Baltimore, preaching on the Sabbath and once or twice in the week, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association of that city.

The Quarterly Review

The late General Conference, as may be seen by its published proceedings, considered the question of publishing a Quarterly Review for the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Not being in a condition to assume any financial responsibilities, owing to the embarrassments of the Publishing House, the whole matter was placed in the hands of the following select committee:

B. Craven, D. D., North Carolina; T. M. Finney, D. D., Missouri; R. A. Young, D. D., Tennessee; A. W. Wilson, D. D., Maryland; J. W. Hinton, D. D., Georgia; N. E. Lupton, LL. D., Alabama; H. Starke, LL. D., of Tennessee; C. W. Miller, D. D., Kentucky; C. K. Andrews, D. D., Mississippi; and E. A. Mood, D. D., Texas.

These gentlemen were deemed safe custodians of the great interest involved, and, being warm friends of the project, they are trying to meet the demands and expectations of their high trust. A unanimity of action was had in pursuance of the design of their appointment. The managers now call on the friends of the higher literature to assist the enterprise. The promoters and educated people of our church want such a periodical, for them such work will be provided. We will not do more ministry and intelligent membership in advance by indicating their desire for a review of the highest grade, and the managers will only seek a point as will be attainable to the most of the ministry.

We wish to say that the number in October or November of the year, if things clear from Washington, will not appear before the ... of January. Only ... thousand will be a guarantee of success. Subscriptions must be paid always in advance, and those will be no financial risk or failure. The terms will be moderate, certainly not over ... much under the price of similar periodicals generally. It will be about such a ... in size and style as the Southern Review, one of the oldest and ablest periodicals in America. It will be in bulk of nearly two hundred pages; each number will contain eight or ten original articles, besides the usual appendages of book notices, etc.

We need only a fair number of subscribers to make success certain.

The literary character of the Review can be sustained, for its managers are all charged with the duty of furnishing or obtaining contributions of the best grade. Their own reputation is involved in its character. We do not deem it egotistic or presumptuous to promise from our own ranks, and from our personal friends, articles which will meet the exactions of cultivated and critical minds.

Now we have nothing but gratitude to give for literary favors, but our plan contemplates payment for accepted articles when our enterprise is fully established.

Volunteer contributions are not sought even now, but will not be refused if they possess decided merit and are adapted to the Review. We are organizing a corps of writers, and will not depend upon impromptu and inferior articles.

There are two ways of sustaining such a periodical as we propose. The literary matter must be sought, or it must come from able writers, pre-pledged, who write con amore. Abundant culture exists within our bounds, and some of it we hope can be employed in this scheme.

The place of publication will be announced hereafter. Negotiations are now on hand and very favorable terms are offered for publishing.

The managers elected the undersigned editor, and assigned to him Georgia, South Carolina and Alabama as the field he is expected to canvass. This can only be done through the press and by letter, and by visiting the Annual Conference sessions.

The duty of the managing editor will be chiefly to superintend the presswork. In other respects he will be as the other managers and contributors. He is willing to do his share of the writing, and no more, unless the finances should justify the devotion of his entire attention to the Review. This is not expected.

We call on our brethren in the ministry, itinerant and local, to rally to this movement, so essential to our character and literary culture as a church. Send us your names at once, and as many of your friends as you can induce to help in this matter.

There are preachers enough in our connection to sustain handsomely a periodical of the highest rank. And where are all our graduates and cultured people? Effort at once and vigorously made will solve the problem now on hand. Payment will not be demanded until the time for the first issue arrives. We want the names of subscribers at once, that the preparation may be made for publication. We mean to prosecute this enterprise with energy, and to deserve, if not demand, success.

SONNETS ON PRAYER.

Lord what a change will in one short hour
Spent in thy presence, can avail to make
What heavy burdens from our hearts take
What parched fields refresh as with a shower
We rise, and all around us seems new-born
We rise, and all the distant and the near Stands forth in sunny outline, bright and clear.
We kneel, how weak—we rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong
Or others—that we are not always strong—
That we are ever overborne with care—
That we should ever weak or heartless be
Anxious or troubled—when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength, and courage are with thee?

Why are our hearts so full of yearning tenderness
For the loved ones from whom we can for such
By deeds or looks or gesture of kind speech
The spirit's inmost feelings to express?
When hearts are full of unexpressed distress
And love is reckoned inactive by Watching the soul's or body's agony,
Which human efforts fail to put to flight
(When I, as a cup, can receive to contain),
The overflowings of the heart is prayer.
Thy comforting the soul is sanctified—
The purest darts of sympathy do utter
And teach we cannot cease—Love and grace
Are with us—earth's picture to adorn

Living by the Gospel.

Having been requested by the stewards of my pastoral charge to preach a sermon on the duty of the church to support the ministry, I propose doing so on the present occasion. But in the performance of this duty I shall say nothing abusive or offensive; for the poorest way to get people to do right is to abuse them for doing wrong. People need encouragement often, admonition occasionally, but abuse never—as dense they are never benefited by abuse. They may sometimes deserve it.

I. In discoursing upon this subject to-day we will first consider the law of ministerial support.

The text is a clear statement of this law under the Christian dispensation.

The phrase "Even so" refers us to the thirteenth verse of this chapter: "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? And they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar?" Here is a statement of the same law under the Jewish dispensation. The reasonableness of this law in its application both to the Jewish priesthood and to the Christian ministry, is seen in the seventh and eleventh verses: "Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? Who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? Or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock?" "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?"

The statement of the text is that this law, in its application to the Christian ministry, was ordained by Jesus Christ. In other words, he appointed that this law of ministerial support, which he found in operation in the church, should be perpetuated under the Christian dispensation.

When Jesus sent out his twelve apostles to preach the gospel of the kingdom he said unto them: "Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves; for the workman is worthy of his meat."—Matthew x, 9, 10. Or, as Luke has it x, 7: "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

This is the principle upon which all just debts should be paid. The mechanic, the farm laborer, the teacher, the merchant, the doctor, the lawyer, the statesman—all classes of men should be compensated for their labors. The gospel minister is not an exception to this rule. His claim for support, while in the discharge of his duties, rests upon the same foundation. This is the law ordained by Christ, the great Head of the church.

2. We notice, in the second place, that the law is founded upon the principles of the case.

The commission to preach the gospel runs thus: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."—Matthew xxviii, 19, 20. No man can perform these duties efficiently and follow a secular vocation. To preach the gospel intelligently and intelligibly, one must "give attention to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine." He must "neglect not the gift that is in him," but must "meditate upon these things, and give himself wholly to them, that his profiting may appear to all."—First Timothy iv, 13-15.

The apostles acted upon the presumption that their whole time should be given to the duties of their calling. When "there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministration, the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables. Wherefore look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word."—Acts vi, 1-4.

It is in view of this same principle that Paul, in his Epistle to the Galatians (vi, 6) directs: "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." And this was authoritative, for he was divinely inspired to set things in order in the churches.

Paul several times resorted to tent-making for a livelihood; but this was necessary; and the waste of time and energy, while thus employed, was chargeable not to him upon whom the necessity was laid, but to those who laid the necessity upon him. So with modern ministers who are compelled to turn in whole or in part from their calling.

3. In the third place let us remember that the money needed for the support of the Christian ministry is for value received.

No nation of people, ancient or modern, has been known to be without some form of religion. No form of religion can exist without the expenditure of money in its support. The Christian religion is the cheapest as well as the purest form of religion that ever prevailed in human society. All the interests of man—national, social, domestic and personal—are subserved by the Christian religion. It advances him financially, intellectually and morally. These propositions are demonstrated by the history of the world. Besides, the gospel of Jesus Christ brings to the believing soul the forgiveness of sins, the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. This is salvation. It results in the witness of the Spirit, the peace of God that passeth all understanding, and the hope of heaven.

But to procure such blessings for humanity as are vouchsafed in the gospel it was necessary that a tremendous price should be paid. We are "bought with a price;" and that not "with corruptible things, as silver and gold, * * * but with the precious blood of Christ."—First Corinthians vi, 20; First Peter i, 18, 19. "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich."—Second Corinthians viii, 9.

It is conclusive, therefore, that this religion is worth all it costs us to maintain it, and ten thousand times more. Moreover, since it came from God, and is designed to promote the glory of God in the salvation of man, every dollar contributed to its support and propagation is a contribution to the welfare of humanity and to the glory of our heavenly Father. This is a test of our loyalty to the kingdom of heaven—a proof of our love for the Lord of life and glory.

4. But, we beg you to remember, finally, that God had an indisputable right to ordain this law, and to require us to comply with its provisions.

The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof. It is he that giveth us power to get wealth. We do not hold an irresponsible right to anything we possess. God has a right to levy a tax upon the property of the citizens of the world to support the institutions of his kingdom. He says to the church: "The nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish."—Isaiah lx, 12. And he is able to make good his word.

Every good citizen concedes to the government under which he lives the right to tax his property to support itself. If a man fails to pay his taxes the State proceeds to collect by force, with damages. It is difficult to circumvent a vigilant human government in the matter of taxes. It is more difficult to circumvent God. Let him try it who may. In some way or other God will cause his peculiarities and injustice to redound to his gain. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself."—Proverbs xi, 24, 25.

God sometimes teaches by mercies, sometimes by judgments. Misfortunes overtake us, property is wasted, reverses come upon us. The King's deputies are out. In these several forms, collecting delinquent taxes, with damages. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In the tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts."—Malachi iii, 8-12. This passage clearly teaches the utility of obedience to the law of ministerial support, ordained by Jesus Christ. And yet this law of God is ignored by many who call themselves Christians. Times are hard; but they might be worse, and perhaps will be if we do not "bring the tithes into the storehouse, as God commands us to do." Besides, the shortest and surest way out of all our troubles is here marked out for us.

There are perhaps few among us who do not annually consume on their lusts more than they are expected to pay into the treasury of the Lord. Retrenchment may be necessary, and doubtless is, but let us take care how we begin it in the house of God.

Old Paths—Again.

Mr. Editor: Besides "sky-scraping and buncombe" sermons, there is another evil habit into which our modern Methodist ministers are falling very rapidly—the laying aside of our grand hymn-book, and the taking up of that abominable mixture of nonsense and trash denominated "Gospel Hymns." It is true this cheap little affair contains some of our old hymns, but they are not used: they must give way to songs of mawkish sentimentality and incorrect construction.

A short time ago I attended a District Conference where a sentimental preacher began one of Sankey's jingling songs, and forthwith the other eight or ten preachers drew from their pockets each a copy of "Gospel Hymns." Very rarely during that District Conference was an old familiar hymn sung, and seldom was the hymn-book of the Methodist Episcopal Church South used. I think the preachers had left their copies at home. That District Conference was a failure. Not a good sermon was preached. The texts were all right, and were ably handled. But the hearts of the people were not touched. The sermons were all addressed, apparently, to sanctified hearers. Not a word of warning to sinners, but all of hope to those grounded and established in the faith. Is it any wonder that that District Conference was a failure, since none of the sanctified were there?

Go to a prayer meeting, and your ears are assailed with the poor poetry and vapid religion of "Gospel Hymns," so called. The old hymns, endeared to our hearts by a thousand sweet and holy associations; the hymns our mothers sang to us when we were children, or in their hours of anguish; the hymns our mothers sang in days of sorrow and gloom; the hymns we heard in days of "auld lang syne," when Methodism was "Christianity in earnest;" the hymns that we heard sung by the congregation as we knelt at the altar seeking pardon of the God we had so deeply wronged—these, all these, inspired and consecrated hymns are relegated to the past, and made to give place to such modern effusions as "Sweet Hour of Prayer," and "O to be Nothing" and other songs of even less merit. Occasionally a choir will condescend to give us the benefit of one of their choice selections, where all the parts are mixed and jumbled in the highest style of art, but without any soul or feeling whatever. Sense is made subservient to sound, and singing ceases to be praise to God most high. The worship is executed, as well as the music.

It used to be said that the Methodists sang their theology into the hearts of their converts. Such cannot be truthfully said of them now. Little by little they are yielding to the demands of worldly-minded people. Soon naught will be left of the old landmarks—the distinctive doctrines and usages of Methodism. Our Methodism is rapidly exchanging "the power" of godliness for "the form" thereof—and a sham form it is, too! A few more years of coldness, indifference, "respectability," and backsliding, without an adulutration of the discipline, and the change will be complete. We may have a million members then, but they will be poorly prepared for heaven. Numbers, not converts, seems to be what some modern Methodist preachers want. So they sing "Gospel Hymns," so called, and preach pretty sermons. And the church drifts along and drifts downward, dangerously near the cataract over which it must go unless there be a speedy change.

Let us return to the old paths. They lead to heaven.

LAYMAN.

Thy friend has a friend, and thy friend's friend has a friend; be discreet.—Talmud.

From the Work.

Clover Hill Station, Mississippi Conference.—Mr. Editor: I have purposed frequently to give some account of the work of God in my charge, but have deferred it from time to time, hoping and praying that I might be able to write something that would be of more general interest. Feeling, however, that there is cause for thankfulness to God for what he has done, and for the prospect of still greater blessings if we are faithful, I beg leave to present at least a brief statistical account of this interesting field: 1. It is located in Issaquena county, Miss., fronting on the Mississippi river. 2. We have one church-building—a very neat and comfortable edifice; a parsonage—not the finest, but as comfortable as most of the houses of my parishioners. 3. We have one organized society (forty-six members;) one Sunday school, well attended; a Bible class in connection with the Sunday school. Two members have removed by letter this year; five have been added to the church. I have now three appointments, each well attended. We have made sundry valuable improvements upon the church and parsonage this year. The people are kind to the preacher. We have a pleasant field, and earnestly hope to be useful. This is the garden-spot of Mississippi—this swamp country. May it prove the garden of the Lord. Pray for us.

Your brother,

H. J. Harris.

Montgomery District Conference.—Mr. Editor: The District Conference for the Montgomery district, Alabama Conference, was held in Opelika, Ala., July 26 and 27, 1878. Bishop Keener presided. J. H. Harris was elected secretary. A pretty full attendance. The condition of some of the charges shows signs of improvement; others give evidence of no change for the better.

Every station in the district but one has a good, comfortable house in which to worship God. Sad, sad, but true, that one station in the Montgomery district should have an inferior church.

E. T. Glenn, B. M. Washburne, J. H. Harris and Rev. W. M. Boswell were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. R. T. Davis and Isaac Hill, alternates. Tuskegee was selected as the place for holding the next district Conference.

J. H. Harris, Sec.

Note.—The editor is truly obliged to the secretary for the above model report.

Ranges Circuit, Louisiana Conference.—Mr. Editor: The Lord has powerfully blessed us on this circuit during this year, and especially during the last month has his power been manifest to convict, convert and sanctify. We have just closed a series of meetings, which have resulted in about fifteen conversions, and about twenty have entered into the experience of perfect love during these exercises. At these meetings we made holiness a specialty, and the power of God was manifest in every service. The work is still progressing. May God speed the day when holiness shall be the theme of every tongue.

Your brother in Christ,

J. L. P. Shepard.

Mr. Editor: On Friday night before the third Sabbath in July we commenced a meeting at Spring Creek camp ground, which resulted in great good to the church. The Lord was present in sanctifying power, and many witnesses rose up to testify that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin. Bro. S. H. Cooper was with us, and preached Jesus as a complete Savior, able to save to the uttermost now, with more power than usual. Bros. McPhatter and Warner were with us. Holiness was the theme in the pulpit and out of it.

J. W. Hearn, P. C.

It is not luck but labor that makes men. "Luck," says an able writer, "is ever waiting for something to turn up; labor, with keen eye and strong will, always turns up something." Luck hears a bell and wishes the postman would bring him news of a legacy; labor turns out at six, and with busy pen or ringing hammer lays the foundation of a competence. Luck whines; labor whistles. Luck relies on chance; labor on character. Luck slips downward to self-indulgence; labor strikes boldly upward, and aspires to independence."

Maxims of Success.—The celebrated Dr. James Syme used to give his students the following rules to insure success in practice: 1. Never look surprised at anything. 2. Before stating your opinion of a case on your second visit, ascertain whether your previous directions have been complied with. 3. Never ask the same question twice.

An American lady was heard to express her dissatisfaction at the female portraits in this year's London Academy. "I shall wait," was her decision, "until I go to Rome. I guess I'll have my picture done by one of the old masters."

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss,' etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. LUCY M. TISDALE.

Died, near Omega, Upshur county, Texas, in the fifty-fourth year of her age, Mrs. Lucy M. Tisdale, consort of Samuel Tisdale, Esq., late of Alabama.

For sixteen months she had been confined to her bed of suffering, yet she bore her afflictions with that patience and resignation which so eminently adorned her character throughout life. From her girlhood her progress in piety and in all the Christian graces was conspicuous. She had sounded all the depths and knew the trials of a Christian's warfare on earth, and was well acquainted with the weaknesses of our frail humanity, and, if possible, she grew wiser and more intelligent as she grew older. Out of the wounds of her own experience gushed a tide of sympathy and Christian charity that thinketh no evil. To her the tears of penitence washed away the stains of error. A sequel to so faultless and walk so blameless made her beloved by all who knew her, and a shining light in the sphere in which she moved. All could bear witness with what patience, earnestness, consistency and diligence she labored to make them better. To the young of her own sex in particular was she forgiving and motherly, a teacher and an example.

Her faith was simple, practical, rested upon the rock.

For many years to the writer of this tribute she was a friend [illegible] being her physician, it was [illegible] privilege to be intimate with her [illegible] tions of social, religious and [illegible] all of which I ever found her to be the same pure-minded, devoted, loving and Christian friend, yet in the midst of her family and around her fireside the beauty and loveliness of her character shone the most brightly. Her habitual cheerfulness and reasonableness, her hospitality and [illegible] added a charm and grace that ever made her house the home to [illegible] tarry.

For several days before her death she suffered but little pain [illegible] rational, frequently [illegible] not converse. To her surviving friends this was a great [illegible].

For many years she had expressed a wish that God would take her [illegible] at her death, [illegible] God granted her desire. Eighteen years ago I left her in Alabama, [illegible] to see her again in this life, but God knew all things for us, and I was [illegible] friend's cherished wish [illegible] letter. About six months ago her husband came to Texas with a hope that [illegible] life might be prolonged, and nearly her [illegible] words, upon our meeting, were, "We [illegible] have come to Texas in time to [illegible] die." And what a [illegible] commenced and the [illegible] No tears to [illegible] anxieties [illegible] of her mind [illegible] hope a blessed hope, [illegible] heard her so often [illegible] rejoice and sing over. Death [illegible] her features, [illegible] an [illegible] into a sweet slumber, her [illegible] spirit passed away.

A few moments before she [illegible] her last breath she [illegible] as if [illegible] of [illegible] surprise, as [illegible] thing was being revealed to her, or as if she [illegible] of something that astonished her. It was [illegible] a few moments, when it [illegible] into a [illegible] seraphic smile of joy and [illegible] which death left upon her face, [illegible] to greet us with in the better world. [illegible] king and sublime was this manifestation of a heavenly vision that all who surrounded her bed were struck with solemn awe and astonishment.

Jesse C. Melton was born in Chesterfield district, S. C., June [illegible], 1818. When he was quite young his parents moved to Union county, N. C., where he was raised to manhood. He joined the Methodist Church in early boyhood, and continued a member of the same until his death, which occurred at his home, in Hillsboro county, Miss., July [illegible], 1878. Bro. Melton was married to Miss Theressa Durlin, of Henry county, Ga., November 22, [illegible]. He moved to Mississippi in 1841, and settled in Holmes county, near Sweetwater church, where he held membership as long as he lived. He was prominent in the church, filling the offices of steward and class-leader as long as his health and age would justify. He was able to attend church but little for several years before he died, having been stricken with paralysis. But when he was able to be among his brethren at church he was looked upon as a spiritual Chester. He not only enjoyed the comforts of religion himself, but had strong desires for others to enjoy the same. He was at all times willing to work for the church, and give of his means to support for institutions. He loved the church, her sweet communion, solemn vows, her hymns of love and praise. And oh! what prayers. He was gifted in prayer as few men are. Humble, fervent, spiritual earnest, he had confidence with God. The hard sinner would bow and tear under his powerful appeals at a throne of grace, and the good that has been done through his prayers eternity alone will reveal. His religion was not of a gloomy character, though, like other Christians, he had his dark hours, but he was firm in the principles of religion steadfast, immovable. His disease was of a nature sometimes to cloud his mind, and in fact impair it; but when spoken to on the subject of religion he understood it all. The only he never gave up until his mind was so impaired that he could not perform it, that was family prayer. He believed that something was wrong with a man's religion if he did not keep up a family altar. I have been with him in his afflictions, and seen him happy. Religion supported him under the trials of life, and grandly sustained him in death, and caused him to triumph.

Being unconscious for several days [illegible] his decease, he said nothing about [illegible] But when the time came he was found [illegible] pared. As he went down in death [illegible] shone for a little path. The light of [illegible] broke in upon his happy spirit; and [illegible] he could not say, "Wife and children [illegible] going home, to die no more," yet he [illegible] his finger and pointed up to heaven [illegible] home of the soul: "Meet me there." [illegible] thus, in bright hope of heaven, this [illegible] God died, leaving behind him a bright [illegible] mony that it is not vain to serve God.

She was [illegible] and feebleness extreme for some time before death, yet she bore her afflictions and infirmities with marked Christian patience [illegible] resignation. She said but little in [illegible] moments in reference to the [illegible] peels, but previously she spoke often, [illegible] expressing an unfaltering [illegible] in [illegible] through her blessed Savior. It was the privilege of the writer to converse with her [illegible] short time, some weeks before her death, [illegible] and we were impressed with her Christian [illegible] and sincerity—so quiet, so gentle, so unassuming. She has passed from the [illegible] and sorrows of this life to the home of [illegible] blessed. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

H. H. Reynolds.

Died, near Shubuta, Miss., Ju[illegible] 2, 1878, little Edna Rutherford, only surviving daughter of W. H. and M. J. Rather. Edna was an amiable child—so much so that she gained the love and affection of all whom she met or was associated with. Her parents, who are truly devoted to her, and upon her the affections centered. Edna was but seven years old, yet she possessed all the traits of character which are required to lay the foundation of a virtuous and womanly life. Still it pleased our heavenly Father to remove her to a better world before the beauties were stained by sin and corruption.

The smaller Republic of Bolivia appears to be following the lead of Colombia in asserting the supremacy of the civil over the ecclesiastical authority. The Bishop of La Paz has drawn up a protest against the action of the Bolivian Assembly, in which he states the provisions of the constitution now in force as follows: "The project of law has just been passed proclaiming religious toleration; the incompatibility of the sacerdotal character with the position of deputy or senator; the tacit suppression of ecclesiastical jurisdiction; the necessity of the exequatur for the validity and enforcement of acts emanating from the holy see; and, finally, that clause which makes bishops amenable to the Supreme Court of the republic. These reforms," he continues, "exceed the powers of a political assembly, and compromise the integrity of the Roman Catholic and apostolic religion, unanimously and always professed in Bolivia. Neither do they correspond with the Christian sentiments of the representatives of the nation, nor with the true interests of the country."

A similar state of affairs exists in both Ecuador and Venezuela, and if words mean anything, it would seem that the supremacy of the church in the governments of the countries of South America is becoming a thing of the past. Catholics should hail this as a blessing, but they either will not or cannot see that it is but a triumph of the principles of Free Masonry.—Independent.

England and Russia.

The treaty of Berlin is signed, says the Independent, and the signatory powers have divided the spoil. Russia has got what she at first demanded—Bessarabia to the Danube, and a good slice of Armenia; Bulgaria, Eastern Roumelia, Roumania, Servia, Montenegro, Herzegovina and Bosnia become independent, or semi-independent, under Christian governors, and have their boundaries rectified. Austria gets a bit of land and a protectorate besides; Greece is promised a little more territory; and, most surprising of all, England, which went into the Congress the champion of high moral ideas, comes out with Cyprus ceded to her and the virtual protectorate of Asiatic Turkey.

The result, for aught we can see, is as auspicious as could be expected. War is averted, the decent protection of Christians in Turkey is assured, and whether government of the country under Turkish rule seems to be assured. It will be impossible to persuade the British people that Beaconsfield has not done well for Great Britain and for humanity. He has given English diplomacy a prestige and England a confessed right of influence in the East which she has never had before.

It is this English side of the question, Turkey as Anglicized, that is of interest almost exclusively to us. Great Britain is the most beneficent power on the globe. With all her faults, with the most ex...ctions that can be made on her grasping character in India or Africa, wherever England plants her foot there follow civilization, good government, peace and plenty. It is England that colonizes what is now half the world that has been wrested from barbarism. Nearly all North America, Australia, South Africa are the trophies of her enterprise. India and Burmah were never so happy and peaceful as under her sway. By whatever means attained, England's predominance in the government of Turkey is a promise of honest government and renewed prosperity.

The government of Turkey has been the most blighting on the surface of the earth. In ancient times Asiatic Turkey teemed to overflowing with a rich population. Wide wastes now covered with danger of life by the traveler which astonish him with the frequent ruins of [illegible] wealthy cities, whose [illegible] colonnades and baths and [illegible] are haunted now only by wild [illegible] Under Ottoman [illegible] and [illegible] from [illegible] to [illegible] in the [illegible] which [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Golden Vials Full of Odors.

In the gorgeous vision of the creation of the Apocalypse prayer is mentioned as connected with the opening of the book that was "written within and on the back side, and sealed with seven seals." None but the Lamb could open and read that book, and in the opening of it the prostrate and adoring living creatures, and the four-and-twenty elders, "have every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints." The same lesson is presented in another scene representing the opening of the seventh seal, in which "another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne." The symbolical import of incense was recognized by the worshipers in the olden time: "Let my prayer be set forth before thee as incense, and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice."

In the vision it is the prayers of saints which the incense represents. We may well believe that no other prayers ever ascend before God so as to influence the arm of God, and so as to bring blessings down upon the world. The cry of penitence is heard, the prayer of the publican for mercy is answered, but as an intercessory power, and as a means of opening the gospel to the world, it is "the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous man" that availeth much. The prayers of saints are in those golden vessels. They are diffused as an aroma about the throne, and are precious and acceptable to him who sits upon it. It is in the degree that men are holy that their prayers are recognized in heaven, and that they are interwoven with the dispensations of mercy and salvation. The prayers of saints are ever present, and are intimately connected with the opening of the book and the loosening of the seals, both in the sphere of providence and grace.

The value of prayer is exhibited in the preciousness of the incense made of the most expensive and fragrant materials, and in the costly golden vessels filled with odors. Prayer thus represented is no common or mean commodity. The opulence of the vessel indicates the richness of its contents. There is nothing about the throne, save the Lamb himself, that seems to be more esteemed. The harpers in the same hands with the golden vials, and yet the song must follow the answered prayer. "There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour," and that silence seems not to have been broken until much incense with the prayers of all saints, was offered upon the golden altar. The seven angels, with trumpets ready, were waiting, but not one was sounded until "the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand." We may not penetrate in detail the import of these stupendous events, the trumpets and the seals, but the connection of prayer with them is clear. God's praying saints on earth are among the most conspicuous and potent actors in these mighty movements which are directed from the throne of God. The book is not opened, the seals are not loosened, the trumpets are not sounded without prayer. God, angels, the living creatures, the symbolical elders, the elements, all seem to wait for the incense of prayer from the golden vials.

We might further gather from this imagery that the prayers of saints are carefully preserved, and their power is felt long after they are offered. They are treasured up in the golden vials, kept and not lost. These golden vials are so many depositories of life and mercy, vigilantly guarded by the golden-crowned elders. The precious vessels are full of odors, to be set free as burning incense when occasion calls. Prayer, in Heaven's charge, will keep. The answer may be long after the praying saint has passed to his reward. If the prayer of a saint, and according to the will of God, it must sooner or later ascend as incense, and be offered upon the golden altar. These golden vials are many—the prayers of every branch of Christ's church on the earth, and of the individual saints of every church—but they all reach their common destination, and blend in one cloud of incense before the throne. What a single saint has contributed to the grand result we may never know, but each prayer helps to open the book, and to break the seals of salvation to a lost world. As there are no individual discords in the song, and as the harps are touched by many hands with a perfect diapason, so there is oneness and accord in the prayers of saints. The precious gums may be gathered from a thousand different trees, and may be compounded by a thousand different hands, but all are blended in one cloud of burning fragrance.

These vials of prayer are vials of mercy. The same vision that tells us of the golden vials full of odors has also its vials of wrath. How much the world is indebted to the prayers of saints for God's forbearance and long suffering we cannot now tell. We do know that God heard Abraham's prayer, and that the presence of ten righteous men in Sodom would have saved it. But for the prayers of the saints that are in the world the divine judgments would be far less restrained than they are; and but for these prayers it is not unlikely that the day of wrath would have come long ago. The vials of wrath are filled by the wickedness of men. The ungodly are treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath. They are, by their unbelief and disobedience, tempting God, and inviting their own ruin. One of the same four living creatures, who at one time had a harp and a golden vial full of odors, is at last represented as delivering to the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God. When prayer has done its work for the world—its work of mercy—then wrath will come upon men to the uttermost. The vials full of the sweet odors of love and compassion, and freighted with the incense of life to the lost, give place at length to those of doom. If men do not repent, if prayer for them prove in vain, then the vials of wrath must be poured out.

Meanwhile the vials of mercy—the prayers of saints—are before the throne. These prayers bring blessings upon all. They stay the hand of justice, they prolong the sinner's space for repentance, they enrich the church with copious showers of grace, they open the gospel to those who are in the shadow of death. It is not a vain thing to wait on the Lord—for a whole church to unite in special prayer. The prayers of saints are in the golden vials full of odors; and the fragrant incense, rising from tens of thousands of pure hearts, ascends and fills the heavenly place. Doubtless the new song has swelled afresh from the hosts above on this account, and we may look confidently for the outpouring of mercy upon the fields of our earthly Zion.

Much Abused.

The late General Conference has been much abused, and also much vindicated. We have thus far published nothing on either side of the question beyond occasional notes during the session, and written in connection with the proceedings. We have not felt that there was occasion for strictures on the one hand, or for extravagant commendation on the other. We believe the Conference was generally wise in what it did, and also in what it declined to do. As time passes, it is probable that those who were most dissatisfied will form better opinions, and accord a just estimate to the Conference and its results. Dr. John E. Edwards, writing in the Richmond Christian Advocate, states the matter fairly. We quote as follows:

What ought the General Conference to have done that it did not do? Personally, I should have been gratified, for the sake of the highest efficiency of the pastorate, and for the sake of common sense, as it strikes my mind, to have seen the arbitrary limitation of the pastoral term abolished, and to have seen the proviso, limiting the number of appointments allowable in a presiding elder's district, stricken out; as also the four years' limitation to the term of service on the same district by the same presiding elder. It would suit my personal convictions of what, in my judgment, would promote the highest efficiency of our ministry and pastorate to allow our Bishops, year after year, to make such a distribution of the preachers of an Annual Conference to the several charges, circuits, stations, missions, districts, colleges, agencies, church papers, evangelistic labors, as in their godly judgment (by and with all the light and information they could acquire touching these several appointments) should be deemed wisest and best for the whole field of ministerial work under their annual review. But the General Conference, as a body, differed with me on these subjects.

If the talent and ability of the General Conference, in this particular instance, were in the keeping of the silent members; and if, as is asserted by some writers on the subject, the Conference was a failure, is not the failure as chargeable to the account of those timid, modest men, as to the blatant talkers who were every day on the floor? Then, after all, did not the thinking, quiet, modest men preside at the helm, and pilot the ship in the storm by their wise and considerate votes? Did they not prevent the Conference from making a new Discipline, out and out? Did they not prevent an entire change in our whole church polity and economy? Would matters have been materially different if those who did not speak had spoken?

It is time that some one should say a word in defense of this much-abused Conference. Its disorder has been immensely exaggerated. Some great and good men are very nervous and irritable, and consequently fault-finding. Some great and good men are not above their resentments when they cannot have things in their own way. It is hard sometimes for the best of men to brook disappointments. Disappointment sometimes vents itself in sporetic retaliation, in one way or another. I have been in a good many General Conferences, and I say it in good faith, that, take it all in all, the General Conference in May, 1878, held in Atlanta Ga., was one of the most pleasant, profitable and wisely conservative Conferences I have ever attended.

Is the church going to suffer greatly for the want of more Bishops? Was not an examination and readjustment of our publishing interests an indispensable necessity? Could this have been done without the General Conference? The interchange of fraternal greetings was a grand thing. Many verbal changes were made in our Discipline, which will be found of great advantage to us in our administration. Outsiders who criticise the Conference would have come to different conclusions, most probably, had they been in the body; and insiders have but little right to complain if they were great men and did not speak, or modest men and abashed into silence. It was a first-rate General Conference, albeit it did not do all that I personally would have been pleased to have seen done.

Weakness and Strength.

The Christian experience of the world is in perfect accord with the statement of the apostle: "For when I am weak, then am I strong." This striking paradox contains the philosophy of all holy living and sublime Christian effort. The plan of salvation grounds upon the idea of human weakness. The gospel everywhere represents man as "lost," "dead," "corrupt" and "blind." Christ's coming and incarnation was Heaven's love accommodating itself to human helplessness. Every day of trial and night of solitude, every sorrow he bore and stripe received, every pang he suffered and groan uttered, were a divine tribute to man's pitiable weakness. This idea is fundamental in the plan of redemption. But there is another of absolute importance in the practical working of this plan—the personal consciousness of spiritual weakness. Man's moral frailty is a dreadful fact, but of it he may have little or no conscious realization. Disease may be in the system, secretly but surely producing physical decay and death, and the individual not be aware of it; nor until apprised of danger will he make application for medical counsel and treatment. So with our spiritual natures. Though it be a solemn fact that we are spiritually diseased and dying, without power or means of recovery, yet not until we become conscious of the dreadful reality will we apply to the great Physician to heal and save.

The consciousness of spiritual infirmity makes us prayerful; and as we pray so we live. Prayer means weakness, dependence. If we had no sense of helplessness we would never pray. And, further, our prayers, in earnestness and importunity, are in exact proportion to our felt weakness. Those who pray most feel weakest. Those who pray with the greatest earnestness have the most vivid realization of desperate spiritual necessity. On the contrary, dull, dry, spiritless, faithless prayers indicate how little is our appreciation of the soul's needs. The dying want of the church, in pulpit and pew, is an overwhelming sense of human helplessness. We are tempted to trust too much in man. Our strength is only weakness and failure, while our weakness is the source of strength and victory.

The inconsistencies and failings of Christians are infallibly traceable to an over-confidence in self. So long as there is distrust of self there will be trust in Christ. Whatever the sin that doth so easily beset us, we may avoid or conquer with "the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." But, however fair our promises, and honest our purposes, and earnest our endeavors, if puffed up with our sufficiency of strength and decision of character, we will surely fall and fail. Strength is born of conscious weakness. The weakest are the most consistent, because most prayerful. The constant prayer of the watchful Christian is:

"Hold me—I'm weak, I fall!
Be thou mine all in all."

When Peter kept his eye upon Jesus, and trusted his strength, he walked upon the waves with a confident step; but when his own self-sufficiency was over-estimated he began to sink. Safe Christian walking is dependent upon divine support and guidance.

Our successes and achievements as personal workers for Christ are proportionate to our weakness. Spiritual victories are not to the strong. The God of battles gives triumph to the weak, that the glory may be his. He makes one to chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight. This is the law of heroic spiritual conquest. If dependent upon their own strength, the apostles could never have planted successfully the gospel, nor would its glad acclaim ever have been heard beyond the limits of Judea. But out of their obscurity and weakness God ordained strength. The noblest representatives of the pulpit have illustrated this truth. Though learned and eloquent, they were esteemed utterly impotent without the Spirit's power. Genius unaided can never make a successful pulpit. But a few talents baptized with the Spirit will make it a throne of light. The story is told of a brilliant young minister preaching by appointment before some council of his church. His manner was self-important, but his genius failed him, and his mortification was extreme. A godly veteran of the ministry kindly said to him: "Oh! my young brother, had you ascended the pulpit with the spirit you descended, you might have descended as you ascended." Faith in human weakness which begets faith in divine strength is the grand leverage of the pulpit. Neither would ever stand before his congregation until he felt Christ with him to strengthen and enlighten. Like the apostle to the Gentiles, he felt: "When I am weak, then am I strong." So it must be with every child of grace.

The Roman Catholics and the Freedmen.

The Independent, in an article on "The Church and the Negro," says:

A great deal has been said about what the Roman Catholics are doing among the freedmen, and the apprehension has been often expressed that they were going to lead the mass of the colored population away from the Protestant churches. The fear has been fed by the unbounded boastings of the Roman Catholics, and by some extravagant estimates which have been made of the conversions that have been effected under their preaching. One report fixes the amount spent upon the freedmen at $500,000, and obscurely estimates the number of scholars in the schools at from 150,000 to 500,000, with 10,000 young men in the higher schools and seminaries. Nothing approaching a confirmation of these estimates has been brought to our notice. We have carefully examined the Roman Catholic papers with reference to this subject for a year past, and have been able to glean from them only the most barren record of facts and isolated movements. Bishop English, of South Carolina, began operations among the negroes of his diocese soon after its erection, in 1820, and a school for free colored girls and the religious instruction of female slaves was begun there about 1830. Another mission was organized in Hutchinson's Island about 1850. Provision has existed in Maryland for the religious instruction of colored people in Roman Catholic churches from time immemorial. The Jesuits have taught the catechism at Frederick since 1810, and a colored sisterhood has existed in Baltimore since 1829. In Louisiana the Roman Catholic has enjoyed the prestige of being the popular church. No results have been perceived from these and similar isolated labors to extend outside of their immediate sphere of operations.

A formidable enterprise was begun seven years ago for the conversion of the colored population through the agency of an English training school, which was to fill the country with colored priests. This is the scheme concerning which the most nervous apprehension has been felt, and which it has been feared would revolutionize the religious condition of the greater part of the South. The last year's report of the training school is before us. It has had forty-two students, three of whom have come to labor in America and four in India, and returns now thirty-three students and six lay brothers. Of the four missionaries who were sent out in connection with the opening of the institution, three, of whom one has died, have been laboring in Charleston, S. C., for two years, and report for that time 196 baptisms, with ten persons under instruction for baptism, and about one hundred persons admitted to their first communion. This is the only mission opened in South Carolina; and this is the only report that this dreaded propagandist monster has to make of its work. What we have mentioned, with the notice of the reception of fifty colored Catholics at Providence, R. I., comprises all the facts and all the detailed statements bearing upon this subject that we have been able to discover. We believe that, if the Roman Catholics really had facts to prove that they have made the progress they claim to have made, they would not hesitate to publish them conspicuously. As they fail to produce them, we are contented to believe, for the present, that they are doing no more than their fair share of the work, if so much, and receiving no more than their share of the conversions.

The British Wesleyan Conference.

The Wesleyan Conference, says the New York Christian Advocate, was opened in Bradford, Yorkshire, England, on Tuesday morning, July 23. After filling up the Legal Hundred, Rev. Dr. Rigg was elected president by 361 out of 418 votes cast. In the evening the first open session was held for the reception of fraternal delegates. After impressive devotional exercises, Bishop Thomas Bowman, and Dr. E. O. Haven, chancellor of Syracuse University, were first introduced by Rev. M. C. Osborn, secretary, and most cordially received by the president, who heartily shook hands with them as he said, in true English and American style, and pronounced a high eulogy upon them personally as he introduced them to the Conference. The address of the General Conference was read and listened to with great interest, the statistical statements in it evidently producing a great impression upon the audience. Bishop Bowman and Dr. Haven then addressed the Conference, and in spite of earnest wishes that no time in applauding, the "Hear, hears," and other demonstrations of applause, were frequent throughout both speeches. Each speaker confined himself to half an hour, speaking without notes, and it is evident that they felt constrained to say but little of what they desired to say for want of time. Their reception was abundantly enthusiastic.

Rev. Dr. Clarke, of Savannah, Ga., was introduced as a representative of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and read a carefully prepared speech, highly eulogistic of England, her political institutions and her literature. He was cordially received.

Rev. W. McMullen then spoke in behalf of the Irish Conference. The address of the Conference having been read, he expressed great joy at the union of the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists into one body, now known as the Methodist Church of Ireland.

After him Rev. Matthew Lelièvre, a representative from France, read an address in French, which was interpreted by Rev. James Heeart, sentence by sentence. It was full of encouragement, and particularly rejoiced in the republican government of France, which was securing a larger degree of religious liberty. This sentiment was applauded.

The devotional exercises of the Conference are well attended, and are very earnest, and the prospects of a profitable session were good.

The Difference.

Regeneration is the beginning of sanctification by the seed of the divine life dropped from the skies, the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost. This new principle wars with the lingering remnants of the carnal nature till it is reinforced by the special energy of the Spirit, through faith in Christ, and is enabled to cast out all antagonisms to the love of God. "Perfect love casteth out all fear that hath torment." The beauty of this view is that, instead of making regeneration and sanctification two fundamentally different matters, it makes them differ not in nature, but in degree only.

Regeneration is a lower and mixed spiritual life, while entire sanctification is higher and unmixed. The principle—love to God—is the same in each, but in the latter is fills the entire being, to the exclusion of every opposite feeling. Hence love is the principle and element of holiness. Love inspired is holiness begun; and love perfected is holiness completed. Love is perfect where it engrosses all the soul's present powers and casts out all that is contrary to its nature. A soul made perfect in love may have a larger capacity for love to-morrow than to-day, and thus with each succeeding day forever. There is no limit to the degree of love.

"O love of Jesus! blessed love!
So will it ever be,
Time cannot bedim thy wondrous gross,
No, nor eternity."

The spiritual life consists of two parts—a death unto sin and a life unto God. The first is destructive, the second is constructive. The first goes on till there is nothing antagonizable to love to be destroyed. When that point is reached, then, in the language of John, is the believer "made perfect in love." To the positive or constructive work there is no limit in this world nor in the world to come. Hence Faber truthfully sings:

"And those who love God cannot love him by measure,
For their love is an hunger to love him still further."

Dr. Boardman's Studies in Christ's Memoir.

The Rev. George Muller, who has just returned to England, has traveled about 19,000 miles in his American tour, lasting ten and a half months. In that period he preached 207 times, leaving 108 invitations unaccepted for want of time. In September he leaves England for a tour on the Continent of Europe.

Anxiety is the poison of life—the parent of many sins, and of more miseries. Why, then, allow it, when we know that all the future is guided by a Father's hand?—Blair.

Rev. Father Chiniquy.

This gentleman, says the Pacific Methodist of August 2, preached in Calvary Presbyterian church on last Sunday night, and delivered a lecture in the Metropolitan Temple on Tuesday night. His Sunday night discourse was concerning his conversion and his trials after his conversion, and the Tuesday night lecture was a warning to Protestants against the wiles of Catholicism as opposed to the American system of education. We heard both addresses, and were profoundly impressed with the earnestness of the speaker and with the awful facts so authoritatively announced.

Monsieur Chiniquy is a Canadian Frenchman, and was bred a Catholic. In early manhood he was inducted into holy orders, and became a zealous and distinguished priest of the Roman Church. The story of his conversion, as told by himself, has a thrilling interest to all Christians who understand the working of the Holy Spirit. His experience had the Methodist class meeting in it. The voice of the Spirit of God to an earnest and honest soul is a mysterious and wonderful thing, and in his case there was almost as much to marvel at as in the conviction and conversion of St. Paul. He was for twenty-five years a priest, full of zeal for the welfare of the great church, pursuing all his energies and influence to propagate her doctrines and extend her power. Twenty-five years ago he was chosen to lead in a great movement looking to the destruction of American liberties of Church and State. In the prosecution of this work he organized a system of Catholic colonies in Illinois, which were to grow in volume, and in the course of years it was expected that they would occupy the great valley of the Mississippi, and finally dominate the whole government. This scheme has been interfered with by the conversion of Father Chiniquy to the Protestant way of thinking, and now he is as zealous for Christ as he was once for the church. He rejoices in the fact that through his efforts some twenty-five thousand of his countrymen, once Catholics, are now followers of Christ. He is a man of learning and powerful conviction, and in his native tongue is accounted an orator of high order. His charge that the Catholic Church is arrayed in deadly hostility to our free institutions is not new, but his intimacy with her insidious modes of attack and her persistency enables him to speak with authority, and gives weight to his utterances.

Yellow Fever.

The deaths in this city from yellow fever, for the twenty-four hours ending at twelve M. on Wednesday, August 14 were 24. New cases for the same period, 131. Total number cases to this date, [illegible]. Total number of deaths to this date, 1,[illegible]. With the past week there has been a considerable increase, but the mortality in proportion to the number of cases is no[illegible] less than it was a week or two ago. The Board of Health makes full reports daily; and while there may be occasional errors in reference to the number of cases, the report of deaths is as nearly accurate as possible. The condition is more likely to be over than understated, as experienced physicians are sometimes liable to mistake other types of disease for yellow fever.

Rev. John Hannon, pastor of St. Charles Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church South, was taken with yellow fever on Monday morning. At this writing Wednesday afternoon he is doing well, with every prospect of a speedy recovery.

Dr. S. E. Hale, with whom Brother Hannon is boarding, is also down with the fever. His has been a severe case, but he is better at this time with promise of a favorable result.

ATTACKED BY INDIANS.—The Missionary News Item of July 25, says the Texas Christian Advocate, tells of the recent escape of Rev. J. E. Tucker, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, from the Indians. He was on his way to an appointment. When between Menardville and Brady City he discovered two Indians in the bushes about two hundred yards in advance, one mounted and the other on foot. Seeing they were discovered, the Indians fled. Promptly raising his Winchester, the preacher aimed at the Indian on horseback, who was leaning over the opposite side of his horse to evade the shot. The shot was a true one, and the Indian, with a yell, reeled on his horse. The other Indian handed him something, which the latter applied to the wound, and both then treated at a lively gait. Bro. Tucker went to the spot and found quite a pool of blood. The preacher then quietly proceeded to his appointment.

Is it a crime for a Methodist who settles in the South to join the Southern Methodist Church? Some solemn warnings are printed in official papers which imply crime. Our own impression is that the Southern branch is a part of the same Methodist Episcopal Church—no more another church than another Annual Conference is. Further, "a little flock" shut up by itself may be less influential than its members would be if they joined the more numerous body. A Northern Methodist who joins the Southern Methodist Church will have his fair share of influence. A dozen men set apart in a church by themselves—virtually protesting against the larger body as heretical—may have just no influence at all. Both the whole matter is one for private judgment and conscience.—Methodist.

As the error of a moment makes the sorrow of a life, so one good deed done is a joy forever.

Golden Wedding.

If the lives of our venerable brother and sister, Rev. J. G. Jones and wife, should be spared until the thirty-first of this month their family and friends propose to unite with them in celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. Since the death of Rev. Barnabas Pipkin Bro. Jones is the oldest member of the Mississippi Conference, having been connected with it, without intermission, since December, 1821. He has filled all the offices in the itinerancy below that of Bishop with acceptability and usefulness, and in the prime of manhood was one of the leading revivalists of our Conference. His credentials as a minister have been preserved pure and unspotted for more than half a century. We are authorized to invite their friends of all classes to call on them at their home in Port Gibson, Miss., August 31, 1878, from ten A. M. to eight P. M., to bestow their congratulations and unite with them in thanksgiving to the Giver of all good for blessing them with such a long and happy married life. Those who cannot see them in person can express their congratulations and well-wishes by writing to them.

Edison's Early Life.

This remarkable inventor, of whose public has recently heard so much, is still a young man, having been born in 1847, at Milan, Erie county, Ohio. His paternal ancestry has been in Massachusetts. She was finely educated, literary and ambitious, and had been a teacher in Canada. Young Edison's only schooling came from his mother, who taught him spelling, reading, writing and arithmetic. He lost his mother in 1868, but his father, a man of vigorous constitution, is still living, aged seventy-four. When he was seven years old his parents removed to Port Huron, Michigan. The boy disliked mathematics, but was fond of reading, and before he was twelve years old the had read the "Penny Cyclopedia," "Hume's History of England," and Gibbon's "Rome." He early took to the railroad, and became a newsboy on the Grand Trunk line, running into Detroit. Here he had access to a library, which he undertook to read through; but, after skimming over many hundred miscellaneous books, he adopted the plan of selecting subjects of interest to him. Becoming interested in chemistry, he bought some chemicals and fitted up a laboratory in one of the cars. An unfortunate combustion of phosphorus one day came near setting fire to the train, and the conductor kicked the whole thing out. He had obtained the exclusive right to sell papers on the road and employed four assistants; but, not satisfied with this, he bought a lot of second-hand type and printed on the cars a little paper of his own, called the Grand Trunk Herald. Getting acquainted with the telegraph operators along the road, he took a notion to become an operator himself. In his lack of means and opportunities he resorted to the expedient of making his own apparatus at home. A piece of telegraph wire, insulated by bottles, was made to subserve as the line-wire. The coil for his electro-magnets he wound with rags, and in a similar way persevered until he had the crude elements of a telegraph. But as electricity being wanting, and he could not buy a battery, he tried rubbing the fur of cats' backs. It says that electricity from this source was a failure for telegraphic purposes.—Popular Science Monthly.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the board of managers was held at the Bible House, Astor Place, New York, on Thursday, August 1. Secretary Gillman read a part of the one hundred and nineteenth psalm, and offered prayer. Five societies were recognized as auxiliary—one in Idaho Territory, and one in each of the States of Tennessee, Minnesota, Nebraska and Kansas.

A considerable number of Scriptures in foreign languages were presented for the library.

Many requests for books for sale and distribution, received from various sources at home and abroad, numerous grants and consignments were made by the board, amounting to about 25,000 volumes, including 15 for foreign circulation, and 15 volumes in raised letter for the blind. Among the letters submitted to the board were communications from the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Evangelical Association of Geneva, and the Bible Society of Smyrna; from the Western Turkey Mission and the Hawaiian Board; from Messrs. Kelsey and Wherry, reporting the publication of the Scriptures at Ladhia; from Rev. Albert Shaeli, respecting the Mpongwe Scriptures; and from the society's agents in Mexico, Brazil, Uruguay, Turkey and Japan.

We have received the annual catalogue of Valley Female College, Winchester, Va. We are glad to notice that this excellent institution, during the last session, was even more prosperous than heretofore. President Bogast has able assistants, and has himself one of our most experienced and competent educators. We call attention to his card in another column.

Books and Periodicals.

THE REPUBLIC OF REPUBLICS. By one of the counsel in the case of Jefferson Davis. Third edition. Carefully revised and greatly amplified. Printed for the author. Philadelphia: William W. Harding, 1878.

This is an octavo of over 450 pages, besides a very voluminous appendix of fully 100 pages more. It seems to be a very thorough and exhaustive discussion and vindication of States rights, and the doctrine of State sovereignty. It is commended by competent critics and judges as a work of great ability. Subscriptions received for the work by F. E. Hansell, general agent, 50 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, in cloth, $3.50; in sheep, $4.50; in half calf, $5.50.

—The Edinburg Review, July, 1878, American edition—the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, New York—has the following table of contents: 1. The Marquess Wellesley's Indian Administration. 2. The Remains of Edmund J. Armstrong. 3. Lecky's England in the Eighteenth Century. 4. Origin and Wanderings of the Gipsies. 5. Primitive Property and Modern Socialism. 6. M. Daudet's Letters. 7. Russia and Roumania. 8. The Gold Mines of Midian. 9. Finlay's History of the Servitude of Greece. 10. The Constitution and the Crown. A very rich and entertaining number of this old and popular periodical.

The periodicals reprinted by the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, 41 Barclay street, New York, are as follows: The London quarterly, Edinburg, Westminster and British Quarterly Reviews, and Blackwood's Magazine. Price, $4 a year for any one, or only $17 for all, and the postage is prepaid by the publishers.

—The Magazine of Art for July has been received. The illustrations are very fine. Published by Cassell, Petter & Galpin, London, Paris and New York. Price, twenty-five cents a number.

Christian Perfection.

The friends of sudden sanctification, or of a separate step of experience with a distinct witness, called the second blessing, by the Holston Methodist seem to be growing fearful that the doctrine is declining in popularity and are making a strong effort to revive it.

On this question there is a great variety of opinions even among Methodists. Some believe that conversion leaves a man "dead in sin," and that he has nothing to do but persevere and grow. Others think that conversion only partially cures the disease of sin, and that it is left for parties, homeopathies and tonics and the like to operate a perfect cure.

Some think that perfection is reached by one stupendous act of faith, that brings a distinct witness. Others think the perfection is spiritual maturity, reached by processes of growth, without a distinct witness to the time or even the point of maturity of the graces of age. Some regard perfection as the lowest round of eternal activity, others think that when a man is converted he is in heaven, and that larger states of grace are only progress or run with more and more unity, and that they furnish the basis of degrees of happiness in the world to come. All these views are honestly held, and have always been. The majority of Methodists have, perhaps, never agreed upon any one theory. They all agree that the doctrine of perfection is taught in the word of God, and that it is the duty of all Christians to leave the "principles of the doctrine of Christ and to go on to perfection."

A CLOSELY GUARDED WEIGHT.—The conscience-keeper of the nation's financial faith is deposited at the mint in Philadelphia, in the form of a Troy pound-weight, which is kept under duplicate locks and seals. There is a curious history connected with this weight. By it is determined the standard to which the accuracy of the gold and silver coins of the United States must attain. The commission appointed by the President to test the coins and make the annual assay use this weight, and on these occasions it is taken from its carefully-guarded seclusion, and it shows the accuracy or inaccuracy of the productions of the various mints in this country. This little cylinder is copied from a Troy pound-weight preserved in the Tower of London, and on this latter the coinage of Great Britain rests for reliability. This exact witness of financial integrity is carefully preserved and guarded from tampering hands. At the conclusion of the assay commission's labor the weight is intrusted to the care of a judge of the United States District Court, the collector of the port, and the director of the mint, locked up and solemnly sealed for another year, only to appear twelve months after and show which mint has been derelict in its work.

"Got any cow-bells?" asked a customer from the country. "Yes, step this way." "Those are too small. Haven't you got any larger?" "No, sir. The large ones are all sold." Customer started off, and got as far as the door, when the clerk called after him: "Look here, stranger, take one of these small bells for your cow, and you won't have half the trouble in finding her; for when you hear your bell you will always know she can't be far off." The farmer bought the bell.

John says that Christ's is the light that lighted up the world. This is shown to be true in all the progress of Christianity since this was written. The enlightened nations of the earth are the gospel nations.

Wages, Past and Present.

From the most reliable sources of information, and as the result of patient inquiry, the Philadelphia Press publishes comparative tables of the prices of labor in 1860, 1870, 1871 and 1878. The result shows that in thirty-two pursuits wages have increased from 1860 to 1878 from 5 to 10 per cent., or an average of about 11 per cent.; and that in twenty-five avocations they have decreased from 1 to 5 per cent. From the tables referred to, the following is taken to show the changes which have occurred by giving the daily wages of mechanical and general out-door labor:

	1860.	1878.
Farm labor, with board	$ 1 00	$ 1 00
Ordinary labor, with board	1 00	1 00
Ordinary labor, without board	1 50	1 50
Bricklayers	3 00	3 00
Carpenters	2 50	2 00
Blacksmiths	2 00	2 00
	1871.	1878.
Farm labor, with board	$ 1 25	$ 1 00
Ordinary labor, with board	1 00	1 00
Ordinary labor, without board	1 40	1 25
Bricklayers	3 50	2 50
Carpenters	2 50	2 25
Blacksmiths	2 50	2 00

The table showing the wages of people employed in factory and mill labor indicates very much the same fluctuation, except that for no grade of operatives is the compensation less at the present time than in 1860.

These inquiries make no attempt to ascertain the relative amount of employment for the various grades of labor now as compared with the supply at other times. It is assumed that the supply regulates the wages—that a supply less than the demand would enhance the price of wages, and the reverse if the supply was greater than the demand—there would appear to be more employment now in proportion to those who want it than in 1871. Without reference to the ratio of the unemployed to the whole number of people desiring to be employed, it appears that with the prices of the staple articles of food and clothing rather cheaper now than in 1860, and with wages considerably higher on the average, those who have employment ought to live as comfortably as before the war.

One great cause of complaint arises from the fact that during the "flush times," as the war period is termed, all classes of people in this country felicitate extravagant modes of living. Now that the pinch comes, which all feel, alike, are now unwilling to go back to the more frugal practices. Should all classes practice the economy of 1860 in 1871, there would be less indigestion and much more contentment.

At the present time the above figures contain a lesson of practical value. It is that the increase in the price of wages which ruled from 1860 to 1873 was not proportionate to the increase of the prices of food and raiment. The price of labor in any department is the last to feel the effect of any rise in general prices.

The English Wesleyan conference, now in session at Bradford, says the Methodist, is regarded with unusual interest, because the lay representation plan comes in to full operation with it. The system adopted in England is unlike that of the church in this country. There the ministers meet first, elect members to fill vacancies in the Legal Hundred, the corporate body, and the reception of candidates for the ministry. The ministers also elect the president of the Conference, the choice this year falling on Dr. J. H. Rigg, who visited this country a few years ago, and is well known here.

St John's Methodist Episcopal Church South, corner of Canal street and Lee Circle, of which the Rev. J. G. Wilson is pastor, has been relieved during the last few months of its debt of $1,000.

They had the two attitudes at the church in Chantry, England, on a recent Sunday, and services were accordingly dispensed with. A swarm of bees took entire possession of the edifice.

MARRIED.

WATKINS—PATTON.—In the Chapel, Mississippi College, on the 24th inst., by Rev. J. M. Weathers, Mr. R. C. Watkins, of Meridian, Miss., to Miss A. E. Patton, of Claiborne county, Miss.

Publisher's Department.

THE QUICKEST TIME EAST.—The Great Jackson Route shows making the quickest time to New York ever known, leaving New Orleans daily at 4:15 P. M. and arriving at New York at 9:05 A. M., allowing for the difference in time between the two cities, the run is made in the unprecedented time of fifty-three and three quarter hours. This quick time is made only by the great Jackson Route, and in the meantime the enterprise in rebuilding its track with steel rails and new ties, at heavy expense, and the thorough system of ballasting that has been undertaken. This fast train will be of great advantage to the people of this city, which it is hoped they will show their appreciation of by their patronage. Only one change of cars, which is made at Cincinnati, Ohio, where breakfast is taken in the splendid dining hall of that place at 8 A. M.

The route also makes the quickest time to Memphis, arriving at 2 P. M. Actual running time only seven and one-half hours. This train is the only direct line to New England points. The Great Jackson Route is certainly to be congratulated on the success of its new enterprise, and the New Orleans public should patronize this line.

Excursion tickets to Washington, Omaha and all the Northwestern summer resorts, to Niagara Falls, Portland, etc., are on sale at the lowest rates, with the privilege of stop-over at any place, and only one change of cars.

IN OUR paper will be seen the card of Messrs. Duhr & Co., of Baltimore, who are importers of ornamental church work, in Harrison Chairs, railing, bell cages and other articles are made after the most approved patterns. We have had dealings with these gentlemen for years, and have always found them honorable and clever business men. We cordially recommend them to our friends throughout the South.

WE WOULD call the attention of schools or colleges who need the services of a teacher in the advertisement, on this page, of E. F. Powell, who has secured an important position in the Whitworth Female College, at Brookhaven, Miss.

PARTIES visiting Cincinnati should stop at the Crawford House, one of the most popular hotels in the West. It is centrally located, and convenient to all public places.

VANDALIA LINE.—The attention of our readers and the traveling public is called to the merits of the above line. For parties going Eastby way of St. Louis there is no better road. Comfortable, commodious and elegant palace cars, gliding noiselessly, swiftly and safely along over a track so smooth that one is almost unconscious of motion unless he chances to look out of the window, offer for the time a home unequaled in splendor and luxurious ease by anything the most fastidious traveler of the past generation ever dreamed of. The popularity of this old and reliable road is constantly and steadily on the increase. The efficient and well-known and highly respected general manager, Col. Simpson, are fully appreciated by the traveling public.

AN APPROPRIATE ODOR.

In Dr. Price's Colognè Perfumes each perfect as a character can find an appropriate odor. For the clergyman and orator, his refreshing and fragrant Eau de Rose; for the brilliant and witty, his charming Eleanor Violet; for the statesman and robust, his persistent Jockey Club; for the lady of fashion, his captivating Heliotrope; for the young gentleman, his delicate Lily Bouquet; for the young lady, his sweet Pond Lily. We know a tribute by their voices, why not recognize a tribute by their sweet and perfumed odor?

THE CULTIVATION OF CELERY.

If I am fitted to instruct on the cultivation of any vegetable, it is this, as for many years I have cultivated immense quantities of roots annually, and this experience has resulted in greatly simplifying the operation. The seeds are sown in a well-prepared, rich border, as early in the season as ground can be worked. The bed is kept clear of weeds until July, until the plants are set out for the crop. But as the seedling plants are rather troublesome to raise, the plants can be purchased cheaper, unless when wanted in very large quantities. The European plan is to make a trench six or eight inches deep in which to plant celery, but our sudden rain-storms in summer soon showed us that this plan was not a good one here; so we set about planting on the level surface of the ground, just as we do with all vegetables. Celery is a "gross feeder," and requires an abundance of manure, which, as usual, must be well mixed and incorporated with the soil before the celery is set out.

When the ground is well prepared we stretch a line to the distance required and beat it slightly with a spade, so that it leaves a mark to show where to set the plants. These are placed at distances usually six inches between the plants, and four feet between the rows. Great care must be taken in putting out the celery to see that the plant is set to the depth of the roots—if much deeper the heart might be too much covered up, which would impede the growth. It is also important that the soil be well packed to the roots in planting, and if the operation can be done in the evening, and the plants copiously watered, no further attention will be required. If planted in July, nothing is to be done but to keep the crop clear of weeds until September, when the time the blanching process is to be begun, which consists in drawing the earth to each side of the celery and pressing it lightly to it, so as to cover the leaves and upward growth, preparatory to blanching, or preventing this from opening to the sun. This is done by the middle of September, by the first week in October is ready for banking up, which is done by drawing the soil on between the rows, and by laying or banking it close to each side of the row of celery. After being so banked up for a week it will be ready for use in three or four weeks, if wanted at that time, that is, as is usually the case, as needed for winter use only, unless to be put away in the cellar, all that it requires is the operation of handling. If the celery is to be left in the open ground where it was grown, a heavy bank must be made on each side of the rows, and, as cold weather approaches, say in this latitude by the middle of November—yet additional covering of at least a foot of leaves or litter must be closely packed against the bank to protect it from frost.—Prof. Hedrick.

MULCHES.

We visited lately an enthusiastic old friend, whose soil was profuse with weeds, and especially good sound purslane. These he had carefully pulled and buried. We said to him: "Your raspberries are blistered! Your young grapes are suffering from drouth. Your pear-trees are dried and parched. Your weeds would have served a capital purpose as a mulch about them." Indeed, amidst my heaps I would rather have creeping weeds growing than have the ground naked with heat. Weeds can always be utilized by cutting and carrying to the nearest tree. Then spread them and trample them well down. For summer they keep off the last possible moisture.

"They drive to your wood-shed" [illegible] the nearest sawmill, and scrape up a few loads of rotting sawdust and decayed chips. Large [illegible] are as boiling-places for weeds and slugs. If this sawdust is fresh cut it through pure water before using. It has the advantage of being free from seeds, and is specially adapted to your evergreens. [illegible] better for an arbor-vitæ, or for a bed of [illegible] than the richest soil. It is [illegible] apples.

The [illegible] called Ferns, [illegible]. They serve a valuable purpose where [illegible] is desired. They hasten the soil, [illegible] retain moisture, grass land. But, above all, they are valuable about trees and shrubs. The writer has seen them [illegible] fruit-trees which were [illegible] to destruction, but [illegible] stored vigor [illegible] application, we [illegible] apple-trees. [illegible] gooseberries and [illegible] raspberries.

Finally, a rapid [illegible] is providentially [illegible] the leaves [illegible] lives. Take [illegible] and [illegible] them for [illegible] which [illegible] to [illegible] burn them. They are intended to [illegible] protect [illegible] through the [illegible] are very [illegible] [illegible].

ENGLISH IVY.

[illegible] decorating [illegible] the [illegible] every year. [illegible] they commence [illegible] Being very strong, they will [illegible] any treatment, but [illegible] perfection, and [illegible] will grow [illegible] to grow them and they will grow without stint. Most [illegible] are too tall for them, as indeed they are for their wives. Neither plants nor people should have the temperature over sixty degrees Fahrenheit. Take care and not enfeeble your lyies by excessive watering or undue heat, and you will see they will not seem to mind whether the sun shines or not, or in what position or direction you train them. Indeed, so much will they do themselves to render a room charming, that we would rather have an unlimited number of them to draw upon than anything else in nature or art. Do you wish the ugly plain doors that shut off your tiny entry from your parlor to be arched or curved like those in the drawing-rooms of your richer neighbor? Buy a couple of brackets, such as lamps for the burning of kerosene are sometimes placed in, and screw them in the sides of the door. Put in each a plant of English ivy, the longer the better; then train the plants over the top, against the sides, indeed, any way your fancy dictates. You need not buy the beautiful but costly pots the flower dealers will advise; common glazed ones will answer every purpose, for, by placing in each two or three sprays of Coliseum ivy, in a month's time no vestige of the pot itself can be discerned through their thick screen. The English ivy growing over the walls of the building, instead of promoting dampness, as most persons would suppose, is said to be a remedy for it, and it is mentioned as a fact in the Paper Hanger's Companion that in a certain room where damp had prevailed for a length of time, the affected parts inside had become dry when ivy had grown up to cover the opposite exterior side. The close overhanging pendant leaves prevent the rain or moisture from penetrating to the wall. Beauty and utility in this case go hand in hand.—Home Gardening.

THE WAY TO RAISE TOMATOES.

There are a great many persons who cultivate the tomato in their gardens and have never yet learned the true secret of doing it well. I was formerly in this crowd myself. At first I left them grow as they liked, falling down and spreading over the ground like a vine. They never lasted through the season in this condition. The fruit that lay upon the earth rotted, or was preyed upon by slugs, worms and mice. Then I raised them above the ground by laying down posts or scantling, and covering with lath, old pickets or strips of board. This was better, but was not satisfactory. Somebody recommended that they should be trained on stakes, a stalk to a stake. This was still an improvement so far as the fruit was concerned, but it did not come up to the standard. Now I will tell you what this is:

Set your plants in a row or rows, if you have so many, say eighteen to twenty-four inches apart. Then put in two stout posts at the ends. Then train galvanized or other wire upon these posts so as to get about four of them one above another. If your posts are some distance apart, set stakes with a crow-bar along between, drive a nail at the level of the wire on which the wires should rest and fasten, and, as your plants come forward, tie them to your wires. If too luxuriant, trim off the superfluous branches. You will be astonished at the results of this treatment. Your fruit will be in profusion, large in size, and sound. Such a trellis makes a "sight to behold." What is more, your plants will continue to grow and produce until the frost interferes. It is the only true way of growing tomatoes, and when you have tried it once it will argue immense shiftlessness on your part ever to be satisfied with any other mode of cultivation.—Country Gentleman.

WATERING PLANTS IN SUMMER.—Plants growing in the open ground and fully exposed to the sun are frequently ruined by the very means taken to save them—by watering in hot, dry weather. Generally merely the surface of the ground is wet, and the moisture soon evaporates, leaving the soil dry and hard—almost impervious to air, as well as to the dews. But this is not the only nor the worst evil which results from the ordinary slight watering which plants get. The temporary, superficial moisture causes the roots to seek the surface, where, in the intervals between the waterings, the heat and drouth destroy them, and the plants become stunted or die outright. The remedy lies in more thorough irrigation and in a different mode of applying the water. In the case of young trees and large herbaceous plants, the best way is to carefully scrape away the soil around them in the depth of an inch or two, forming a shallow basin, into which sufficient water should be poured to moisten well the ground as deeply and as widely as the roots extend. When the water has soaked in, the dry earth should be returned, which will prevent a speedy evaporation. Among small plants, which cannot be treated in this way, make holes with an iron rod or a sharpened stake several inches in depth and fill them with water, which will thus reach the deepest roots.—Rural World.

PINEAPPLE MARMALADE.—Select the largest, ripest and most perfect pineapples that can be found; pare them and cut out all the blemishes; grate them on a large dish, using a coarse grater, and omitting the hard core which runs down to the center; weigh, or, in the absence of the grater, cut them into small bits. Add an equal weight of the best double-refined sugar in lumps; put them into a preserving kettle and mix them well together; set over a moderate fire and very slowly heat and skim well, stirring it after skimming. After the scum has ceased to appear stir the marmalade frequently until it is done, which will be in an hour and a half after it has come to a boil.

VALUE OF RICE AS A FOOD.—Rice is almost the only diet of the people in China, Asia and all Eastern countries. In those countries it is used as a substitute for potatoes. At the present low price of domestic rice, it is the cheapest food obtainable. Potatoes contain about 80 per cent. of water, and do not gain much in the process of cooking. Rice has no waste whatever, contains only 22 per cent. of water, and in boiling gains three times its original bulk. Hence one pound of rice, at 6¼ cents per pound, makes three times as much when cooked—equal to three pounds of potatoes at 2¼ cents per pound, or 7½ cents. Rice properly prepared should come upon the table dry, each grain unbroken, and served with the condiments used on potatoes, and be partaken of as a vegetable, with meats, and not as a dessert.—Sanitarian.

JAPAN MILLET.—A correspondent of the New England Farmer writes: Two years ago I received a package of seed labeled Japan millet, which I sowed in drills in my garden. In the course of the summer it grew to a height of about six feet, and the straw was more like corn in thickness of stock than common millet. It was rather hard-shelled and stiff, and I should not think it would be liable to lodge. It headed out early in September, and, though we had no frost before October, none of the seed matured. The heads were very large and of a greenish yellow. I fed it to the cows in October, and they liked it very much. I should think it would be an excellent fodder crop to feed green or dry, if sowed on rich ground.

William Crozer, the successful Long Island farmer, in speaking of roots, says: "As to the value of mangolds, turnips and carrots, my experience is that we can grow no roots which will produce so much good, solid food as Swede or ruta-baga (turnip). Horses, cattle and sheep will thrive on them. As for carrots, my experience has been against them as a general food for animals; they cause too much urine, and if fed in quantity will produce weak joints in animals, although they bring for the time being a beautiful coat of hair; but they will weaken the constitution, where Swede turnips will build it up."

SCRAPPLE.—Take two or three hogs' heads, hearts, a liver or two, and scraps of beef. Boil till tender in plenty of water. Then take out the meat, remove the bones, and rub the meat through a sausage grinder. Take the bones out of the soup, and skim off part of the grease. Then return the ground meat to the soup, add pepper and salt, and make it boil briskly. While boiling, stir in corn meal and buckwheat to the consistency of mush. Boil it about twenty minutes, and then dip it out into deep dishes. When cold, cut it into thin slices, and fry brown, like mush.—Country Gentleman.

UNWHOLESOME FOOD.

By the unnatural combination by ignorant persons for baking powder they render the food very indigestible, as the chemical action in the stomach prevents their being digested. Dr. Price's cream Baking Powder is prepared by the application of scientific principles, forming a perfect powder.

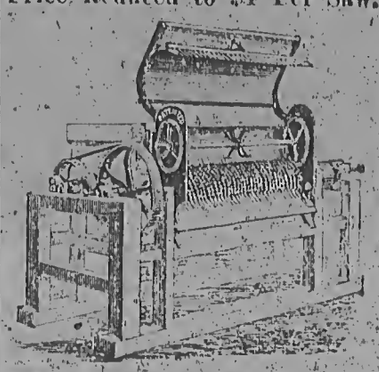
GENERAL AGENTS FOR

DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It elevates all the lint from the seeds of the cotton fibre; prevents the cotton from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time while consuming a great deal of animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased producing cotton of the highest grade and market value. This improved gin is simple in detail of simple, with extra combination of last, added to increased value of work done more than covers the cost of the Gin in every bale ginned. Trial models cost by steamer.

SCIENTIFIC.

—Salicylate of sodium, properly administered, is found useful in cases of acute and inflammatory rheumatism.

—The story is familiar of Benjamin Franklin's speech after the conclusion of the labor of drafting the constitution, in which he said he had been in doubt whether the picture behind the President's desk represented sunrise or sunset. J. Norman Lockyer says in Nature that generally the clouds at sunrise are more orange, and more red at sunset. This must be due to a change in the number of molecules of aqueous vapor, or solid particles in the air.

—Prof. Helmholtz, who has done so much to explain the mechanism of sound, is applying similar principles to the phenomena of sight. In order to explain the curious phenomenon of color-blindness, which generally displays itself in an inability to distinguish red, he offers the hypothesis that the eye possesses three kinds of nerve elements, which, excited separately, cause the sensations of red, green of violet, these colors being the fundamental ones; and the colors of the spectrum, as well as compound colors, would accordingly have the property of exciting simultaneously, but in varying proportions, each one of these specific energies—red, for instance, only feebly affecting the violet and green elements, but strongly agitating the red ones, as is easily understood by those acquainted with the experiments made in this direction. It would follow that no natural color, however it may be, and even though it were one of the colors of the spectrum, which are the purest known, would create a truly simple sensation. The colors seen always comprise red, green or violet, although the true color may contain only one or two of them, showing color-blindness to be caused by the paralysis of one or two of these energies. Prof. Helmholtz thinks it is possible that with those who are color-blind the red elementals nerves are not entirely paralyzed, but that the green and violet simply predominate. If this supposition were correct, it would follow that, in placing between the eye of one color-blind and the light a transparent substance colored red, it would be possible to establish the equilibrium, because by such means a part of the green and violet rays is extinguished. The substance first used in this test was fuchsine, and the experiments were made with silk ribbons, chosen by a person who was color-blind. It is notably a bright red which he could not distinguish from a certain green, and a violet which made on him the same impression as blue. The result in all cases submitted to this experiment showed a remarkable effect produced by the interposition of the fuchsine prism in preventing colors from being confounded.

DEBILITATED!

VOLTAIC ELECTRIC BELTS

AND BANDS.

READER, ARE YOU AFFLICTED?

Have you received the sad news of your own and family's incurable disease? Are you afflicted with the horrors of dyspepsia, that most horrible of all diseases? Are you suffering ill, beset, timid, and wretched, and seeking relief? Are your nights made miserable by unrefreshing sleep, with frightful dreams, and your days by nervousness, debility, and lassitude? Are you troubled with pains in the head, back, or limbs? Have you a cough, with occasional bleeding of the lungs? Are you afflicted with rheumatism, neuralgia, or kidney complaints? Have you a disease of the throat, nervous, and pulmonary organs? Are you troubled with a multitude of gloomy feelings, such as fitful, nervous, and sometimes, continually dwelling on the mind, causing you to be low-spirited, and unfit for business or pleasure? Have you lost confidence in yourself? Are you bashful, timid, and unable to look a person straight in the face? Are you troubled with pimples on the face and back, and a sallow complexion? Have you a dull, heavy pain in the back part of the head, with frequent dizziness, weak eyes, and a general prostration of the system? Are you troubled with any of the following symptoms: Sick stomach, bad taste in the mouth, coated tongue, offensive breath, wind on the stomach, sour eructations, sinking or fluttering at the pit of the stomach, swimming of the head, hurried and difficult breathing, palpitation of the heart, headache over the eyes, pain in the back part of the head, dizziness, restless nights, highly colored urine, universal lassitude of the muscular system, pimples on the face, pains in the limbs, sudden flushes of heat over the body, with occasional chills, sharp pains shooting across the small of the back and chest, frequent desire to pass urine, which is pale and copious, constipation, alternate attacks of diarrhœa, drowsiness after meals, with restless nights and want of refreshing sleep, dry skin, hot hands, alternate chilliness and flushes of heat, sparks before the eyes, specks floating before the sight, pain in the eyeballs, with blurred vision, nervousness, sudden starting when spoken to unexpectedly, with a disinclination to converse on any subject for any length of time, lack of energy, hope, and confidence, with horrible dreams, and a thousand and one other symptoms that render life miserable and happiness impossible? Then you are laboring under the combined influence of Dyspepsia and Nervous Debility, and unless you procure relief by the use of VOLTAIC ELECTRIC BELTS AND BANDS, you will be a confirmed victim of disease, misery, and wretchedness, and will be unfitted for the duties of life, and a burden to yourself and friends.

The Destruction of Palestine.

BY THE "FUNNY MAN" OF THE NEW YORK TIMES.

When Palestine [illegible] Round Lake was closed the other day for repairs there was much speculation as to what accident had befallen it. The most generally accepted theory was that a large Methodist bishop was the active though involuntary cause of the temporary destruction of Jerusalem. It is said that on Monday evening last the bishop in question, who weighs about two hundred and fifty pounds, reached Round Lake late in the afternoon, preached for seven hours in the evening, and started at 11:45, under guidance of one of the worst small boys that ever lived, in search of the hotel. The small boy led him up by way of Damascus to the Hebrew frontier, and then maliciously told him that if he would climb the fence and keep straight on he would reach the hotel in five minutes. The unsuspecting bishop, with the aid of a stump and one or two large stones, succeeded in climbing the fence, and the small boy thereupon went away chuckling. In less than two minutes that unhappy divine stepped into the Dead Sea and wet both his feet. Filled with indignation at everything in general, he turned his footsteps northward, tripped over the Mount of Olives and fell heavily upon Jerusalem, completely flattening the temple and converting the Hills of Zion into one vast ruin. He was not seriously injured, however, and regaining his feet, he walked on with much caution. For all his caution, he could not help stepping on Bethlehem and kicking Nazareth into the Sea of Galilee. At this point he became somewhat confused, and wandered south, again laying waste the country, destroying towns and forests, and changing the course of rivers and brooks. Finally he reached the Mediterranean, and, skirting its shores in the direction of Egypt, gathered his shoes in safely. Of course Palestine had to be closed the next day, and two entire days were required to restore it to its former beauty. It always was an unhappy country, and the bishop was but the most recent of the innumerable destroyers, whether Assyrian, Egyptian, Roman or Arabian, who have taken upon it and trodden its cities under foot.

I am no farmer, I hope, as to Sundays; but I look abroad over the map of popular freedom in the world and it does not seem to me accidental that Switzerland, Scotland, England and the United States, the countries which best observe Sunday, constitute almost the entire map of safe popular government.

Professor—"Can you multiply to get the correct numbers?" Encl[illegible] are, to certain. Professor—"What will be the product of five apples multiplied by six potatoes?" Fo[illegible] many hardly. "Hash."

A great deal of time is consumed in opportunity. Wife is the flower of life.

ORIGINAL.

The process adopted by Dr. Price in making his Special Flavoring Extracts is original. By this new process he is enabled to produce flavorings of the finest quality, retaining the freshness of fruit, so concentrated that a small quantity produces each characteristic flavor.

Religious Notices.

THERE will be a camp meeting at China Grove, Pike county, Miss., beginning on the third of October next, known as the China Grove and Pearl River camp meeting. We have plenty of good water and camping ground, which we offer to the public free of charge, and cordially invite everybody to come, and prepare for their own accommodation, as it will be strictly self-sustaining. There will be a lot for horses, and a boarding tent, for those who prefer paying the money, on very reasonable terms. Ministers of the gospel are earnestly requested to attend—for whom, with their families, accommodations will be made.

P. HOWARD,
15 I. W. COOPER.

THE annual camp meeting at Asbury camp ground will embrace the fourth Sabbath in October, commencing on Thursday night before. The above-named camp ground is located in the bounds of the Sepulga circuit, Prattville district, Alabama Conference. The meeting will be conducted on the self-sustaining plan—that is all are expected to provide their own lodging and lunch. Ministers and their families will be provided for. (15) ROBERT SMILIE, P. C.

THE camp meeting at the Holland camp ground, Jasper county, Miss., will commence on Friday before the first Sunday in October next. It is fifteen miles south of Hickory station, Mobile and Meridian railroad, and ten miles west of Enterprise, Mobile and Ohio railroad. We invite all the preachers who can come to do so. We will take care of you.

AUGUST.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

The quiet August noon is come;
A slumberous silence fills the sky;
The fields are still, the woods are dumb;
In glassy sleep the waters lie.

And mark you soft white clouds that rest
Above our vale, a moveless throng;
The cattle on the mountain's breast
Enjoy the grateful shadow long.

Oh, how unlike those merry hours
In sunny June, when earth laughs out,
When the fresh wind made love to flowers,
And woodlands sing and waters shout—

When in the grass sweet waters talk,
And strains of thy music swell
From every floss-cup of the rock,
From every nameless blossom's bell!

But now a joy too deep for sound,
A peace no other season knows,
Hushes the heavens and wraps the ground,
The blessing of supreme repose.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 14.—The fever seems to be gaining ground. Its origin has been traced to persons who came up from below on the steamboat Golden Crown, and ran the quarantine blockade two weeks ago to-day.

One person that came up on the boat has died, and several more are down with fever. Prof. Ducker, living next door to some of the parties that came up on the boat and had her was taken with it, suddenly died last night. His son is now down with it. George Bergmas, a prominent tobacconist, was taken sick last of the week, and will probably not live through the night. The fever seems to be well spread north on Jefferson street, its former locality. So far as can be learned, to the present time there have been 5 deaths and 17 cases reported in the last forty-eight hours. There are probably 50 or 75 cases in the city. The weather is favorable for spreading the disease, it being cold, damp and foggy.

GRENADA, Aug. 11.—Owing to the sickness of the mayor and councilmen, the undersigned have been appointed by the citizens of Grenada, at a general meeting, to receive and distribute whatever pecuniary aid may be obtained for those suffering with yellow fever in Grenada.

The disease is here in its most malignant form, and the sick are so numerous and destitute as to make it utterly impossible for Grenada, unaided, to relieve or move them. The assistance of the charitable is respectfully solicited, and the press is asked to copy this dispatch.

ROBT. MELLIN.
R. S. RINGGOLD, M. D.,
Health Officer.
THOMAS WALTON.

WASHINGTON, Aug 14.—The Auditor returns to the Department of Agriculture show the average condition of the cotton crop in ten cotton States as 95—a decline of four. North Carolina, 82—a gain of 1; South Carolina, 97—loss, 7; Georgia, 96—loss, 13; Florida, 99—loss, 1; Alabama, 98—loss, 4; Mississippi, 96—loss, 6; Louisiana, 99—loss, 5; Texas, 105—gain, 2; Arkansas, 98—loss, 7; Tennessee, 92—loss, 6. Of 299 counties reported 100; 83 above, 15 below.

The condition of the crops is somewhat better than in August, 1877.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 15.—Thirty-three cases of fever and six deaths reported from nine o'clock last night up to-night.

The Memphis and Grenada, and Memphis and Little Rock railroads have stopped running their trains.

Nearly all the towns in all directions are quarantined against us. Several of the largest business houses in the city will close to-morrow, and will remain closed until after frost.

The Gayoso and the Commercial Hotels closed to-day. The Howards have organized and sent out twenty nurses to-day. The Masons and Odd Fellows have gone to work and are doing much good. Considerable excitement prevails. Thousands have left the city, and every train is crowded down.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—The following was received from Grenada,

GRENADA, MISS., August 11.—
[Mayor of Wilmington:] Help to pay nurses and bury the dead. Our town is a graveyard. We need help. The fever is dying and I am the only officer left.
E. A. MELTON,
Deputy Marshal and Acting Mayor."

Immediately on receipt of this the Board of Aldermen convened in special session and made an appropriation for the Grenada sufferers, appointed a committee of seven to solicit contributions from citizens, and thought a liberal sum will be raised.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 16.—The Board of Health raised the quarantine at this point this morning.

Twelve new cases and three deaths reported this morning.

At a mass meeting held at Greenwood Opera House this morning a committee of twenty-five citizens was appointed to take such action as may be deemed necessary for providing for the safety for such of our people as are peculiarly unable to do so without assistance. They requested Memphis to borrow $30,000 for the relief of the poor and needy.

James Speed, ticket agent of the Louisville and Louisville railroad, sold $60 worth of tickets since yesterday. Nearly half the population of the city ...

Aug 16 4 30 P. M.—
1. Stevenson, New Orleans: Quarantine is simply to take care of the sick if any arrive by boats—nothing else.

HENRY C. HAARSTICK,
Vice-President Miss. Valley T. Co.

It may be stated, in connection with the above, that St. Louis never detains any boats except to take charge of any sick passengers whenever there are such.

CHICAGO, Aug. 17.—The papers to-morrow will publish the particulars of the defalcation of Charles W. Angel, secretary of the Pullman Palace Car Company. The loss sustained is $120,000, partly cash, partly securities of the company. The money he drew out of the bank was on checks of $25,000 each. It is possible he has converted the securities, and with the proceeds and money gone to Europe.

BOSTON, Aug. 17.—Carefully prepared statistics of the State Bureau of Labor show there are 28,805 working people unemployed in Massachusetts.

FAIRPOINT, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Gov. Colquitt, of Georgia, who is to leave for home in the morning, was called upon to-night for a farewell address, and spoke with great feeling, eloquence and power, urging that Christian men of the North and South should meet each other face to face, and join hands in their efforts to bring permanent peace and good will to the country. In closing he invited all present to visit Georgia, in which State they would receive a glad and hearty welcome. The Governor's remarks were received with repeated and hearty demonstrations of applause.

GRENADA, Miss., Aug. 19.—The mortality is terrible. The scenes cannot be described. Dr. Mandeville, an experienced yellow fever physician, says he never saw anything that would begin to compare with it—that it is fearful beyond any description. Total deaths over seventy, and with no abatement and no hopeful cases reported. Several deaths have just been reported. It seems none are to be spared.

NASHVILLE, August 19.—Hon. Bailie Peyton died in Gallatin, yesterday afternoon, of effusion of the brain. He was a representative in Congress from 1823 to 1837; served on the staff of Gen. Taylor in the Mexican war, and was appointed minister to Chili by Fillmore. He was afterward United States district attorney for Louisiana, and later practiced law in San Francisco.

VICKSBURG, Aug. 19.—The health officer is unable to give official estimates, but there are at least 100 cases in the city, and increasing rapidly. Four interments to-day from yellow fever. There have been 18 deaths to date. The City Council abolished the quarantine this evening.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 19.—The medical authorities say there is no yellow fever here, and no apprehension is felt that there will be.

MEMPHIS, August 20.—It is estimated that 200 cases of yellow fever are under treatment; and 12 deaths in the past twenty-four hours—among them R. H. Shelby, a lawyer. Among the new cases to-day are Dr. Balfour, health officer, and Dr. Robbins.

By authority of Most Worshipful Grand Master Murphy, an appeal is hereby made to all Masons, wheresoever dispersed, to contribute to the relief of the sick and destitute in this city.
N. H. PAXTON,
Grand Commander Knights Templar, and Chairman of Masonic Relief Committee.

RICHMOND, Aug. 20.—The City Council passed a resolution authorizing the president of the Board of Health, with the approval of the council, to instruct the committee on health to take measures for the protection of the health of the city. The precautionary measures of the Board of Health will only affect vessels from infected ports, the board being entirely opposed to any land quarantine.

BOSTON, Aug. 20.—Responding to the request for assistance from the mayor of Memphis, Mayor Pierce, of this city, authorizes the former to draw on him at sight for $1,500. The citizens will meet at noon to-morrow to take measures to relieve the distress in Memphis.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—Advices received by way of Constantinople say that Gen. Szapary's division of the Austrian army of occupation was defeated near Tuzla on the eleventh of August, after a battle which lasted twelve hours.

The Times' Constantinople dispatch says: Labaroff, the Russian ambassador, has handed to the Vizier a note announcing that a large portion of the Russian forces are about to be withdrawn. Embarkation will begin early next week. Russia has represented that the British fleet ought to retire simultaneously with the Russian troops, but as that suggestion is as yet unanswered, Russia has also hinted that the Porte ought to engage not to fortify the lines of Tchadmedje for some time. This proposal is unfavorably received.

LONDON, Aug 16.—The session of Parliament was prorogued to-day by the Queen until the second of November, 1878. In the royal speech, which was read on the occasion, the Queen congratulated Parliament on the conclusion of peace by the Berlin Congress, and the Cyprus treaty was referred to as a guarantee of Turkish independence and pledge of reform. The conduct of the troops was highly praised.

The Queen, in her speech proroguing Parliament, attributes the pacific solution of the difficulties in the East to the support of Parliament, and believes that the peace concluded by the Congress of Berlin will be satisfactory and durable.

BERLIN, Aug. 16.—Emil Hoedel, the tinsmith from Leipzig, who attempted to assassinate the Emperor William, May 11, has been executed. He was beheaded this morning at an early hour in the court-yard of the new prison. The Imperial warrant, decreeing that justice should take its course, was signed on the eighth of the present month. Hoedel was about twenty-one years of age.

GENEVA, Aug. 17.—The World's Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association is meeting with success highly satisfactory to its promoters. Average attendance at the conferences, one thousand. Delegates are present from America, Belgium, England, France, Holland, Spain, and the Protestant countries of Switzerland.

VIENNA, Aug. 20.—The official report of Gen. Philippovich shows that the capture of Serajevo was the result of the combined operations of his own force and Tegetboff's. The resistance to the Austrians' march was powerful. The troops were fired upon from every doorway and window; even women and sick and wounded insurgents in the military hospitals participated in the incredible scenes of the wildest fanaticism.

It was only owing to the good discipline of the troops that the town was not more seriously damaged. As it was some houses were plundered and burned. Our losses, unfortunately, were not inconsiderable. The insurgents fled in all directions, especially toward Goracla and Rogatica. At the close of the fighting the Imperial flag was hoisted and saluted amidst the cheers of the Christian population.

About Methodism—Its Work and Its Aspersers.

NUMBER III.

A religious reformer was demanded, and Providence raised up John Wesley for the work. He was a clergyman of the Anglican Church; had no wish to secede from it, although he desired to warm its moral tone, and make it a more effective worker for the renovation of religion.

After his return from Georgia, Wesley preached in London, from the text: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Whether the doctrines which he broached diverged from the orthodox standard, or his earnestness and zeal gave a shock to the contented, slumbering Anglican clergy, we know not; but the result of that sermon is known—it served to close against him the pulpit in which it was preached. In the next which he entered—St. Andrew's, Holborn—he met the same fate of exclusion. The Church of England thrust him out—attempted to silence him—aimed to stop his career as a reformer, although Wesley himself harbored no intention of attempting to found a separate sect, and meant only to revivify the Anglican Church, of which he was a member.

It is needless here to consume time in speaking of the great moral revolution which John Wesley wrought. History tells the story when it chronicles the great improvement in morals that followed his exertions. He brought religion forward as a fact of deep concern to every man, rather than a potted mummy, whose efficacy saved men in their own despite. He reinvested man with personality—broke the corporate fetters that shackled him—taught him that he was to be judged by the deeds done in his body, not to be saved by subscription to the creed of this or that church, by the sacraments, by reading liturgies and homilies, and keeping Lent. He made religion a thing of the heart rather than of the intellect, and taught that faith and good works would avail upright unless the heart was dedicated to God. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature," was the starting-point of Wesley; and if "a new creature," he must "keep himself unspotted from the world" and beat the fruits of a Christian—holiness, meekness, charity, humility and love. But he made religion emotional, and a matter of the heart—of feeling! The Bible preceded him in doing so.

I will now notice specifically the specifications of accusation brought against Methodism by Sydney Smith and men of like type. His first specification is as follows: "1. It is obvious that this description of Christians entertain very erroneous and dangerous notions of the present judgments of God. A belief that Providence interferes in all the little actions of our lives refers all merit to good and bad fortune." It sounds strangely to hear that a belief that God rewards good actions and punishes bad ones, even in this life, as well as the world to come, is a "dangerous notion." What belief can be more likely to restrain the vicious and immoral? Is a belief that operates as a check on the covetous and the vicious "dangerous?" Most certainly it is not. The Methodists have never asserted that the good are always prosperous in this world, and the wicked are always unprosperous, but they have rightly insisted that the good enjoy peace of conscience and of mind in the midst of poverty and affliction. No man at all conversant with the world believes that the goods of this life are distributed agreeably to the piety and moral worth of men, and no Methodist ever broached any such absurd doctrine. Sydney Smith admits that God does interfere occasionally in the affairs of this world, but asserts that "the doctrine of the immediate and perpetual interference of Divine Providence is not true." Did Sydney know every time and place of God's interference in the affairs of men? Why should he censure and denounce the Methodists for merely holding a doctrine which was held and preached by hundreds of clergymen of the Anglican Church.

Archdeacon Nares preached a sermon in which he said: "Though God interposes not by positive miracle, he influences by means unknown to all but himself, and directs the winds, the rain and glorious beams of heaven to execute his judgment, or fulfill his merciful designs." Sydney Smith criticised this identical sermon, and was bound to have known that many Episcopal clergymen held the very doctrine which he so vehemently condemned in the Methodists, and were never censured by their ecclesiastical superiors for entertaining it. Jeremy Taylor, a bishop in the Anglican Church, in a sermon on "The Mercy of the Divine Judgments," says: "Let, therefore, every one of us take the account of our lives and read over the sermons that God hath made us. What dangers have any of you escaped? Were you ever assaulted by the rudeness of an ill-natured man? Have you never had a dangerous fall, and escaped it? Did none of you ever escape drowning, and in a great danger saw the forbearance of God? Have you never been sick as you feared into death? Or suppose none of these things have happened—hath not God threatened you ill, and forborne to smite you, or smitten you, and forborne to kill you? That is evident. But if you had been of the cabinet council of your angel guardian, that you might have known from him how many dangers you have escaped; how often you have been near to ruin—so near that if you had seen your danger with a sober spirit, the fear of it would have killed you; if he had but told you how often God had sent out his warrants to the exterminating angel, and our blessed Savior, by his intercession, hath obtained a reprieve, that he might have the content of rejoicing at thy conversion and repentance: if you had known from him the secrets of that Providence which governs us in secret, and how many times the devil would have done thee hurt, and how often himself, as a ministering spirit of God's 'goodness and forbearance,' did interpose and abate or divert a mischief which was falling on thy head—it must needs cover thy head with a cloud of shame and blushing at that ingratitude and folly that will neither give God thanks nor secure thy own well being." I am quite sure no Methodist ever laid down, with greater emphasis, the doctrine of God's interference in the affairs of men than Jeremy Taylor has done in the preceding passage; and he was never censured for proclaiming this doctrine. Again, Jeremy Taylor says: "It may be thy sore eyes are the punishment of intemperance seven years ago; or God cuts thy days shorter, and thou shalt die in a florid age; or he raises up afflictions in thine own house, in thine own bowels; or hath sent a gangrene into thy estate, or with an arrow out of his quiver he can wound thee, and the arrow shall stick fast in thy flesh." Here the doctrine of God's perpetual interference in the affairs of men is clearly taught by a bishop of the Church of England.

Ridicule and sneer at it as much as men may, God's interference in the affairs of men is distinctly taught in the Bible. There are repeated instances of such interference long after the theocratic government had ceased.

But the superlative and burnished wisdom of the moderns has stripped God of his scepter, his lightnings and his thunder-bolts, and turned the government of the world over to the immutable laws of Nature. These laws of Nature are placed high above the omnipotence of their Author. God promised to send the "early rain and the latter rain in due season;" but our modern philosophical wiseacres tell us that the rain is regulated by the laws of Nature, and that God can neither withhold nor send rain. God has instructed us to ask for our "daily bread," and such things as we need, promising that we shall receive them, but our philosophers assure us that plenty and famine depend wholly on the laws of Nature, and that God no longer works miracles. These philosophers dethrone God, and enthrone what they term the immutable laws of Nature in his place. The omnipotence of God is thus restricted by the very laws which his will called into being, and which depend on his good pleasure for their vigor and continuance. If the Bible is of divine origin, then is the doctrine of God's interference in the affairs of this world and the fortunes of men true, since it is taught in the Bible clearly and explicitly. It is quite likely that the Rev. Sydney Smith was much more familiar with Homer, Horace, Rabelais, etc., than he was with the Scriptures! The effort of modern philosophers to limit and circumscribe the power of God, and to analyze his nature and attributes, just as they would dissect the carcass of an animal, or analyze a drop of water, recalls to mind the lines of Howell:

> "If of the smallest star in sky
> We know not the immensity
> Is there pure sparks that stars compose?
> The highest human wit [so] poises
> How, then, poor shallow man, apprehend
> The Maker of these glories know?"

Socrates declared that all his knowledge but served to convince him how very little he knew of even what was knowable. Our less modest philosophers take the length, breadth and depth of the power of God as confidently as they would take the dimensions of the Parthenon. The geologist, the botanist, the chemist, the physiologist, who have turned over but a few leaves in the great book of Nature, tell us the Bible is a fable, and that God is subordinated to the laws of Nature! Of a truth,

"The force of impudence could no further go."

Edwards on the Will.

(SOUTHERN QUARTERLY.)

We are not emboldened to look searchingly into anything that Dr. Bledsoe has written; because he is not here to answer for himself. He was not infallible, and yet he stood so far in advance of our foremost men in the path of light that, now that its glory has hid him from our view, the church will wait long for one to take his place. His exalted ability may well make us hesitate to suggest the possibility of his being in error, but it need not prevent us from expressing an honest difference of opinion.

In his article on Edwards on the Will (Southern Quarterly for July, 1878) I think he has misapprehended Edwards, and has found occasion for saying much that is discreditable to him. I refer to his charge of ambiguity and indefiniteness in stating the "sense" in which Edwards uses the word "necessity," in the "Inquiry." Edwards had freely used the terms "natural necessity" and "moral necessity" without defining the "sense" of the terms. Possibly he had conceived this to be unnecessary, as they might take their positions under the more general definition he had given of philosophical and metaphysical necessity. He had said: "Philosophical necessity is really nothing else than the full and fixed connection between the things signified by the subject and predicate of a proposition which affirms something to be true. * * * When the subject and predicate of the proposition, which affirms the existence of anything, either substance, quality, act or circumstance, have a full and certain connection, then the existence or being of that thing is said to be necessary in a metaphysical sense; and in this sense I use the word necessity," etc. In what "sense?" is there any blundering indefiniteness in this? Philosophical necessity affirms something to be true; metaphysical necessity affirms something of the substance, act, quality or circumstance of the thing which is true; and the necessity is found in the full and fixed connection between the subject and predicate of the proposition which affirms it. After thus defining the term "necessity," and telling us that it is "in this sense" he uses it, he proceeds to show how the subject and predicat may have a full and perfect connection "in and of themselves." Dr. Bledsoe has confounded these methods "of connection" with the "sense" in which Edwards uses the word "necessity." The reply of Dr. Bledsoe to the "Inquiry" is not affected by this (as we conceive to a) misapprehension of Edwards, and we think that it would lose none of its convincing power by the elimination of this blemish. The article is a study. Edwards labored under the delusion that his theory maintained the "freedom of the will," although according to it the connection between the power, motion and influence of motive and the volition was as real and necessary as that between any cause and its effect; that if a man had power to "conduct" according to his choice, even though that choice had been produced by any influence, however acting or from whatever source, "the man is free." In one of his letters he says the liberty of "conducting as one pleases" includes the "liberty of choosing as he pleases," but instantly adds: "Without determining how he came by that pleasure." Again he says: "Let the person come by his choice anyhow, yet if he is able, and there is nothing in the way to hinder his pursuing and executing his will, the man is perfectly free according to the primary and common notion of freedom." And again: "If any imagine they desire, and that they can conceive of any higher liberty than this, they are deceived, and delude themselves with confused, ambiguous words, instead of ideas." We are astounded that a sophism lying upon the surface of his theory should have escaped detection. The question was not Are men free when they "conduct" according to their choice? but are they free in choosing? or is the mind free in willing? "A power to act must itself act, and not be made to act by any other power, or else it does not act at all." It is only acted upon, and acts o necessity.

Making some allowance for "opinions already formed," we are still puzzled to see how any thoughtful reader can, after the perusal of this paper, doubt the philosophical and scriptural orthodoxy of "free agency," as held by Arminians.

W. H. W.
JACKSON, MISS., July 31, 1878.

We exceedingly regret the occasion of the following slip from the Western Methodist. The suspension of the publication of that able paper will, of course, be temporary. We trust that the editor, publisher and all connected with it may be graciously shielded and preserved during the prevalence of the epidemic in Memphis.

TO THE SUBSCRIBERS AND READERS OF THE WESTERN METHODIST.

On account of the yellow fever in Memphis, and the panic caused by it, we find it wholly impracticable to issue a full sheet this week, and, besides, we are obliged to suspend publication for a season. Our type-setting force is diminished, and the steam press on which our paper is printed is about to be stopped, our quarters being within the infected district; and, besides, the carrying of the mails from Memphis is greatly impeded, and has for the present ceased on one of the principal routes—the Memphis and Little Rock railroad.

These reasons certainly are sufficient for temporary suspension. But besides, during the epidemic of 1873 we issued the paper regularly from week to week at a heavy loss, principally because the epidemic destroyed patronage from city advertisers, so that our receipts were very small, while expenses were as large as ever. Now we cannot stand a loss of this kind—it would cripple us almost, if not quite, beyond recovery.

We intend, if it please the Lord to spare us to resume publication just as soon as we can; and subscribers shall not lose a number ultimately on account of the suspension. We will "make up" the temporary loss in every instance.

TO THE PREACHERS AND OTHER AGENTS.

Agents who have money on hand for the office will confer a favor by remitting without delay. We need every dollar to meet engagements already made by us. Remit soon, if possible; and let no one fail to settle all, if not before, Conference.

TO EVERYBODY.

We earnestly solicit all our agents and friends everywhere to increase their efforts to obtain subscribers. This is the time of the paper's need, because we lose all our full patronage from advertising. Send names, and the money with names, if possible; if not, pay at Conference.

Address all letters, either for the editor or for the undersigned, as heretofore, to No. 227 Second street, Memphis, Penn.

Perfection—No. 3

Thus far we have seen that man in his estate of innocency was not so fully established as to be entirely proof against temptation, and that he was left to the free exercise of all his powers and opportunities in order to perpetuate those relations which are so profitable to himself and pleasing to God. "But," says objector, "they that are in the flesh cannot please God." I grant it. But the passage does not at all refer to the Christian; for the apostle adds in the next verse: "But ye are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his; and if Christ be in you the body is dead because of sin, but the spirit is life because of righteousness." Nor can any one deny that the awakened sinner, abandoning sin, and believing on the Lord Jesus as his Savior, and being freely forgiven for all past sins, and being regenerated and born of the Spirit, and by another such act of trust and obedience be cleansed by the blood of Jesus from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, so that he may "perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord." Can any deny that this freely-forgiven and blood-washed soul may, not in this sinless state, continue to render a perfect obedience to the "perfect law of liberty." Is there any necessity for his going back to the weak and beggarly elements of the world, only that necessity is the result of his own willfulness and failure to obey God promptly? The provision of grace is complete, and equal to any emergency to prevent any moral disaster. Let us notice these blessed means:

1. The death of Christ effected the destruction of the works of the devil. He conquered every foe, destroyed every work, and pulled down the pillars of hell's empire in the dust, and, leading captivity captive, ascended to heaven amid the songs of angels who shout him welcome back to the skies. For what? That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.—Romans viii, 1. Again: "That we, being delivered from the hand of our enemies, might serve him without fear in holiness and righteousness all the days of our life."—Luke i, 74, 75. And again: "That ye may approve" (or test, as the original means) "things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offense till the day of Christ."

Here, then, we have: 1. A risen Savior, able to save to the uttermost all that come unto him by faith. 2. The written word, the Bible, with every duty made so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein. 3. We have direct access to the Father through Christ. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."—James i, 5. Now he is ever ready to do right and proper things for me in order to please him. Let him ask of God in faith, and he receives instruction in heavenly language. In addition, we have the presence of the blessed Spirit, which Jesus tells us "shall be with us and in us." The offices of the Holy Spirit are many: 1. He convicts not only of sin, but of duties to be done. No man is required to go beyond his convictions. It is by this method that the Holy Spirit is to "guide us into all truth." That believers are not wholly sanctified, and walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, is not for the want of proper information as to duty, for the Bible does reveal every duty in language which they cannot mistake, while deep down in their hearts lies this omnipotent Spirit, whether they will or no, and there is always a correspondence between the convictions wrought and the written word, so that men cannot possibly mistake the divine teaching. But his failure is owing to the fact that these convictions are resisted and the Spirit is quenched, which, if followed, would have led them to the fountain opened for sin and uncleanness, and then into every path of duty. And true it is that the poor and needy, and the unlearned, with no other guide than the Bible and the Holy Spirit, are led to the fountain of living waters before the "wise and the prudent," who must speculate before they obey. If that men would promptly obey, and use these blessed means, which are calculated to make us wise unto a full salvation—perfect men and women in Christ Jesus! Prompt obedience at all times and under all circumstances will soon give an energy to the will, capable not only of dismissing the doubts that now arise from a seeming want of more faith, but of urging the mind forward, and every act of life according to the command, and every moment drive the divine approval. In my next I shall briefly present some of the causes that always lead to failure, and then I am done with this subject.

We find St. Paul commending with tender care "those women who labored with him in the gospel." He styles Phebe and Priscilla "his helpers in Christ Jesus." These, along with First Timothy ii, 9, 10, and many other portions of the word of life, as presenting a type of the women of the apostolic church, compared with many who profess to be followers of the same meek and lowly Savior in these waning sands of the nineteenth century, and how the soul is stirred, the heart made to yearn, and the arms to incline out after those who have "the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof." Wherever the kingdom of God is set up there is power. The secret of the power is the presence of the Holy Spirit. The bestowal of the Holy Ghost is the act of God's setting his seal to that which is entirely his. When the Savior was on the earth, his enemies brought him a coin, wishing to condemn him, but he asked: "Whose is this image and superscription?" They answer: "Cesar's." "Render unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's, and to God the things that are God's," was the divine answer. "And shall the King of kings require less than he awards to the rulers of man?" "Oh, no, be not deceived. God is not mocked." Will he place his seal on coin bearing the image of Cesar? "He that taketh not his cross and followeth after me is not worthy of me." It is our privilege, mothers and daughters, in Israel, to constitute, in part, the Lord's treasury, and as pure gold, shining as brightly, doing the work of the kingdom as effectually in the hovel as in the palace, as a devoted man of God once said to the writer: "Were God to send an angel down to sweep the streets, it would be done in joy of the Holy Ghost." Ah! there is the secret. We must have "Christ formed within us." The temple at Jerusalem, in its completion, with all its vessels of costly material and beautiful workmanship, bears a striking resemblance to the Christian, with his or her attributes of mind and body. The temple, prepared as a dwelling-place for the Most High, was not acknowledged by him as such until the hour of its dedication. At the time it was consecrated wholly to a holy God did his Spirit so powerfully pervade the edifice that all felt his presence. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of the Holy Ghost?"—First Corinthians iii, 16. Yea, and far more precious in the sight of God, through the blood of his dear Son, than the splendid Jewish temple, made with hands, and which was only a type. If the professed followers of Christ who have not would consecrate themselves, in the spirit of the twelfth chapter of Romans, first and second verses, looking in faith to "our Head," even the Lord Jesus, who is able to turn about the whole body, for strength to glorify him in their lives, after the manner of the sixth and eighth chapters of the same epistle, trusting alone in his blood for cleansing from all sin, and in the power of his Spirit learn and suffer his holy will, we would have an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the "righteousness, peace and joy" of the baptized would no more allow them to be silent than could the full souls on the morning of Pentecost. Moses cried: "Would God all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them." Centuries after St. Paul takes up the prophet's pious refrain.—First Corinthians xiv, 5. We live in the time of the promised blessing. (Joel ii, 28, 29), when the handmaids are promised the spirit of holiness. Would that one who, under peculiar suffering, was led to lay all on the altar of Christ—whose spiritual understanding was so enlightened at the sixth chapter of Romans, and whose heart so warmed with love for souls that she felt no sacrifice too great to save some—might persuade all who read these feeble lines to seek sanctification. It is the will of God, even your sanctification. It will make you "a new creature in Christ Jesus." It will enable you to be partakers of his sufferings. A holy life condemns the world; it will always take offense. Their suffering—the crucifixion of the flesh—often begins when called on, in faithfulness to Christ, to take a stand under the command: "Be not conformed to the world." The sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit will enable you, while in the world, to be "not of it"—will enable you to overcome, through the power of him who "overcame and opened up for us a fountain of cleansing" to all who come in faith. The Jew who applied the water of separation knew he was clean from the pollution of the "dead body." That water is Christ; that dead body is sin. We must live in order to serve. The power of the cleansing blood is infinite, and he who promises cannot lie.

Alabama Conference Female College, Tuskegee, Ala.

MR. EDITOR: It was my pleasure to attend the recent commencement of this institution, arriving too late, however, for the exercises of Friday evening, which, I am told, were very enjoyable.

On Sabbath, June 16, at the time for service, there was assembled in the spacious chapel a large and intelligent congregation to hear the Rev. Dr. Price, of Huntsville, Ala. Those of us who know the doctor were there expecting a feast of soul, and, indeed, we were not disappointed. "The entrance of thy words giveth light." Psalms cxix, 130, was dwelt upon in the doctor's most felicitous style.

The exercises of Monday and Tuesday evening following were of a most entertaining character. On Tuesday morning we were entertained with a literary address by Col. Calloway, of Selma, Ala., and a review of the pictures with which the walls of the chapel were so beautifully decorated, and which, though silent, were eloquent in the praise of the young ladies who executed them, and the very efficient teacher under whom they had attained such proficiency.

On Wednesday commencement day we had a rare feast in the essays read by the five young ladies of the graduating class, and the closing address, with delivery of diplomas, by the president, which, with the usual announcements, closed the exercises of this commencement, second to none it has ever been my pleasure to attend. Of the ninety young ladies in attendance we were informed that thirty-six were boarders in the institution, giving the president a family numbering forty or more. I at once focused myself on plans to know something of his management. More system and better order I have never found.

The religious sentiment of the institution is of the most salutary character—none better, I presume. As to the health of the institution, let the facts speak. I was informed, if I mistake not, that there had not been exceeding two professional calls by a physician during the term. The building and surroundings have undergone considerable repairs, and are kept in a style that may be called a model of neatness. We may justly feel that we have in this an institution second to none in the land, commending itself in every important consideration to every parent in the country. I give my honest conviction when I say to all who have daughters to be educated: You cannot better subserve the social, intellectual, moral and religious interests of your daughters than by sending them to the Alabama Conference Female College.—J. Massey, president.

The Sabbath.

What a sweet, holy influence seems to reign on this blessed day, which the God that ruleth the universe hath set apart for his service! With what feelings of thankfulness and joy do we listen to the chimes of the Sabbath bells, calling the humble worshipers of God to his holy sanctuary! How pleasant is the softened murmur of the voices of the little ones as they repeat to their teachers, in sweetest accents, the story of the young child Jesus!

All nature seems to take part on this day, in the one grand theme—that of our Maker's praise. The little brook, wandering through dells, seems to ripple on with a smoother motion, and, as it ripples, murmurs: "God is good." The warblers of the woods unite their vocal powers into one softened melody; the very sun itself shines with a softer light on the Sabbath than on any other day.

How many of us can look back on our past lives and say we have kept holy this day from our youth up? Alas! I fear if we were counted we would be few in number. Oh! why should man, whom God hath made "a little lower than the angels," be so unmindful of the command he hath given in regard to the way his Sabbath should be kept? When we meditate on the goodness and mercies of God we are ready to exclaim with the psalmist: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?" for our rebellious and sinful natures are unworthy the tenderness with which God treats the smallest of his creatures.

The hallowed influence of this sweet day of rest also reminds us that there is a place of rest for the people of God; and when we pass through those "pearly gates, 'on golden hinges turning,'" and enter the celestial city, there we will spend one unbroken Sabbath of rest, at the feet of our blessed Savior, throughout all eternity.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names. Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

ROLAND DAY died at Tunica, La., June 16, 1878, aged eighty-one years. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal church at a camp meeting held near Georgetown, Del., in 1835. He first being connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church South since its first organization, and was, for many years, identified with the society at Tunica. He served the church a long series of years as Sunday school superintendent, steward and class-leader, proving himself faithful and efficient in all these relations. He loved the church and his highest ambition was to labor for the advancement of her interests. His faith in the atonement was strong, securing to him abiding peace and power to do the will of God. His confidence in Christ was full. He believed with all his soul that "the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin," and in the closing hours of his life ever contemplated Christ as a precious all-sufficient Savior from sin. He was a devoted lover of Methodism, and yet he was not a bigot. While he was clear in the doctrines that Methodism is Christianity, and is such as to meet the wants of mankind, he was a friend to all true religion, and was ever ready to encourage others, and to contribute to every institution that had for its object the good and welfare of mankind. [illegible]

The life of this good man was [illegible] beyond hours of vigor.

He had [illegible] stricken down in [illegible] and while [illegible] make strong application to the throne of grace, in order to give Thy will be done." He always had a strong desire to be useful to those around him, and [illegible] becoming a burden; and hoping that he could no longer go in and out among the people, and be of service to the church, was grateful that he might become [illegible] depart, and not with such [illegible] watch the Lord's time. [illegible] precious promise was verified to him: "My grace is sufficient for thee."

His sufferings were intense, but patience and resignation obtained during all of his illness. His sweetness of temper, his words of kindness, his strong, upshaken faith made ever-during impressions on all around him. But his sufferings were completed, he was fully ripened for the kingdom, and calmly fell asleep in Jesus on the sixteenth of June, "very early in the morning, the first day of the week," the holy Sabbath, the angel of death stilled forever the pulsations of that devoted heart. A smile passed over his face, "another moment his spirit is in paradise."

PASTOR.

MINERVA ANN, daughter of Ann Brosier and Ajax Graves Ramsey, was born in Chatham county, N. C., January 7, 1820, and died in Lauderdale county, Miss., May 7, 1878.

In 1834 her parents moved to Alabama and settled in Marengo county, where she was brought up, with the exception of about three years spent in Tuscaloosa, where she completed her education.

In March, 1845, she was married to William H. Smith, of Marengo county, with whom she lived happily for several years, and by his death was left with five children. She was afterward married to Col. John A. McQuarrie, of Lauderdale county, Miss., who, with three children, survives her.

During that remarkable revival which occurred in Demopolis, Ala., in 1851, under the ministry of the Rev. Dr. Jesse Boring and others, she was most powerfully converted, and connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she remained a consistent member to the day of her death.

I have often thought she came as near meeting all the requirements of the relation of daughter, wife, mother, sister, as any one I have ever known. She was the center of her own family circle. Husband and children clustered around her as their counselor, who was ever ready to sympathize with them in all their troubles.

She was endowed with a strong mind, with some degree of culture, which caused her to exert a large influence, and to command the respect and esteem of all with whom she came in contact.

Her Christian character was strongly developed, her faith was unwavering and her hope was steadfast.

During her last illness she was most of the time unconscious, but we have no fear for the fate of those who live as she did.

My only surviving sister writes: "I found her at one time awake and apparently conscious. I put a few questions to her, which she answered satisfactorily. She said she had an assurance of her acceptance, could fully trust her Savior, and only dreaded parting with her family. She died as she lived—a Christian. Thank God, we sorrow not as those who have no hope."

Thus has passed away, in holy triumph, one of the truest, noblest women I have ever known.

THOMAS V. RAMSEY.

HOWARD MCKAVEN DEFRANCE, son of P. W. and Eliza DeFrance, was born in Carroll parish, La., August 3, 1855, and died May 24, 1878.

Bro. DeFrance was dedicated to God in infancy, and was reared under that pious influence which develops true manhood, and which will be known in the fruit of life. The foundation was early laid for a life of usefulness, and the [illegible] of character was there upon based. Truthfulness, the [illegible] of his life, and [illegible] which was vicious or degrading, in the home circle, for such was marked by [illegible] dence to and tender regard for father and mother, gentleness and loving [illegible] for sisters, and kindness and respect for others. With great amiability and pleasing manners he had the esteem and respect of all who knew him, and a host of friends mourn him.

He was converted in the [illegible] camp ground in September, and [illegible] assigned the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. A [illegible] had [illegible] the Lord was good to work on the [illegible] congregation, and brought [illegible] into the fold of God, many of whom were converted. I thought then, just a [illegible] of Christian devotion would [illegible] him; how sad it is [illegible] work after teaching [illegible] is taken from us, and the [illegible] while it is yet day! He suffered many months with a slow, lingering disease, and in the midst of intense [illegible] was perfectly resigned to God's will, and often expressed the desire to me to be with Christ, which was far better. His [illegible] was triumphant.

JOHN W. HITCHMAN was born in Devonshire, England, June 6, 1827, emigrated to America in [illegible] and settled in New York; was married to Mary Lynn in 1847; came to Georgetown, S. C., in [illegible] thence to Columbia, [illegible] to Boston, Mass., from which place he [illegible] to Baltimore, Md., where he was [illegible] home on earth. He departed this life [illegible] after a brief illness of about [illegible] days. He professed [illegible] a year of seeking Christ. He united himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, [illegible] and when it [illegible] departed and became [illegible] Christ. He served the Church [illegible] years in the [illegible] church [illegible] was [illegible] and [illegible] years in the [illegible] church [illegible] was [illegible] and [illegible] years in the [illegible] church [illegible] was [illegible] and

A Higher Life.

...carnest and devoted Dr. John ... the British Wesleyan Conference, ... said at a public meeting ... original announcement in connection with Methodism by our ... was to spread scriptural holiness ... the land. It is far older ... Methodism. "True religion is the same under all dispensations, under the law of the commandments ... Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." ... as Mr. Wesley explained it, Christian perfection. Many stumbled at the presentation of Mr. Wesley, and thought the whole of his teaching to be repeating that, when he used the phrase "Christian perfection," he did not mean absolute perfection such as belonged to God or the angels, nor he mean angelic perfection, such as ... in Paradise; but such a perfection as the Christian believer may attain in this probationary life. ... what a blessed state that is! ... that the Lord would stimulate ... to seek it, to feel that my soul ... that it is not distracted ... by envy, pride or evil ... to feel that my soul lies ... the rock and on the ... of Jesus; that my will is fully ... to his will; and that, I can say ... Christ, my great exemplar: "I ... to do thy will, O God." Such ... been the experience of ... good men in all periods of the ... was the experience of ... "walked with God;" and ... with God came so closely ... world that he was drawn ... and soul together. See ... difference there is between a man entirely devoted to God on earth and a man received into glory—he walks with God on earth, and is with God in heaven. So with Abraham, who walked before God and was perfect; Daniel, greatly beloved of the Lord; Paul, who was crucified to the world, and to whom the world was crucified, so that the world had no more life and power over him than a dead malefactor, and he was as a dead malefactor to it. Oh, that we all were the subjects of this double crucifixion. "Amen!" Such, too, was the experience of holy Fenelon; and John Fletcher was so filled with God that he used to cry out: "Lord, withhold thy hand;" but afterward he learned a better prayer: "Lord, enlarge the vessel." And here is my hope for eternity: that the Lord can enlarge the vessel of the soul and fill it—enlarge it and fill it, and that evermore. So with Bramwell, Sloner, Smith, Hester Ann Rogers, Mary Burton and many more.

After expressing a wish that the meeting should take a love-feast form, the chairman gave some account of his own experience, making touching references to his sainted mother, who lived in the enjoyment of the blessing of perfect love, exemplified in a life of singular usefulness, and in a triumphant death. Let us be thankful, he added, that this good old Methodist doctrine is being revived and so openly avowed in our day. At Oxford even it had been publicly set forth with acceptance. What is wanted to lift us up and to fill our people up is the enjoyment of this perfect love, this walking in light. Then there will be fellowship with the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ; and then there will be fellowship one with another, and we shall experience moment by moment, and in all the perils and trials and enjoyments of life, that the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanses us from all sin. Yes, there is a region of light for the sanctified, in which there is no darkness; and there is a celestial and divine radiance flooding and surrounding the soul of the man wholly devoted to God not known by the half-hearted, who yield themselves to worldliness and evil tempers. There is the glory of God resting and burning upon the spirit of him who keeps himself unspotted from the world, that cold, covetous professors know nothing of. Mr. Dr. Jobson had been somewhat afraid that such glowing and blessed experience in this self-indulgent and luxurious times, in which we live was deteriorating; for the old phraseology in Methodism such as was familiar to our fathers of "the indwelling of Christ within the soul, the glory of God resting upon it"—was not so frequently used as aforetime; and if the phraseology failed, the thing represented by it failed. Language was the expression of what existed in this as in other things. But Christian holiness must not be allowed to fail. It must not fail in the pulpit, in the class meeting, in the love-feast or in daily life. It must be sought and made prominent in all ranks and classes of Methodism. Then Methodism would be a power greater than it had ever been. Then would the church of their fathers "arise and put on her beautiful garments." Then would she "arise and shine," and find that her light had come. Then would she be pure, powerful and triumphant. Then would she "go forth clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." He desired, as before said, that the meeting should partake as much of the love-feast character as practicable, and that ministers and laity should be free to speak their experience in relation to the object of the meeting. For himself, he could say his soul longed above all things for purity and divine fullness that as the hunted, hunted deer panted and cried aloud for the water-brooks, his soul thirsted and cried aloud for the living God, and that the great and constant inquiry within him was: When shall I come and appear before him?

The Poet.

Will young poets excuse me if I make use of a very homely image? They say that among the pea-fowl, the mother-bird, when she would rear her young, retires from fair and thoroughfare, and seeks the most silent places of the wood. There she sits days and weeks, unseen even by her mate. At length, when the brooding time is over, and her young are fully fledged, she walks forth some summer morning, followed by her brood, and displays them with pride before human homes. This, I take, truly represents the way that poetic genius instinctively takes. Vital poems, whether short or long, slight or serious, are born not amid literary talk, but in silence and solitude. Coleridge, I believe, said that he never could create anything if he told his purpose to any one before it was completed.

There may be some in this place to whom it will be given to shape the poetry of a new time. If criticism be needed, this generation has done that work to satiety. It has edited and re-edited every great poet, found out all that can be known about each, and a good deal that cannot be known, has counted and scheduled the percentage of light endings and of weak endings, of end-stopped and run-on verses in every play, has compared, corrected, annotated with most praiseworthy and sometimes wearisome exactness. It is surely time that this work should cease. For the coming generation we may hope some higher work remains to do—even the old and create the new—to use whatever valuable result has been achieved by the laborious processes, and to burn up the heaps of rubbish in a fresh flame of creative inspiration. The critic has had his day—it is time the poet once more should have his. And if the national life continues to beat strong, if the nation is fired with great, not with ignoble aims, then poets will rise to set to music the people's aspirations, and will "leave the critics well behind them."

And if any young spirit feels touched from within by the poetic breath, let him not be scared by the oft-heard saying that the day of poetry is past. Macaulay, indeed, has maintained that as "knowledge extends and as the reason develops itself" the imaginative arts decay. It is the literary creed of Mr. Carlyle, several times announced, that the poetic form now-a-days is an anachronism; that plain prose alone is welcome to him; that he grudges to see men of genius employ themselves in fiction and versifying, while reality stands in such need of interpreters. "Reality is, as I always say, God's unwritten poem, which it needs precisely that a human genius should write and make intelligible to his less gifted brothers."

To discuss these views fully would require several lectures, not the end of one. I can now but throw out a few suggestions. So far is it from being true that reason has put out imagination, that perhaps there never was a time when reason so called imagination to her aid, and when imagination entered so largely into all literary and even into scientific products. Imaginative thought, which formerly expressed itself but rarely except in verse, now enters into almost every form of prose except the barely statistical. Indeed the boundary lines between prose and poetry have become obliterated, as those between prose and verse have became more than ever rigid. Consider how wide is the range of thought over which imagination now travels, how vast is the work it is called upon to do.—Principal Shairp.

Voltaire's Mendacity.

Regarded as an individual and man of the world, Voltaire's great fault is not that he attacked Christianity or wrote immoral books, but that he was such an incorrigible and shameless liar. This side of his character is shown by the following incident: It was not to be supposed that a body of the learning and sincerity, and especially of the intellectual capacity, of the Geneva clergy of that day should allow his attacks to pass in silence; and, among others, a pastor Vernet had published a reply to one of them. Voltaire responded by a pamphlet which he called "A Christian Dialogue, or Preservative Against the Encyclopedie by Monsieur V., of Geneva" in which the said Monsieur V. gradually yields every position in regard to the miracles to his skeptical opponent, and concludes by acknowledging that his and his brother ministers' interest in preaching the word was a purely professional one. Some time after, Christ having meanwhile answered other treatises of the philosopher, the latter added a note to his "[illegible]." We have original letters of his Vernet's in which he requests M. de Voltaire kindly to intrust to his charge the publication of his "[illegible]" and to accept his services as proof-reader." This accusation caused much scandal, but the accused was soon able to right himself by producing letters proving that he had been requested by Voltaire, not Voltaire by him, to superintend the appearance of the "Histoire," as he had some time before superintended Montesquieu's "Esprit des Lois," and that, having discovered numerous errors in regard to Christianity, he had requested the author to accept his corrections; but, being refused, had declined further to have anything to do with the affair. "His Majesty's Gentleman in Waiting" was not, however, a man to be squelched by such proof as this; and set himself at work to manufacture letters of Vernet, which should substantiate his original assertion. These he read to those of his Genevese friends who visited him during the following days, until, one evening, Vernet himself appeared upon the scene. He was received with affected politeness, and then, in the presence of the large company which he found assembled, he drew forth the letters in question, and read one.

"Well," exclaimed Voltaire, "what does that prove?"

"It proves that you were wrong in asserting that I solicited permission to see your work through the press."

"All right; you are quite correct. We have all of us some lapses to reproach ourselves with, but let bygones be bygones; come and dine with us."

It is needless to add that this impudent invitation was not accepted.—Sunday Afternoon.

THE DIFFERENCE.—I saw a letter written by a young invalid who had been sent to Madeira to escape the rigor of a Scottish winter. It glowed all over with the praises of the place. The climate, the landscape, the friends, the food—all were of the best. Even in the matter of health there was neither sickness nor pain. But one plaint met bond but long, ran through the letter like its woof, the key-note of its melancholy cadence was: "I have no appetite. If the appetite should return I would be well." The next mail brought intelligence that she was dead and buried. In the midst of plenty she died of want, a want not of food, but of longer.

This is the ailment of which many souls are dying in the city and land to-day. Wells of salvation are flowing, and overflowing, and flooding the land. The proclamation everywhere resounds: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." Yet many perish perish for want of thirst. I know not any pleasure of sense more exquisite than a draught of cool, clear water when you are thirsty; but few things are more insipid than water when there is no thirst. It is thus that Christ, and his salvation are very sweet to one, and very tasteless to another.—D. H., in Sacred Gleanings.

Every true Christian should daily and hourly say to himself: "I am in the world that I may serve God, serving the most honorable thing of all—almost all are most ashamed. Every one desires only to rule and enjoy.

A young lady being asked where her native place was, replied: "I have none. I am the daughter of a Methodist preacher."

Religious Intelligence.

—The Presbyterians and Congregationalists have each paid off $1,000,000 of church debts.

—The association of Catholic youth of Catalunia, Spain, have decided in favor of a general pilgrimage to Rome on October 15. A large number of pilgrims are expected to join in the demonstration.

—A petition signed by the Patriarch of Venice and several Italian bishops has been presented to the Pope, asking him to introduce the cause of the beatification of "the glorious Pius the Ninth."

—The oldest church in New Jersey is the old Bergen Reformed Church, organized in 1660. Its three last pastors have occupied the pulpit for 120 years. The present pastor, Dr. B. C. Taylor, has served the church 50 years.

—It is said that within a fortnight eleven clergymen of the Church of England have withdrawn and joined the Church of Rome. Earl Percy and the Rev. C. R. Burrows are also said to be preparing to enter the Catholic communion.

—A Bible-reading community of eighty souls has been found in the town of Corato, in the Neapolitan province of Italy. It is the outgrowth of the present of a single Bible in 1850 to an image-maker of the place, who, being converted by its perusal, added the work of Bible distribution to his own trade.

The Procureur of the Holy Synod of Russia has published at this late day his statistics for 1875. In that year there were 59,791,000 Orthodox in Russia, excluding Uniate Greeks and the Orthodox inhabitants of Kamschatka, Tobolsk, Irskoutsk and Georgia, and all soldiers and sailors in active service. Rather defective statistics. Of the number given, 28,[illegible] were males and 28,486,563 were females. The converts to Orthodoxy in 1875 were reported to have been 12,[illegible].

It is announced that the Rev. J. L. Phillips, corresponding secretary of the Free-Will Baptist Foreign Mission Society and missionary in India, has succeeded in raising $25,000 for the endowment of a Bible school in India for the training of native helpers. Of whom the missions in that country have great need. He is to sail soon. The society has five mission stations in India—Midnapore, Balasore, Jellasore, Bhimpore and Santipore. Connected with these missions are [illegible] members, of whom [illegible] were added the past year by baptism. The society is trying hard to get means to reenforce the mission. The amount raised and expended last year was about $[illegible].

—The Church Missionary Society faithfully engaged in opening up Central Africa, undeterred by the sad misfortune at Lake Victoria. Four missionaries, well equipped and accompanied by a dragoman engaged, at Cairo, have started for Uganda by way of the Nile. They went by steamer from Suez to Suakim, the port of southern Egypt. Thence they were to take camels across the desert to Berber, on the Nile, whence a steamer will convey them up to Khartoum. There Col. Gordon has kindly undertaken to take charge of them, and we hope they may find no very serious difficulties in getting up to Gondokoro, and thence by the military outposts which now control that hitherto unsettled country, to the frontier of Uganda.

—The Central Turkey Mission of the American Board has held its annual meeting at Marash. The annual report contained many items of interest. It stated that the amount of money given by the people during the year for the support of their religious and educational institutions was very large when the circumstances under which the 10,816 piasters was raised were taken into consideration. There are in the mission 29 churches, which have 2,506 members. The number added on profession of faith was 174, and 24 unworthy members were excommunicated. In connection with the 29 churches there is preaching once a week to congregations aggregating 1,[illegible] souls. There are 57 Sabbath schools, with [illegible] scholars. In the 42 common schools there are 50 teachers, who are giving instruction to [illegible] scholars. The need of more laborers is represented as urgent.

—Dr. Mr. Mitchell writes to the Monthly Record of the Free Church of Scotland giving the result of the invasion of the Ahmednuggur Mission of the American Board by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, some of whose missionaries are extremely High Church and Ritualistic. Under the guidance of the late highly Ritualistic Bishop of Bombay, Dr. Douglas, the society above named went right into the region occupied, and well occupied, for more than fifty years, in the district of Ahmednuggur, by the American Mission. The intrusion was earnestly protested against in many quarters; but Bishop Douglas held all "sectaries," whether European of American, in utter scorn, and he paid not the slightest attention to the remonstrances. He gained converts, real or pretended, attracting not a few from the American Mission by rogues that scented to most wear in Western India altogether unattainable. These were put under "priests" of the highest sect of Anglican theology, among whom the Rev. Mr. Barker stood conspicuous. This gentleman led his people to the very gates of Rome, going even further than either the late or the present Bishop of Bombay. His conduct was so extraordinary that he was removed from his post. His flock, being left without a shepherd, advanced a single step and entered the Romish fold. The Roman Catholic bishop was eagerly waiting for them and beckoning to them to advance. Mr. Barker then reappeared. He asked the Romish bishop the reason of the conversion of the people, and ended by deriving his satisfaction that they had not fallen into the hands of the Americans, but had joined the Roman branch of the Church Catholic. The number is said to be nearly five hundred.

THE GREAT FRENCH FAIR.

BY J. T. TROWBRIDGE.

At the great French Fair
Everything under the sun is there.
Whatever is made by the hand of man
Stuffs from China and Hindustan,
Grotesque bronzes from Japan;
Products of Iceland, Ireland, Scotland,
England, Finland, I know not what land—
North and south land, cold land, hot land—
From Siberia—
From Liberia—
Every article and invention,
From every country you can mention
From Algeria and Sardinia,
From Cuba and Virginia,
Egypt, Siam, Palestine—
Lands of the palm tree, lands of the pine
Lands of tobacco, cotton and rice,
Of iron, of ivory and of spice,
Of gold and silver and diamond—
From the farthest land and the land beyond
And everybody is there to see—
From Mexico and Mozambique
Spaniard, Yankee, heathen Chinee,
Modern Roman and modern Greek,
Frenchman and Prussian,
Turk and Russian—
Does that have been, or soon to be
Through miles of aisles
Of spacious aisles,
Man's wealth of the world in gorgeous display
Is spread under the endless tiers
Of lights.

Homely Talks for Girls.

HOW TO TALK.

I want you all to try most earnestly to be good talkers.

That means a great deal. A woman who can charm by her conversation is always sought for. Of course some women have a gift of expression, but all can learn to talk agreeably if they will give their mind to the acquisition of the art.

How can you learn? Just begin. Talk about something. Nonsense is better than awkward pauses. Don't think of yourself, but start a subject. If it must be the weather, pull that to pieces, compare to-day with yesterday, and hope for a fair to-morrow; but never sit like a scared parrot or an automaton that has run down.

A great deal is said about the everlasting clack of a woman's tongue, and many poor jokes and a few good ones are made on our volubility and incoherent prattle. But scandal, or twaddle, or illogical, vapid chatter is not conversation.

To tell an anecdote successfully is one of the fine arts, and a very difficult thing to achieve. How many of you can do it without

Try it. Get together some evening half a dozen girl and boys, and each one tell an anecdote as concisely and as picturesquely as possible. Your experience will prove that you need practice.

Then select some one subject—anecdotes of children or traveling, legal wit, or repartees or bulls. Study one or two good jokes, as you would a lesson. Get the lights and shades, the right tone, the facial expression that adds so much to a story, and when you meet again notice the improvement. An amusing anecdote will often put a whole family in good humor or rouse a dinner-table from dullness.

But to talk too much, even if you do it admirably, is, if anything, worse than silence. A woman who really knows a good deal is apt to try to tell you all she knows in one interview. She is terribly oppressive. A gentleman assured me, the other day, that he had given up the acquaintance of a very brilliant woman because he had been trying two years to tell her something important, but never could get in a word! True conversation is an exchange of ideas, not a lecture or an essay.

Don't talk about yourself. No one wants to hear of your success or defeat, your joy or trials, except the few tried friends who are really interested in whatever concerns you.

Protruding egotism makes even a great and learned man ridiculous, and in a woman it is apt to degenerate into minute details, which are nauseating and a waste of time. Talk of things, events, books, others' interests, and, if people must be discussed, do it sparingly, and, above all, charitably.

If you have a tendency to sarcasm, try hard to restrain it. It makes you feared and suspected. A keen sense of the ludicrous is a great blessing, giving flavor and sparkle to every-day life; but don't make targets of your friends. Personalities are unlady-like and unchristian.

WHAT TO AVOID.

If I cannot inspire you all with a genius for conversation, I can at least point out some mistakes which are made every day, some habits which should be avoided, and some phrases which you must taboo if you desire to be agreeable.

I know a lady and her husband who would be delightful companions, but they have each a pet phrase, and it spoils all they say. The lady adds "To be sure" to everything you say, while the gentleman carries you along with a dreadful "You see? You see?" as a running refrain to his otherwise interesting conversation. They are charming people; they give such a warm welcome, such a good dinner; but their friends are wearied by those set, monotonous catchwords.

Once conquered by such a habit, and it gains as strong a hold as rum or opium. It requires an iron will and constant watchfulness to be rid of even three words.

Don't say "You know" to help out a scanty stock of ideas, especially when your hearers don't know a thing about it. Some people use "As I say," in an oracular way, when they have never expressed the thought before; others prefer the present tense while describing a past event, "he says" or "says she," when speaking about a conversation of perhaps a month ago. The mistake is reversed with the word expect. "I expect she did," or "I expect it is an interesting book," for, I suppose or think so.

"Will" is often wrongly used for "shall," even by persons of culture, and it is difficult to define the limits of these words though a trained ear can tell at once which is the proper word to use. "I shall" for what is in the future, "will" for determination and certainty. "Don't" does double duty for itself and "does not." "He don't think of going." "He don't think" is very bad, yet we hear the contraction daily.

Avoid the gelatinous but inane "padding," such as "Is that so?" as an unmeaning response to what your friend has squarely stated "is so." A single sentence often reveals culture, or the lack of it. I paid a visit to a pretty, well-dressed lady the other day, and she said: "I used to be real slender, but some way I've flesh'd up terribly within the last few years."

If you fail to hear a question, never attempt to remedy the matter by a vacant "How?" or "Which?" It would be equally reasonable to use "Moreover?" or "Notwithstanding?" "I beg your pardon," or, "Excuse me, what did you say?" or, "Pardon me, I didn't hear," are suitable phrases.

It is very rude to interrupt any one, or anticipate the ideas of a slow talker, or to correct one who is laboring to get off a joke, be it never so poorly done. Don't fight for a point. It is much wiser and more graceful for a lady to yield, if not convinced, than to hold pugnaciously to her own notions of things, as a hungry dog hangs on to a bone.

Finally, try to draw out what is good, and bright, and loveable in those about you—a sure way to gain happiness and friends. And remember Dick Steele's witty advice: to always find out whether they would prefer to hear you or that you should hear them.

Henry Clay.

Here is a story which contains a hint for boys who hope some day to become eminent and influential men. No American probably ever possessed the secret of personal influence over men and knew so well how to use it, as did Henry Clay.

His secret lay in his warm heart and remarkable memory. He never forgot a favor or a face. His journeys to Washington were performed slowly on horseback, or in the leather-lined stages which crossed the mountains. Every stage-keeper and negro hostler on the way claimed "old Harry Clay" as his personal friend. An old gentleman gives us the following reminiscence of him:

"I lived in a little village on the National Road. One evening, when I was a boy of fourteen, I was closing my father's store for the night, when a tall, ungainly, keen-eyed man entered hurriedly. I had seen his picture. The blood fairly stopped in my veins.

"'Is Mr. Noel in?'

"'No, sir, he is out of town.'

"He turned away with great annoyance.

"'I am his son, Mr. Clay,' I said. 'What can I do for you? Anything to do the world.'

"He laughed. I put on my way home, and find myself out of money.

"'I hung open the desk.'

"'I would like to borrow a hundred dollars,' he said, making out a due bill to my father.

"In a day or two the money came back. Four years afterward I was in a town which was preparing to receive Clay as the candidate for President. There was to be a barbecue, an illumination, etc. A procession of citizens and soldiers went out to meet him. I was an awkward country lad, but I followed in the crowd. The leading politicians, all the great men of the town, were in front.

"On reaching the little roadside inn a muddy hack, outside showed that Mr. Clay had arrived. The next moment he came out on the porch. There was a deafening cheer. His eye swept over the crowd, and he singled me out. He held out his hand.

"'Like my friend Noel,' he said.

"That was the proudest moment of my life. Clay had his faults, but the man who could surrender to give pleasure to a boy, at such a time, had a noble humanity.

THE HAPPY MAN. The happy man was born in the city of Regeneration in the parish of Repentance unto Life. He was educated at the school of Obedience, and now lives in Perseverance. He works at the factory of Diligence, and is noted for his large estate in the county Christian Contentment, and does not a little business at Self-Denial. He wears the plain attire of Humility, but goes to the Court of the great King. The holiest of all, to a garment called the Robe of Christ's Righteousness. He often, at the close of the day, is found in the valley of Self-Abasement as he reviews his occurrences; and invariably climbs afterward the bright vision of Imputations of Spiritual Mindedness; he breakfasts every morning on Spiritual Prayer, and sups every evening on the same; has meat to eat the world knows not of; and his drink is the sincere Milk of the Word.

EARLY IN THE MORNING. A little child once said: "The people whom God sent with his messages always get up early." Of Abraham, Joshua, Job, and many others in the Bible it is written: "He rose up early in the morning;" and of the holy Jesus himself we read: "In the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed." Better for us if we copied his example in this as in all else.

"What's the matter, Sonny?" said a man to a youngster, who was tearfully rubbing his pantaloons as he walked along. "What's the matter? Got on the wrong track?" "Yes," was the reply. "Guess I did, way the old man switched me off just now."

THE touchstone by which charity is most often tried is whether it can endure [illegible].

An Effectual Quarantine.

The Bible tells us of one. Of the heavenly city it is written: "And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie." Sin, like earthly pestilence, must have had a spontaneous beginning. Cholera and yellow fever, and other mortal plagues, are indigenous somewhere, and then they spread along the lines of travel and commerce by their contagious nature. Wherever the conditions are favorable there they develop in an alarming degree, and sweep through communities as an epidemic. The first germ of sin was hatched in the will of some creature; how long ago and how far away we cannot tell. The beginning was among "the principalities and powers," and it spread until our earth was involved in the fearful calamity. As to us, sin is an imported disease, and yet it could have found no lodgment here if the human soul had not voluntarily opened the door for its admission. It is the peril—the necessary peril of probation, both with angels and with men, that sin may befall them. Doubtless God used all means consistent with his moral government, and the freedom of the creature, to keep sin out of the universe, but a moral quarantine could not guarantee absolute security. In order to holiness there must be freedom, and along with freedom in probation there must also be liability to evil. Whatever the barriers were, sin got in. It is abroad in the universe, and it is epidemic in our world. The law of God, the highest motives to obedience, the endowment of ability to stand, the walls of paradise did not suffice to keep it out.

As prevalent in the earth, it has never as yet been confined to any particular locality. It is found in every community. Notwithstanding the watchfulness of parents, the most careful training, the antidotes of prayer and precept, its traces are found in every family, and those who are most completely isolated and separated from the social infection are touched by it, and sometimes destroyed. It has become the study and care of the good to protect society from the influence of base and obscene literature, and yet these fly sheets of perdition and these pictorials of hell come through the lifeblood to contaminate the minds and to debase the imaginations of the young. In spite of efforts to lay an embargo on vice and to set on foot a blockade that shall keep out drunkenness and licentiousness, nearly every community is pervaded by crime and immorality. The agencies of churches to keep out sin have never been entirely successful. The vows required are strong enough. The terms and conditions are discriminating, applying to goods as well as persons. In some cases the applicants must linger for a season in a sort of probationary quarantine station, and in general they must give vouchers that they are free from contagion. There must be a clean bill of health. But there are some sinners in Zion notwithstanding. Here and there a goat is seen in the flock. There are some carnal persons among the spiritual, and sometimes these "roots of bitterness," smuggled in unawares, spring up and trouble the society of the elect.

Our moral quarantines are even as ineffectual as the most of those which are established to protect communities against the inroads of pestilence. Both are justifiable, and are productive of some good. In regard to the latter, we have our doubts. Some seasons, at any rate, the wasting disease seems to develop with wonderful spontaneity, and quarantines are no better than fences of straw. And at best there are so many avenues to guard, and the subtle germs may travel in so many ways—by sea, by land, and through the atmosphere—that no expedients can be regarded as absolutely effective. Sickness, death and sin will always blight this lower world. Neither individuals nor communities can escape them.

The celestial city is the only place where the inhabitants shall not say that they are sick, where tears shall be wiped away from all faces, and where there shall be no more curse and no more death. There the bar against sin will be absolute and effectual. There will be a blockade that cannot be run, a quarantine that cannot be evaded. Without will be the deadly plague of sin, for it is written: "For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." There will be no intercourse between the outer universe of evil and the city of God. Non-intercourse will be the established law. There will be no coming and going. The separation will be complete and eternal. "And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us that would come from thence." The good are thus shut in to their glorious and sinless home, while the wicked are shut out by an irrevocable decree of exclusion. Whether these restraints are of power, or only such as are self-imposed by the character of the holy and the sinful, the fact is still explicit and clear. There is a great gulf fixed, and this may be needed in order to the security of the redeemed. Besides the strength and perfection of virtue and holiness acquired in the probationary trials of the present life, and by the diligent improvement of the divine grace, it may be necessary further to guard the children of light by placing them beyond any possible contact with the wicked.

"Evil communications corrupt good manners," but across that "great gulf" no spores of infection can ever be wafted, and from the outer world of corruption no miasmatic exhalations can ever come. Security from sin is assured. And this is the assurance of all blessedness. There is this one obstruction that it cannot pass, this one inclosure it cannot enter. Along with a clearer understanding of how moral evil came into the universe, and how it obtained such disastrous sway in our world, will be the glad and rapturous assurance that sin can never touch us more. This sense of security will be one of the crowning elements of heavenly bliss. In spite of our quarantines here, we live in fear and trembling lest the fearful malady invade our homes, and make our firesides desolate. In heaven there will be no fear.

Bro. Trenhart, writing from Auburn, Ala., says: "We were sorry to hear of Bro. Brunson's sickness, and equally glad to hear of his convalescence. We remember you all daily in our prayers." Others also write us of their solicitude and sympathy. We are thankful that our friends remember us all at the throne of grace. There is considerable suffering here among the poor. The paralysis of trade, caused not by the fever, but by the quarantines, is producing more distress than the fevers.

If a stranger were to be dropped down in our midst he would notice nothing unusual. Business houses are open, the streets are lively with people about their accustomed occupations. Our shell roads and other drives are frequented in the afternoons, and the excursion trains to the lake are filled. On Sundays the church services go on as always, and the attendance is not very much less than usual at this season of the year. Bro. Mathews has the basement full on prayer meeting nights, and the other church prayer meetings are very well attended. Up town we notice the young people are playing croquet on the lawns, and in the cool of the evenings some of the thoroughfares are thronged with promenaders. There is, however, a great deal of sickness, and, as will be seen by our reports from the Board of Health, the mortality is between forty and fifty a day. Judging from the history of other epidemic years, the worst will be reached by the first of September. The increase and decline are generally uniform, and the prevalence is usually limited to ninety days, without much regard to frost or other conditions of weather.

One reason for the quiet and calmness of our people is the presence of a great many acclimated persons, and the further fact that we are well supplied with experienced physicians and nurses. There are thousands who have come here to make it their home, and who believe it best to have the fever and be done with it. It is not always convenient or possible to run, and sooner or later they are likely to be caught. Those who expect to live here, and do business in New Orleans and in the gulf region, do well to become acclimated. Under favorable circumstances and with judicious preparations for it, there is not much danger from the fever. Our friends abroad do not seem to understand that persons who have had yellow fever seldom have a second attack. As in smallpox, whooping cough, and the like diseases, there are exceptions to the rule, but those who have had yellow fever are in very little if any danger, even in the midst of the most severe epidemics. In an experience and observation in this city of more than thirty years we have not known a half dozen instances in which persons have had the fever twice.

The panicky feeling which prevails throughout the country is calculated to aggravate the disease. People convulsed with terror are in the worst possible condition to meet the attack. We blame none for avoiding it if they can consistently with their duty to God and to humanity, but under no circumstances ought people to give way to the wild and unreasoning consternation which seems to have seized upon some communities. Let the danger be avoided, so far as Christian principle and manhood will permit, but let all do their duty, trust in God, and be calm. God still lives, and his providence is over us.

Teachers' Meetings.

The success of a Sunday-school depends mostly upon the industry of officers and teachers. If punctual, studious and cheerful in their work, they will have interested and improving scholars. Like teacher, like pupil. That class will have least irregularity and make greatest progress whose teacher, by study and heart-preparation, throws most enthusiasm into the lesson. To secure this fitness, no agency is so helpful as teachers' meetings. Indeed the progressive efficiency and prosperity of any school is seriously questioned where this meeting is neglected. Hoping to stimulate and help those engaged in Sunday-school work who have not employed this measure, I will give the result of my observation and experience.

1. Where should the teachers' meeting be held? In a private house, either the home of the pastor or some member of the school. The best plan is to itinerate. Make a circuit of all the homes of officers and teachers, or at least those conveniently located for the largest number. The church is not best for the interest and success of the meeting. The room is too large, and in winter not sufficiently comfortable. The hospitality, cheerfulness and comfort of a family home promote social feeling, prevent formality, enliven discussion, and are in every respect helpful.

2. When should it be held? Weekly, and, if possible, at night. Then you have more time and less hurry. The largest attendance can generally be secured in the evening.

3. Who should compose the meeting? All the officers, teachers and senior pupils of the school. If practicable the pastor should always be present. Members of Bible classes should be encouraged to attend.

4. How should it be conducted? Here you may have great variety. Let the meeting always be opened and closed with devotional exercises. All should study carefully the lesson before the hour of meeting. This will make study together more profitable. The pastor, superintendent or some teacher appointed should be the leader, and propound questions in order, as to a class of pupils. When a difference of opinion or conclusion arises about any point let there be a free, cheerful interchange of views, without too much warmth, or being too long protracted. Persistent discussions inflame passion, but never convince the judgment. The danger generally is the other extreme, dullness, which precedes deadness. Each should be avoided. It would be well to have some authorities at hand for consultation on difficult and disputed points. All should have their own Bibles, and mark words and passages for use in the class. In addition, after the lesson-text shall have been carefully considered, kindred and special subjects may be discussed. Some one, appointed at the previous meeting, might read an essay on some special feature of the lesson. Another might write out the practical truths and suggestions. For instance, if the lesson be some passage in the history of Daniel, one should read a short paper on the life and character of the prophet; another could prepare something on the geography of the lesson, etc. This will give variety, and at the same time bring before the whole body of teachers information not at the command of all. This should not consume more than one hour and a half. If regularly held, and made interesting by faithful study, it will prove of incalculable benefit to the school. Here are some of the good results secured:

1. Teachers will be thoroughly prepared for their classes.

2. It will secure union and harmony of effort.

3. It will quicken interest in Bible-study.

4. Social feeling among Christian workers will be promoted.

5. The pastor is brought into closer sympathy with teachers.

Methodist Oneness.

The Methodist, writing on this subject, says:

One of the overlooked provisions of the Cape May settlement is a recommendation that where the two churches are weak they shall unite. The recommendation contains the sort of organic unity that is needed—a unity that makes a good church out of two weak ones, not one that subjects one strong body to another which is stronger. The commissioners built better than they knew when they gave this wise counsel. A faithful observance of it would secure perfect peace through all our borders. The small churches that are competing with each other, the small churches that are hopelessly competing with large churches, should lay aside the passions and prejudices, the preferences and animosities of the last generation, and take up the spirit and unity of the Cape May peace. Concessions may be required all round; some matters of general management may need thorough revision; but if we cease to think the other body another church we shall easily concede when concession is needed, and revise when we need revision.

Individuals have already in considerable numbers acted upon the Cape May recommendation. We have seen a complaint that there are enough Methodists of Northern birth in Atlanta, Ga., to make two good societies. We see no reason to complain. These Methodists see no reason why the two jurisdictions of Methodism should be maintained in Atlanta; and so powerful has the peace policy of Cape May proved to be that "disintegration" has shifted and faced the other way. The truth is that the restoration of fraternal relations ought before now to have seriously modified our general policy in the farther South. We shall have to be more forward to use the general influence of our branch to secure the fusion of small churches and the abandonment of hopeless struggles to plant churches where good and sufficient Methodist churches already exist. We write deliberately, speaking for a large Methodist public, having waited long in the hope of being able to announce changes and not desiring to demand such changes. The General Missionary Committee and the bishops may profitably consider, when they meet in the autumn, the new South under the new relations. If these relations had existed in 1861 we should have saved for wiser investments a good deal of missionary money. We noted according to a set of circumstances which have disappeared. We are able now to consider our duty with better lights and under new conditions. The unity of the church having been formally declared, we ought to do what we can to lessen the friction between the jurisdictions. These jurisdictions cannot be geographically separated at present, the border societies need more time to coalesce—and in many places there is room for both societies being vigorous. But we need not maintain hopeless struggles which consume funds raised for the heathen, and we can show a desire to prevent the building of altar against altar on ground new to our jurisdiction, and well worked by another. We repeat that we are as organically one church as we ever can be; what we want is practical recognition of our organic unity. We will add that among our plain duties we reckon the use of our influence to consolidate and build up the colored jurisdiction—making, if need be, some sacrifices of ecclesiastical pride to the health and soundness of that branch.

The British Conference and the Ecumenical Conference.

The subject of an Ecumenical Conference was brought before the British Wesleyan Conference, July 31, by Dr. E. O. Haven, by invitation of the president. Dr. Haven presented the address of the committee of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which was read.

Dr. Haven then, in substance, said that this subject had been intrusted to him, and that he was anxious that it should be fairly understood. Two great churches had spoken definitely on this subject—the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Their action was unanimous. He could not improve the statement of reasons presented in the paper just read, but he wished the Conference to observe that the American churches recommended an Ecumenical Conference not with any reference to a proposed fusion, nor with any reference to the ecclesiastical authority. Nor was their object mutual admiration. But they wished representatives of all the Methodist bodies in the world should come together, and devise means, through our common Methodism, the more to glorify God. He therefore respectfully asked this mother Conference to appoint a committee to consider the subject, and bring it to a successful result.

Rev. Dr. George O. Jones, one of the ex-presidents, inquired whether, should the Wesleyan Conference conclude it was not wise to call such a council, would the American Methodists still proceed in the matter?

President Rigg said Dr. Haven could answer. Dr. Haven said it was the deliberate conclusion of the M. E. Church that such an Ecumenical Conference would be profitable, and that, in his opinion, the branches of Methodism entertaining this view would be likely to hold such a meeting. ("Hear, hear.") but we desire, above all, that in mother Conference ("Hear, hear") should take the direction of the matter.

Dr. Osborn then remarked that the reply to the address of the Methodist Episcopal Church had been adopted by the committee the evening before, and requested that the paragraph relating to this subject be read. It was read, and in substance it recommended the spirit of the union, but expressed an uncertainty whether the time had yet arrived for the holding of a Pan-Methodistic Synod.

Dr. Haven then requested that a select committee be appointed to consider the matter thoroughly, and proceeded to urge the subject. On motion of Dr. George Osborn, seconded by several others, such a committee was ordered, with instructions to report at the next Conference.

The committee consists of the following persons: The president of the Conference, Dr. James H. Rigg; the secretary, M. C. Osborn; the ex-presidents, W. B. Pope, D. D., A. McAuley, Thomas Smith, D. D., W. M. Punshon, D. D., William Arthur, M. A., John H. James, D. D., George Osborn, D. D., John Farrar, John Rattenbury, John Bedford, E. J. Jobson, D. D.; also W. McMullen, of the Irish Conference, Hector Jenkins, M. A., Samuel Coley, Benjamin Hellier, Benjamin Gregory, W. T. Tweddle, R. N. Young, John Baker, M. A., T. B. Stephenson, B. A., H. W. Holland, and John Bond, Conveners.

This committee embraces the men holding the most responsible stations in the Conference, at the heads of departments, and of the highest forms of learning, and is altogether the strongest committee appointed for any purpose. It is well that this Conference should take suitable time to deliberate on so important a subject, and it is to be hoped that the committee will not only report favorably, but draft a plan, and after the approval of the Conference next year proceed to carry the enterprise into execution.—New York Christian Advocate.

Mission Prospects in Turkey.

Secretary Clarke writes to the Advance, that the American Board is very hopeful of the future of its missions in Turkey. He says:

Never before was the preparation so complete for the largest evangelical effort. It is only a few weeks since the translation of the Scriptures into the language of the Turks was finished. The scene that might have been witnessed seven weeks ago this very Saturday in an upper chamber in the Bible House at Stamboul, was one of profoundest interest to Christian civilization in the empire. A small company is gathered there, attracting little attention in comparison with the diplomats convened a little later at Berlin, yet a company on which we may imagine angels to have looked with profound interest. There was Elias Riggs after forty-five years of service, a man who is ready to preach in six languages and who reads fourteen. There was Dr. George E. Herrick, who has been his co-laborer in the translation of the Scriptures into Turkish. There was an English missionary of the Church Missionary Society, and there were three natives of the empire, one Armenian, since appointed professor in the Marash Theological Seminary, and two accomplished Turkish scholars. They have just finished translating the last line of the last chapter of the Scriptures into the Turkish language. They lay the translation on the table, kneel around it, render thanksgivings to God for the privilege they have enjoyed in doing this work and commend it to the divine blessing. In a few weeks this translation will be issued from the press. The way is thus open for immediate and efficient labor among the Moslems. Thus is the preparation complete for evangelical labors among the followers of Islam—for the first time complete, now that the way seems open for such labors. The Scriptures can now be offered to the people of all the principal nationalities in the empire.

In the next place, the preparation for high education is complete through the colleges organized—Robert College, at Constantinople; Syrian College, at Beirut; Central Turkey College, at Aintab; Armenia College, at Harput. A dozen seminaries have also been established for the education of young women. School-books have been prepared in large numbers and are now in press. In hundreds of towns and cities, scattered over the country from the Danube to the Euphrates, and round to the great river of Egypt, native preachers are joining with missionaries in proclaiming the gospel; and now, to add to all this, the last word is religious freedom for all classes, unhindered opportunities for the preaching of the word, and for educational enterprises which shall secure the social and moral transformation of this great empire. Never was prospect more hopeful. Never was there a time when more vigorous efforts were needed to improve the great opportunity.

Columbus station, Amos Kendall.

I announce these changes first through your columns, that they may be in time for the fourth round of Quarterly Conferences; changes made necessary by the unexpected condition and exigencies of the whole work.

Support of the Preacher.

Are you supporting your preache

"Yes, his salary is fully paid u we don't owe him a dollar."

That don't fully answer t question. It takes something mo than money and provisions to su port a preacher. He does not li by bread alone; he requires mo support.

Support of the preacher mea that he shall be made to feel th you extend to him a genuine a tender sympathy. His work is o of peculiar difficulties and trials, o that imposes a constant tax upon t sensibilities. He needs intelligen and affectionate Christian sympath Don't let him starve for lack of it.

Support of the preacher mea that you shall cheer him by yo presence at the public services of t church. It is not supporting t preacher to absent yourself fro preaching, from the prayer meeti or other service of the sanctuar When, on ascending the pulpit a looking around on his congregation your preacher sees only empty pew he does not feel that he is supporte If sickness or any other actual d ability kept his people away, it would be a different thing; but wh he sees on Monday the very sam persons who were too much relax by the heat, or oppressed wi Sunday-sickness," to attend that the day previous, at their places business, and full of energy if pu suit of money, he is freed to dra conclusions that are by no mea encouraging—basis forget to feel th he is not supported as the origin by.

Support of the preacher mea that you shall be ready on pro occasion to defend him against u tions, criticism and unjust complai In every congregation there are the captious critics and chronic co plainers. The most absolute mi terial fidelity gives no exemptio from their bullets and stings. listen to these cavils in silence, or yield a pollite half-way sort of a sent to them, is not supporting yo preacher. The relation you hold your pastor makes you a guardi and defender of his good name as minister of Jesus Christ. He is s for the defense of the truth, and it your duty to defend him.

Support of the preacher mea all this, and more. DEAR DR. PARKER: I have j received the first installment of mu furnished by the Woman's Missio ary Society of the Carondelet Stre and St. Charles Avenue church New Orleans, for our school in th city. Please make an editorial no of it, and call upon other societies join them. You can assure the that the support of our schools Mexico depends on the efforts of o Woman's Missionary Societies an the Sunday schools. Start the gi dren in the work. I will send you letter for the ADVOCATE by ne steamer. Prospect of our work very good.

Your brother in Christ,

W. M. PATTERSON.

We are gratified to report that Re John Hannon, pastor of the S Charles Avenue church, is to all a pearance a well man. His convale cence is rapid and satisfactory. No of our other Methodist pastors hav been attacked so far. All are at the posts and attending to their work.

Rev. Dr. Ahrens informs us th the German Mission camp meeti held near Covington, La., closed o Monday, August 12, and resulted i eleven conversions. It was a goo meeting, and the most of our Ge man preachers in New Orleans we in attendance.

Dedication of the New M. E. Church South at Morgan City.

MR. EDITOR: I am sure you and your readers will be ready to join me in the doxology at the news of our church dedication. On Sunday, August 11, 1878, we gave to the Lord and his service one of the most beautiful suburban churches in the Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. We were all elated, and up to the point of expectation of right royal entertainment when Bro. Mathews promised to be on hand; but the quarantine put an end to all; but with the aid of Rev. S. M. Atkinson, D. D., pastor of the Presbyterian church here, we managed to get through. The congregation in the morning was immense. After filling every available space with extra seats from the Presbyterian church, there were not gain admission. The Knights of Pythias, the Temperance Odd Fellows and Friends of Temperance were out in force. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered on a raised platform. Nearly one hundred persons, of all known Episcopalian, Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist creeds, came by letter and by profession. The church was filled to overflowing, side by side at the 8 o'clock hour. The collections and subscriptions were due to Bishop Wightman, Dr. Lee, Dr. Dyer, of Texas, and myself. The Morgan City Herald, of New Orleans, for the week, has a splendid shell, which was expressly for the occasion. Also Messrs. Bailey Bros., Fr. Conconi, for the donation of the nuts. We have received several other subscriptions since my visit. The ladies of the church formed themselves into a committee for the purpose of raising money to furnish the church with Bible and hymn-book, silver communion service, and organ, and, as might have been expected, succeeded. The church has a seating capacity for two hundred and seventy-five persons, and has cost about $4,000.

Through the Christian benevolence of one of my members this debt will be given in at the next annual Conference free of debt.

Brethren, let us all rise and sing Wesley's old long-meter doxology, commence again. Do come and see Bro. Parker, as soon as you get out of the city, and I assure you that Sister Clay will treat you kindly, and you shall preach in the church.

Success in the work,

ALFRED CLAY.

What We Ought to Do

MR. EDITOR: I have taken the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from its establishment, and expect to continue to do so to the end, because it is the largest and best paper published in the South, is fully worth the money it costs, and it is a Methodist paper, and it is the organ of the Church in which I live. To support it truly

Local services in the Methodist Church wherever they are held are a credit to the Methodism of the station in which they are held, because the pastor is the best educated preacher in town, for no one would have to pay more for such services elsewhere, but he, being a Methodist, has pledged support to its institutions.

I send my sons to the Southern University, at Greensboro, not because it is the best college in the land, because the faculty is able to teach my boys all they are capable of learning, and because the students are less liable to neglect and forget religious obligations there than in a school under State control; and because the maintenance of the Southern University is very important to the future prosperity of the Methodist Church in Alabama. Does not every year send to the ranks of the itinerancy young men who, both pious and well educated, owe all of these might be educated where if the University were not; but how many? Few, comparatively.

Is the duty of the Methodists of Alabama to patronize this Methodist institution, just as it is their duty to patronize their Conference organ and support their pastors. Duty is the word.

LAYMAN.

We are pained to learn, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of August 15, that while on his way to Hopkinsville District Conference, which was to be held at New Middle River, Dr. R. A. Young met with serious accident. The mule attached to the buggy in which he was being conveyed at the seat of the difficulty became frightened, and, in his way, threw the doctor and companion from the vehicle with violence. The doctor sustained a fracture of one or more of his ribs, badly bruised, and at last accounts was suffering greatly.

Books and Periodicals.

Pansy is well known as the author of several very popular religious stories. This book has a double authorship, but it has much of Pansy in it, and the religious element is decided and dominant. The story is made up largely of letters and journals, but it is full of life, and exceedingly entertaining. Its aim is to improve and edify, and especially to inspire the Christian with noble conceptions of devoted and useful living.

—The National Repository for September has the following articles: Stoke Pogis, with scenes in and around the country church-yard, the subject of Gray's Elegy, illustrated; Elizabeth of Hungary, illustrated; Our Editor Three Days in a Woman's Life, Nos. 2 and 3; Empress and Widow; Bulgaria and Its People; Sonnet; Fables and Fabulists; Little Nell, by Dickens; Old Curiosity Shop; Harvest Hymn; Among the Thorns; Voices of Summer, illustrated; Editorials; Miscellany.

—Lippincott's Magazine for September has the following table of contents: Over Sea to the Desert, illustrated; Sir Jacob Astley, Bart., G. C. B.; The Boy Artist; Hill Farming; Sacred Shrines of Some English Cathedrals; A Day at Tantah; An English Family in the United States; and other articles.

—Sunday Afternoon for September has the following table of contents. We note especially: The Testimony of the Spirit; Our Mother's Meeting; Fishers of Men; No. 2; Religion in Colleges; Religious Rights of a Christian State; Adults and Infants, No. 1; After a Ball; Good Conversation.

—The Crystal Fountain is a collection of temperance songs by W. O. Perkins, C. D. Russell & Co., publishers, Boston. It contains 128 pages, of songs, hymns and music, adapted to the use of temperance meetings. Price 35 cents per dozen.

—Golden Hours for September is a very beautiful number of this excellent magazine for the young. Its articles and illustrations are well adapted to please and instruct the boys and girls, and the tone is always decidedly religious.

Literature for Boys.

We wonder whether parents know what an enormous mass of cheap sensational literature is printed in this city for boys. There are large publishing concerns which do a thriving business in the manufacture of story papers for the young. There are others which make fortunes by the issue of a full class of dime novels. The professors upon whom these people's children are at school, and boys employed in shops, offices and stores, they young lawyers, clergymen and physicians of to-morrow, are all of them more or less familiar with the fortunes of some favorite hero of the dime novel or story paper. Bold and reckless of consequences, they are also mischievous, their very faults endear them to a boy, and a pocket full of such trash would be an easy temptation to a boy's weakness. Yet they are bought in immense numbers not only by the poor, neglected children of the streets, but by boys who are supposed to be carefully brought up.

Once in a while we are shocked by the disclosure of some facts which seem to indicate an increase of crime among young boys. The police discover some secret lair where lads of a Dickensian taste play at envy, and bestow the proceeds of a course of petty pilfering; or a gang of young thieves is broken up, and the rascals prove to be half-grown children, or a party of shop boys rob a till and sail on a voyage to the Spanish main; or perhaps the budding hero indulges in the glory of a pistol and an homicide. Stealing in a small way is found to be common among boys. It is not long since the detectives arrested an extensive dealer in postage stamps who obtained all his supplies from errand boys; and most of the money he paid them, we have no doubt, found its way to the purveyors of pernicious literature. The superintendent of the House of Refuge on Randall's Island, who has given a great deal of attention to the philosophy of juvenile crime, mentioned a curious circumstance the other day in conversation with one of our reporters. There has been of late a most remarkable increase in the number of boy tramps. Vagrancy seems to have become with these lads almost a mania. The absence of restraint, the free life in the open air, the irregular and surreptitious meal, the variety of scene and incident, the chance of adventure, have irresistible charms for them; and it is easy enough to trace their wilful taste directly to indulgence in sensational literature.

The publications to which we refer are not usually so immoral in tone that there can be any security to suppress them by law. The evil can only be cured by parental supervision. The more sad that so many of the best and purest are born to prove that parents are shamefully reckless in not knowing what their children read. We are aware that it is the fashion with young people in these times to decry any supervision by their elders as an intolerable impertinence. The spirit of independence which leads to passion of the colleges some time ago has penetrated to the school-room, and probably will go down to the nursery, or may be to the cradle. Still we think it would be well for fathers and mothers to inform themselves a little more fully about the habits of their sons, even at the risk of being styled spies and tyrants by young America.

The Christian Faith in England.

REV. DR. J. H. RIGG.

Christianity, therefore, I conclude, is by no means losing its hold of England, nor of the world. Less protected by legal defenses than formerly, it possesses far more intrinsic strength and energy. It has taken a much larger and stronger hold than at any former period of the great body of the people, including the best educated classes. It has life and energy, a zeal and enthusiasm altogether unprecedented. In Parliament it counts far more illustrious and devoted adherents than in any former age. It maintains an array of philanthropic enterprises, and inspires and sustains an amount of practical beneficence, such as the world has never seen. All this is done in the face of an active infidel propagandism which is no longer fettered as in former times, but is free to do its worst. Let no one, then, fear for Christianity. Nearly one hundred and fifty years ago Butler, in an advertisement to his "Analogy," said: "It is come, I know not how, to be taken for granted by many persons that Christianity is not so much as a subject of inquiry, but that it is now at length discovered to be fictitious." Accordingly he goes on to say that these reputed to be "people of discernment" treated it as a subject only fit to provoke mirth and ridicule." And yet a few years later John Wesley was converted, and Methodism began its race. Butler's faith and Butler's argument survive, while the "people of discernment" and their superficial unbelief with them, have passed into oblivion. Writing some years earlier than Butler, the accomplished Berkely thus describes the infidelity of this day: "Noscheh," he says, "hath proved that man and beast are really of the same nature; consequently a man need only to indulge his senses and his appetites to be as happy as a brute. Georgias hath gone further, demonstrating man to be a piece of clock-work, or a machine; and that thought or reason is the same thing as the impulse of one ball against another. Cinoh hath made noble use of these discoveries, proving, as clearly as any proposition in mathematics, that conscience is a whim, and morality a prejudice; and that a man is no more accountable for his actions than a clock is for striking. But the masterpiece and finishing stroke is a learned anecdote of our great Diagoras, containing a demonstration against the being of God. I am assured that it is as clear as daylight, and will do a world of good, at one blow demolishing the whole system of religion."

Our philosopher, it is added, "are the best bred men of the age, men who know the world, men of pleasure, men of fashion, and fine gentlemen." The fashion of skepticism, indeed, one hundred and fifty years ago, was considered especially attractive and suitable in the case of well and cultivated young people. "You surely, now or nearly see," remarks one of the speakers in Berkely's dialogue, "what no former age ever saw, a young lady, of good [illegible] moulds a divine or an old-fashioned gentleman, who believed the Bible and a Greek and Latin author, and spent much time in hard methodical study."

So wrote Berkely in his "Minute Philosopher." But Christianity survival the fashion of unbelief which that exquisite dialogue so inimitably portrays, and with such serene and beneficent mercilessness reduces to its true order and character as a fashion of vanity and demoralizing, as contrary to the reason and well-being of man as to the majesty of God. The spirits forts were put to the rout. Christian faith not only rose superior to their impieties, but, what was far more, revived from the lethargy and formalism into which it had sunk. When we look back to the age in which Berkely and Butler lived we do not wonder that men should have been tempted to despair of Christianity. But how great and how unspeaking is the contrast now! If even in such an age Christianity asserted its divine character, and claims by the revival which followed, having first refuted and shaken off, even in that dark hour, the attacks of its cavilers and its foes, how unworthy would it be to doubt for a moment of the vitality of the advance, of the victory of Christianity in the present age!

Work is progressing rapidly on the extension of the Morgan railroad to Texas. In about sixty working days from the present time the constructors think they will have the road complete to Vermilionville, in the parish of Lafayette.

Should this early prediction of which the time expired, we will have direct railway communication with this part of the State, and heavy freights will be the consequence. At present the grade between Morgan City and Vermilionville is in perfect condition, with the exception of a few shallow ditches cut through it, and some trifling crossings and Baker's Swamp, where for a distance of one thousand feet there is no grade, though the space is filled.

The company are now filling the swamp, and have but two miles and a half of track to lay to Bayou Teche. They have a construction train, consisting of one engine and twelve cars. They will commence early in October on the swamp, and will complete it in about [illegible] days. There is a working force of [illegible] men employed. New Missouri Pacific and Texas and Pacific officials are in conference at Pacific City, Mo., to arrange for the joint use of the Missouri Pacific bridge at Kansas City by the two roads. The Texas and Pacific has been unable to secure a bridge, and has been compelled to cross the river by ferry. The Missouri Pacific has been unwilling to grant the privilege, but it is supposed the conference will result in a satisfactory arrangement.

THE QUICKEST TIME EAST.—The Great Jackson Route is now making the quickest time to New York ever known, leaving New Orleans daily at 4.15 P. M. and arriving at New York at 6.3 A. M. Allowing for the difference in time between the two cities, the run is made in the unprecedented time of fifty-one and a half hours. This quick time is made only by the Great Jackson Route and is the result of its enterprise in rebuilding its track with steel rails and using its heavy engines and the through system of ballasting that has been inaugurated. This train will be a great accommodation to the people of this city, which it is hoped they will show their appreciation of by their patronage. Only one change of cars, which is made at Cincinnati, Ohio, where breakfast is taken in the splendid dining hall at the depot at 8 A. M.

VANDALIA LINE.—The attention of our readers and the traveling public is called to the line of the above road, from Terre Haute East to Indianapolis, Columbus, Springfield, Xenia, Dayton and Cincinnati. Its cars are models of elegance and comfort, running daily, safely and speedily, along over a track of unsurpassed excellence, almost entirely of steel rails, and the passenger is almost oblivious of the fact that he is changing cars at the end of each division, unless he chances to look out of the window, other than this a change is rendered splendid by the various connections made by it, giving the most direct routes of the vast general public ever dreamed of. The popularity of this old and reliable road is increasing steadily and steadily for the better. The officers of the well-known and highly respected general manager, Col. BUDDING.

The only trustworthy rule as to the time for budding is: whenever the bark of the stock separates readily from the wood, or, in technical terms, "the sap runs," and when the shoot from which the buds are to be removed is sufficiently matured. Early in the season, some kinds of fruit-trees, as the peach, will be making an exceedingly vigorous growth, so much so as to endanger the success of the operation by the excess of sap. The latter may be checked by simply pinching off the tips of the growing shoots. Mahaleb cherry stocks are especially benefited by this treatment.

The operation consists merely in transferring the bud of some valuable variety to any good, healthy stock. Having selected a few partially-ripened scions from the variety we wish to perpetuate, trim off the leaves, leaving about one-fourth of an inch of the stem as a handle to force the bud into position. With a sharp, thin-bladed knife take off a bud with a portion of bark and wood attached, entering about one-half inch below, and emerging the same above the bud. Care must be taken to perform this operation very carefully, as too deep a cut gives us too much wood, and, if too near the bud, is liable to be injured. Some budders remove this thin piece of wood, although it is allowed to remain. The most extensive peach-tree growers use only the bark, with the bud unimpaired, and prepare it by making the usual cut, only deeper than by the old method—but in place of allowing the knife-blade to emerge at the lower end, they withdraw it, and simply cut through the bark at that point, when by the aid of the thumb-nail the bark and bud may be readily removed.

The insertion of the bud is the simplest part of the programme. It consists in making a T-shaped cut through the bark of the stock, and gently pushing the prepared bud into place; should the bark prove somewhat tough, however, the edges may be slightly raised, but stocks in this condition must be regarded with suspicion.

A great deal depends upon tying properly, as I have known very many failures from this cause alone, and it matters but little how carefully the bud is cut or inserted, should the strip be tied loosely or carelessly the bud will in the majority of cases, fail to take.

The wrapping should be of some soft, strong material, the inner bark of the linden-tree or basswood being preferred, of course, when generally. This is prepared by experienced persons during the summer and can be procured of any nurseryman in small quantities. These strings are stripped into narrow shreds and well dampened. In tying the bud into position, the string should always be drawn tightly and evenly, covering every portion of the cut in the stock, allowing only the bud to show, bringing it closely in contact with the stem below, and drawing it under the point of the bud above. In about two weeks the strings will begin to "cut in"—that is, the bark will form in ridges around the ligatures owing to the compression of the latter, when they should be slightly loosened, but not removed altogether; indeed they should remain in place until late in autumn, when they must be cut to prevent freezing beneath.

The ensuing spring will determine whether or not the operation has been successful, as frequently the bud will appear all right during winter, yet really have very little vitality. Head back the sticks to within three inches of the bud, and as soon as the latter grows tie it up to prevent the wind blowing it off. Some of our most careful nurserymen stake up their young yearling buds; and if at all rare, the practice is a good one. In private collections it should always receive attention. The subsequent pruning must be governed by the purpose for which they are intended. In any event the tips of the shoot should be cut off to induce side branches if for standard, cut slightly, at if for dwarfs, head back to eighteen or twenty inches. Peaches will require removal when one year old from the bud.

BEE CULTURE.

In order to become a successful apiarist, Mr. Hotchkiss says, three things are necessary:

1. A location abounding with honey-producing plants of the different varieties, both early and late. For early—such as willow, elm, soft maple, cherry, plum, apple, currant, gooseberry, raspberry, etc.

For fall—buckwheat, golden rod, wild sunflower, and all the many varieties of flowers that bloom in August and September, thus keeping one continuous swarming from early spring until the chilly frosts of autumn, when they must be left to winter quietly.

2. A good hive. [illegible] fathers used the old log gum, half keg, round-trough, etc. But we have that permits every comb to be taken out and examined, and all necessary operations performed with a little pains or exciting their anger. It should afford sufficient protection against extremes of heat or cold, sudden temperature, and be in all its effects of dampness. It should be capable of being adjusted to the wants of other large or small swarms, to allow the combs to be removed when any thing is wrong, and to be well ventilated. In fact, all needful security against the ravages of the bee-moth, the bottom-board should be removable, attached to the hive, for convenience in cleaning it and to prevent the depredations of moths and worms, and it should enable the apiarist who prefers natural swarming and wishes to multiply his colonies as fast as possible to make vigorous stocks of all his small after-swarms. Such swarms contain young queens, and, if they can be judiciously strengthened, usually make the best stock-hives.

3. In order to become a successful apiarist it is necessary that he should understand the internal economy of the bee-hive, to some degree at least; and, unless he is in possession of such knowledge he may be in possession of the best hive in the world, and be placed in the best locality that the country affords, he will be almost absolutely certain to make a failure.

I know a man who has two hundred colonies of bees, and his average amount of surplus honey per hive will not fall short of eighty pounds. He is the right man in the right place, and has the right bees in the right hive. With him it is bees first, and recreation and hunting afterward. Such a man will succeed in a greater or less degree in any locality where fortune may place him.

The enemies of bees are toads, spiders, woodpeckers, king birds, or bee martins, as some call them, the moth miller, and man. But the moth miller is the most destructive, if we except man.

POMACE AS A MANURE.—Some years ago I had a very large quince bush—in fact, over one dozen canes. It covered a large space. It never bore a good quince in three years. All knotty; could not peel them. I put up a grinder and press. Pressed the juice out of many bushels of currants, grapes, black and elderberries for myself and neighbors. Threw all the pomace under the quince bush, to get it out of the way, and for the hens to eat, if so disposed. It came up to the bottom limbs. There was a seedling pear-tree and peach-tree that received all the waste from the press at their roots, which was considerable. Through the summer I pressed for many neighbors. Next year I sold peaches from that tree for $1.50 per bushel, when they were selling on the street for twenty-five cents. The pear-tree never bore before that year was full, fit good for nothing. The quince-tree was loaded; bent to the ground. They were as good as it is possible for a quince to be. That is not very good I think. Last year I had six Champion strawberry vines in a bed. I covered the bed with pomace. They now cover a bed ten feet by six. I believe that the acid in pomace is just what acid fruit wants to do well. Let those who have pomace try it on vines. I had many seed cucumbers. Took the seed out, and threw them among my Naomi raspberry bushes and let rot. Never had finer berries than the next year.—Correspondent of Tribune.

MOWING STRAWBERRY-BEDS.—For several years past I have adopted the practice of mowing my strawberry-beds at the period that the plant ceases to put forth new leaves, and the old ones look dry and rusty. The treatment prevents the production of runners to any great extent, the bed being renewed by offshoots from the crowns of the old roots. Usually by fall the plantation will exhibit one mass of fresh-grown leaves. This treatment fails only when a dry and hot spell succeeds the mowing. I have never suffered but once in this way, when the beds were badly thinned out. I did not lose them, however, as they afterward revived, and, though five or six years old, look this season like new beds. I am so well satisfied with this system that I shall always continue it, taking the risk of having the operation defeated by a drouth, which, after all, only happens occasionally. With plenty of rain it succeeds perfectly.—Horticulturist.

CENTENNIAL BROWN BREAD.—Fill a large bowl one-third full of water, a little warmer than tepid; add half a teaspoonful of salt, and stir in Indian a little stiffer than pan-cake batter; cover, and set where it will keep warm without scalding till light; then turn into a large basin. Add a pint of lukewarm water, half a teaspoonful more salt, with two tablespoonfuls of good brown or coffee sugar, and stir in Graham flour till as stiff as it can be made, but as it can be conveniently made with a spoon. If made thin will the bread will be dry. Grease the tins, turn in the dough, smooth over the top with a knife or spoon; set to rise to rise and, when sufficiently light, bake in a tolerably hot oven an hour or more, according to the size of the loaves. This quantity will make two or three small loaves.

CHICKEN CHIPS AND BONE MEAL FOR FOWLS.—Burnt coal and crushed shells may be used perseveringly in feeding fowls, that is, if the crushed oyster-shells and granulated bones are mixed and placed in a box inside the henhouse, where the birds can have access to them. If they eat them freely they will eat of them no more than they need. If these are mixed with the food given either with the dry grains or in the soft mash, much of both is wasted, to say nothing of the additional trouble caused in protecting this. Fowls devour numbers of the oyster-shell particles that they naturally require to assist digestion and to help form the shells of eggs. If pounded bones they will eat no more than is left where they can always get them handy they will not eat near so much of them.

CHICKENS.—Every chicken which had the gape has been entirely cured by being made to inhale tobacco smoke. The treatment has done them no harm, and the trouble of smoking is but little if it is done when the chicks are in the coop. It takes but a moment to put them into a basket, and five minutes is as long as they should be subjected to the inhalation of the smoke; and not so long if it is strong enough to produce stupor. As soon as a chick is stupefied it should be taken from the basket and laid on the ground, when it will soon revive. Our chickens were nearly dead with the gapes when first treated, but got better with each treatment, and were cured after the seventh.—Rural New Yorker.

ROOTS AND STRAW.—We take the chaff cutter and the root-pulper to be the two bases of the stock-breeder's operations. The moisture which turnips contain, forms, when absorbed by the chaffed straw, hay, or pea haulm, a bulky food, on which a greater number of stock (of all kinds and ages) can be kept than by any other treatment; and this material may be used as the basis and vehicle for the profitable consumption of not only bulky, but of concentrated food. Whether for feeding or breeding, and whether for beasts or sheep, there is no form of food with which we are acquainted which will keep going so large a stock as pulped roots and chaffed straw combined.—Agricultural Gazette.

TOMATO FIGS.—Take pear-shaped or small single tomatoes, scald and skim them, then to half a peck or eight pounds take three pounds of brown sugar. Cook them with sugar over a fire without water, until the sugar penetrates and they are clarified. Take them out and spread on dishes, flatten them and dry in the sun. Sprinkle on them a little sirup while drying. When dry pack down in boxes, treating each layer with powdered sugar; the sirup that is left over may be boiled down and bottled for use. They will keep from year to year, and retain their flavor, which is very much like that of figs.

POTATO BLOSSOMS.—In the cultivation of potatoes to obtain the largest number of tubers the flowers should be plucked off, to prevent the formation of seed, while everything should be done to protect the leaves from injury.

A woman, hearing a great deal about "preserving autumn leaves," concluded to put up a few jars of them. She told a neighbor yesterday that she did n't think they would ever be fit to eat, and she might just as well have thrown her sugar away.

"We are haunted by an ideal life, and it is because we have within us the beginning and the possibility of it.—Phillips Brooks.

COTTON FACTORS,

59 Carondelet St., New Orleans.

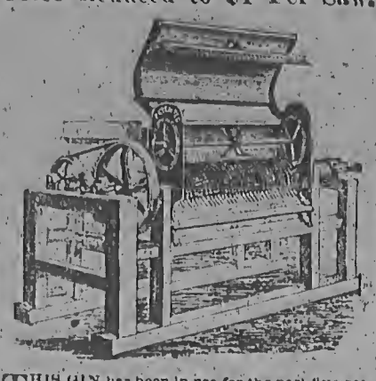
GENERAL AGENTS FOR

DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 18, 1878.

Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction of the ends of the cotton-box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while consuming steam or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 10 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

SCIENTIFIC.

—A safety bottle-stopper, of India-rubber, is being made. It takes the place of a "pork and glass, can be "drawn" without a cork-screw, and does not require to be tied.

—A filter, adapted to the most precise quantitative estimate of precipitates, has been lately made of a felt prepared from the fibers of anhydrous asbestos, treated with hydrochloric acid.

—Sir Thomas Watson, in the Nineteenth Century, advocates compulsory vaccination, and the frequent recurrence to the original source of the vaccine lymph, which he believes to deteriorate while passing through the human system.

—Microscopic examination of oleomargarine pronounces it unsafe for any other use than in cooking. As the fat is set free at a heat not above 98° Fahrenheit, any parasitic embryoes or germs of disease existing in the animal tissues are not destroyed, but may be transferred to the human system.

—The London Chemical News gives a careful review of the constitution of malt liquors, and their influence upon digestion and nutrition. Their supposed food value is, by a careful series of most exact experiments, referred entirely to the malt extract, a principle which has caused fermentation or subsequent conversion into alcohol; it is independent of the amount of alcohol in the ale, porter or beer, and lessened by its presence.

—Careful experimentation, physical and chemical, upon the diamond suggests its origin as due not to the action of heat, but to some obscure organic process. A crystal's one of the planes of cleavage in the diamond, the Dodecahedron and the Octahedron, and the reproduction of their forms, make it probable that they are the fragments of one immense gem, the original Mountain of Light, said in Indian tradition to have been worn by the hero King, five thousand years ago.

—In order to show the various forms of foldings, reflections and impressions on the crust of the earth, M. Daubree applied some adhesive matter to the surface of a model of volcano of volcanic rocks. When one of the air is permitted to escape the coating forms protuberances with regular and parallel wrinkles in certain directions, like those seen on the earth. This is an easy way of showing in the glass tube the phenomena produced by the entrance of the mass of our planet.

—Prof. R. Weber, of Berlin, has examined the pipes of the Berlin Aquarium Gewerbeschule for the investigation of the causes of mill fires. He shows that all sorts of flour in dust clouds are inflammable, and that some of the so-called fire-damp explosions of coal mines are really caused by the ignition of the coal dust floating in the atmosphere of mines. Free and steady ventilation will greatly diminish the danger of destructive explosions in mills, and those of "dry" mines can be rendered impossible by occasionally sprinkling the hangings and galleries with water conveyed in pipes from the pit mouth.

—The electric light bore testimony to the introduction of Paul Jablochkoff's improvements in its production, by being a very dangerous rival to the gas light. In Paris it has taken its place in the great weaving establishment of Fuhrye-Quartier, in the magasins de Magasin and Rabel, many depots, theatres, large cafés, and even in some streets. Avenue de l'Opera is lighted with electric light; and preparations are being made to employ it also in the Place de la Concorde. In Berlin it is used in the factories of Siemens & Halske. In Madrid, the Puerta del Sol is lighted by it. Everywhere it is found cheaper than gas, though decidedly more trying to the eyes.

—G. M. Dawson's last monograph is devoted to the surface geology of British Columbia, examining the traces of glacial action. The most important indications are in the conformation and grooving opposite Vancouver's Island; the remains of great moraines, the fiords opening into the gulfs of Georgia, and abrasions upon the mountain sides to the height of 1000 feet. The phenomena point to the recent submergence of the north western part of the continent to a depth of several thousand feet, during the Japan current through Behring's Strait and over Alaska, while the southward rush of the Arctic waters would account at once for the glaciation and for the origin of the Boulder clay.

FISH CULTURE.—The California fish commissioners are entirely satisfied with their experiments in importing young shad. Many of the first lots have been to the ocean, grown to maturity, escaped the seals and seines and nets of the fishermen, returned to the Sacramento and spawned. Hundreds of the young fish hatched in the Sacramento have been taken in San Francisco Bay this spring with the herring, and sold in the markets. Others, fully grown, weighing four and five pounds—in one instance over six pounds—have been caught at all points on the Sacramento river, from Vallejo to twelve miles above the mouth of the Pit. The shad are not yet sufficiently numerous to be fished for with profit, as less than 500,000 young shad have thus far been placed in the river, but enough have returned from the eggs hatched and spawned to insure their increase in the Sacramento. Prof. Baird intends to stock all the muddy-bottomed waters of the United States with carp, an excellent hardy fish, which always remains where raised. A few days ago about 50,000 young carp were put into Lake Balcomb, near Washington monument, Washington. They were hatched in Baltimore. Which will prove brought fish that, as a trifling exception, our lakes and streams may be filled with excellent fish, which may have for the catching, requires protective laws, and unity on the part of the people their enforcement.

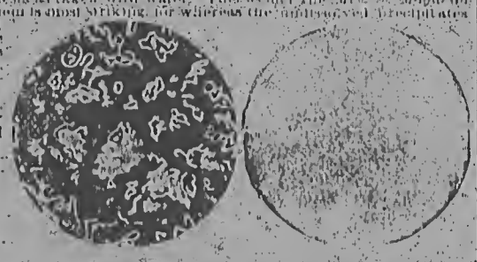
MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach.

Its pleasant taste and milk like smoothness of this preparation endears it to Children. Very valuable for infants requiring an antacid and gentle laxative. Specially recommended that nursing in the stomach, and will never curdle when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The combination of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustration. They represent a tract and part of a single drop taken from the stomach. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia as now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the former presents hard and gritty particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia, are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable properties. In fact, perfectly dissolved.



Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is prepared only by C. H. PHILLIPS, and is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others can already acquaint themselves with this preparation and obtain explanatory circular by addressing

A Short History of Petroleum.

The Lumberman's Gazette gives the following short history of petroleum: The production of petroleum as an article of trade dates from August 28, 1859, when Col. Drake, in a well 69½ feet deep, "struck oil," and coined a phrase that will last as long as the English language. From that beginning it has increased to an annual production of 11,000,000 barrels of crude oil. The first export was in 1861, of 27,000 barrels, valued at $1,000,000, and the export of petroleum in the year 1877 was, in round numbers, $62,000,000. The annual product of petroleum to-day—crude and refined—is greater in value than the entire production of iron, and is more than double that of the anthracite coal of the State of Pennsylvania, and exceeds the gold and silver product of the whole country. As an article of export it is fourth, and contests closely for the third rank. Our leading exports are relatively as follows: Cotton annually from $77,000,000 to $227,000,000; flour from $20,000,000 to $130,000,000; pork and its products (bacon, lard and ship) from $37,000,000 to $82,000,000; and petroleum from $18,000,000 to $62,000,000. The total export of petroleum from 1st to 11th inclusive 1877 (9 years) has been $442,000,000, unimaginable valuation. From the best sources of information there are at this time 10,000 oil wells, producing and drilling, which, at a cost of $5,000 per well, would make an investment of $50,000,000 in this branch of the business. Tankage now existing of a capacity of 3,000,000 barrels cost $7,000,000, and $7,000,000 has been invested in nearly 2,000 miles of pipe lines connected with the wells. The entire investment for the existing oil production, including purchase money of territory, is something over $100,000,000, which cannot be lessened much, if any, for as wells cease to produce new ones have been constantly drilled, to take their place.

ICE-WATER IN ENGLAND.—The possibility of having ice at all in Great Britain has overcome to some extent the inbred prejudice against iced water as an American barbarism. It has been introduced on the London and Brighton railway, and it is expected that other railways will follow the example. The Medical Press hails the introduction of the beverage as likely to diminish the consumption of intoxicating liquors by thirsty travelers. It takes exception, however, to warm the public against copious draughts while the body is overheated.

Sometimes unmerited strength is weakness. The power of a church is not spirituality, and the success of a church is to be measured by the number gone up from her communion to the land that has a setting sun.

LIKE TO OBTAIN.

No doubt the public would like to obtain what it requires at as cheap a rate as possible, and many times are induced to purchase cheap articles, which are in reality the dearest in the end. Dr. Price's Special Flavoring Extracts cost a few cents more, yet they are the cheapest, for they require much less in quantity.

HOME-SICK.

O to be home again, home again, home again,
Under the apple-boughs, down by the mill;
Mother is calling me, father is calling me,
Calling me, calling me, calling me still.

O how I long to be wandering, wandering
Through the green meadows and over the hill;
Sisters are calling me, brothers are calling me;
Calling me, calling me, calling me still.

O once there to be home again, home again;
Dark grows my sight and the evening is chill;
Do you not hear how the voices are calling me,
Calling me, calling me, calling me still?

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 21.—A special to the Avalanche from W. J. Smith, vice-president of the Memphis Howard Association, at Grenada, Miss., says: Five per cent. of the whole population have died. Seventy-five negroes were taken down to-day.

The New Orleans doctors are dumbfounded at the malignity of the disease. Mr. Smith adds: Our efforts are paralyzed for want of proper remedies. We are short of lemons, ice, beef tea, and in fact all kinds of nourishment for the sick.

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 21.—The panic produced by the yellow fever is unparalleled. People are fleeing from the pestilence in every direction. Jackson is almost deserted, business of all kinds suspended, and nothing thought of except escape from the scourge. The situation is truly horrible.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 22.—The fever is on the increase, 37 new cases being reported from five P. M. to noon to-day, but a fewer number of deaths than for the same period yesterday. Among the new cases this morning is Dr. John C. Rogers, and among the dead Henry Schultz and T. A. Lloyd. The reports from Senatobia, Miss., this morning are that five cases have been developed there, and the people are panic-stricken, sixty families moving out last evening.

HOLLY SPRINGS, Miss., Aug. 22.—The commissary here, by direction of the commissary general at Washington, will send to the sufferers at Grenada 3,000 rations each of flour, bacon, coffee and sugar, and 300 pounds each of bacon and pork.

Three cases of yellow fever here, refugees.

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 22.—A bale of new cotton, the first of the season, from some point in Mississippi, was sold on 'Change to-day for $1,155, and the amount has been dispatched south to aid the fever-stricken cities.

NEW YORK, August 21.—A letter from Mexico says: The Mexican secretary of war has no apprehensions of trouble between his country and the United States. He thinks, however, the United States is unreasonable in insisting on Mexico to prevent Indians crossing into their territory, as the United States has shown their inability to prevent, or unwillfully careless in allowing Escobeda and his men to cross into Mexico, with the avowed purpose of meddling blood.

VICKSBURG, August 22.—Yellow fever continues increasing. Over 50 new cases in the past twenty-four hours, and 22 deaths, among them George E. Brown, son of Judge George E. Brown. J. P. Allen, city editor of the Vicksburg Herald, is down with the fever, also his wife and son. His daughter died this evening.

Trains on the Vicksburg and Meridian railroad have ceased running, owing to the quarantines along the road, and threats are made to fire into the trains and wreck them.

Vicksburg is cut off from all communication except by the Mississippi river. Two children of L. Reinhardt, who left here a week ago, died yesterday at Tuscaloosa, Ala., of yellow fever. Physicians and nurses from New Orleans reached here to night.

MEMPHIS, August 25.—The yellow fever record to-day shows a decrease in the number of new cases as compared with yesterday, there being 61 reported to six P. M. The death list, however, is the largest of any day since the fever made its appearance, undertakers reporting 26 interments. There is a scarcity of nurses, and the Howards and other relief organizations have telegraphed to Mobile and other points for them.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 26.—From six P. M. yesterday to noon to-day 76 new cases and 17 deaths were reported. Among the dead is W. H. Halstead with Wheeler, Pickers & Co., and among the sick Sisters Dimitrius and Veronica, of the LaSalette Academy, and Fred. Brennan, city editor of the Appeal. The fever is spreading to an alarming extent among the colored people. One case was brought from Camp Joe Williams this morning, and fears are entertained that it will break out among the refugees there. The work of depopulating the city continues.

PHILADELPHIA, August 26. The two cases of yellow fever which were discovered in this city on Saturday are now doing well. They are in the Municipal Hospital, together with other members of the family, who are all from Vicksburg. No other cases have been developed. There are rumors of several.

VICKSBURG, Aug. 25. One hundred and forty-new cases were reported to day. Twenty-two interments. Among the deaths is Miss Mary Lankin. The weather is very unfavorable to-day, and accounts for the great increase in the number of new cases.

PORTLAND, OREGON, August 26. Indian troubles are threatened. Sheepeater's Rapid, on Columbia river, several settlers have been killed. Troops will leave for that point on Wednesday.

VICKSBURG, August 27.—Heavy shower last night and this morning. One hundred and eighteen new cases of yellow fever in the past twenty-four hours, and 24 deaths, among them Dr. D. W. Booth.

BROOKHAVEN, Miss., Aug. 27.—To the Editor of the Picayune, New-Orleans: Not a case of yellow fever in or around Brookhaven. Cannot hear of a case of yellow fever in any town between Canton and New Orleans, over two hundred miles.

DANIEL DENNETT.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 28.—The condition of our city to-night surpasses the most somber imaginings of misery. For the twenty-four hours ending at six P. M. 62 deaths have occurred, of which only four were from other causes than yellow fever; of these, 47 were whites and 15 colored.

The new cases number 119. During the day our physicians were so worn out in attending sick calls that to-night, for self-preservation, they are resting, many in the country and others in unknown parts of the city, while the friends of the sick are searching in vain for medical attendants.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 29.—New cases to-day, 98; deaths, 70. At two P. M. to-day a drenching rain commenced falling and continued up to seven o'clock. The death-rate of to-day exceeds that of any day of 1873, but it is feared, owing to the wet weather to-night, it will in turn be exceeded by to-morrow's mortuary report. At Camp Joe Williams several deaths from fever occurred to-day.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, Aug. 29.—The Board of Health to-day declared quarantine against all ports on the east coast, between Sabine Pass and Pensacola. They declined to permit the Morgan steamships Morgan City and New York, and the Mallory steamship Western Texas to come into port.

No fever reported in Texas. Stringent quarantine regulations are enforced at all interior towns.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—The Southern relief committee has sent another $5,000 to yellow fever stricken cities. The total collected is $28,000. General Agent Jones, of the Louisville, Nashville and Great Southern railroad, sent a letter informing the committee he would transport supplies free of charge from Louisville to Memphis on his road.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, Aug. 21.—The Captain General has issued a circular directing the governors of provinces to allow, in all parts of the island, meetings of persons for electoral purposes, with liberty of speech, but prohibiting attacks upon the integrity of the nation, and to allow newspapers ample liberty of discussion upon all subjects.

HAVRE, Aug. 22.—Queen Christiana died last night at Sainte Andresse, near this city.

VIENNA, Aug. 21.—The Tagblatt says: Gen. Pietrovics, with 8,000 Montenegrins, opened fire on Podgaritza with ten battalions.

The foreign consuls at Scutari have gone to endeavor to arrange a peaceful settlement.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 26. The British consul at Adrianople reports that the Bulgarians continue to plunder and outrage Mussulmans. The Greek archbishop has communicated to the consul the details of most horrible atrocities.

THE HAGUE, Aug. 29.—A new education law has been adopted by the Chambers and sanctioned by the King, which excludes the Bible and religious teaching from primary schools.

SICKNESS ABROAD.—The following is taken from the weekly report of the United States surgeon general for the week ending August 23:

Havana.—Ninety deaths from yellow fever and six from smallpox for the week ending the seventeenth instant.

Matanzas.—Deceased cases of yellow fever. Only five American vessels in port, August 19, and all of them have either had or were having cases of yellow fever on board.

Cardenas and Sagua La Grande, Cuba. No yellow fever. Advices to the sixteenth instant.

Bombay.—Thirty-three deaths from cholera and fifteen from smallpox for the week ending July 2.

Calcutta.—Nineteen deaths from cholera and thirty-six from smallpox for the week ending June 22.

There are pernicious good people; feeble good people; unwise good people; let us say it out—foolish good people, who lack wisdom, and do not know that they lack it. A certain sober judgment ought to mark Christians. They should be like the needle in the mariner's compass, not like the pendulum, which, within its limited range, is always going from one extreme to another. They should not startle people with paradoxes, nor banish all confidence in them by the willfulness with which they unfold their ideas to minds quite unprepared. Dr. John Hall.

God watches over all this busy world of ours, as the shepherds did over their flocks that night—only in a far deeper sense. Jesus calls himself "the Good Shepherd," "who putteth forth his own sheep, and goeth before them, and they follow him." John x, 4. While they remain under the Shepherd's care no evil can come nigh them; it is only when they leave him that they meet that "roaring lion" who will devour them.

About Methodism—Its Work and Its Aspersers.

NUMBER IV.

The second charge of Sydney Smith is the "doctrine of inward impulse and emotion." It is to be presumed he would have religion to consist in a tame rationalism—a speculative assent of the intellect to the truth of the fundamental doctrines of the Christian religion—a lifeless and perfunctory utterance of prayer and praise—a cold, formal and barren worship. There is abundance of this cold, dignified lip-worship, of God. It is the fashionable religion. It leaves men free to serve both God and mammon. But the religion taught in the Scriptures is a religion of "inward impulse and emotion." It is a matter of the heart—of feeling. God demands that we shall give him our hearts—nothing less will he be content with. If a man gives his heart to God must he not necessarily feel some inward impulse and emotion arising from his own consciousness of complying with the commands of his Creator? If he takes delight in religion must not the delight he experiences awaken "inward impulse and emotion." God is love—religion is love, and love is an emotion of the heart, not a dictate of the judgment. "Heartfelt religion is emotional—is warm, animated and fervent, full of gratitude, love and joy. Now gratitude, love and joy are inward impulses and emotions.

But the Methodists insist that every one that is converted feels an inward impulse and emotion that he is converted, and this is the doctrine condemned by Sydney Smith. Very well: we will "fight it out on that line." How will you prove this doctrine to be false and unscriptural? By your own individual experience? Then Wesley is just as good a witness for the doctrine as Sydney Smith is against it; and Wesley declared he was never converted until years after he became a priest. How can a person lay aside carnal-mindedness and become spiritually-minded without being conscious that he is "born again?" This consciousness is an "inward impulse and emotion" bearing testimony to the actuality of his conversion. The Scriptures give no account of the long, gradual and elaborate conversion of any man by dint of hammering. The conversions mentioned by the apostles were wrought at one heat, and the converts manifested an instantaneous conviction that they were forgiven. Sudden conversions would indeed be suspicious were they not followed by the sloughing off of the proud flesh of sin. To "become a new creature" by abandoning sin and vice is so radical a change as to give assurance of genuine conversion, if the Scriptures are silent on this point of the convert's feeling an inward impulse or emotion bearing witness to his conversion, all that can be said is that it is an open question. Wesley's doctrine is sound until it is shown to be inconsistent with the Scriptures. It is not irrational to say God will not leave us in doubt as to our conversion.

The third charge is that "the Methodists hate pleasure and amusement: no theater, no cards, no dancing, no punchinello; no dancing dogs, no blind fiddlers; all the amusements of the rich and the poor must disappear wherever these gloomy people get a footing." Methodists do not hate all sorts amusement. There is not one word in the Scriptures about the Savior and the apostles having attended a theater, sat down to a game of cards, borne a part in a dance, or at their having patronized punchinello, dancing dogs and blind fiddlers. Their lives have been foolishly thought to be very proper examples for Christians to follow; but the Rev. Sydney Smith has exploded that nonsense, and taught that Christians must love pleasure and amusement, theaters, cards, dancing, punchinello, dancing dogs and blind fiddlers. It is an insurmountable objection to any sect of Christians that it does not love these things! Why not revive the gladiatorial shows and the Olympic games, and introduce bull-fights and model artists for the patronage and delectation of Christians? It is true the wrestlers and runners at the Olympic games were naked athletes; but as our actors and actresses often appear on the stage in a semi-nude state, the revival of the Olympic games need not shock the modesty of the patrons of Lydia Thompson. It would be so praiseworthy in Christians to encourage the useful and noble art of teaching dogs to dance! There is something edifying in punchinello! Theaters are excellent schools for teaching modesty, virtue and piety, so sedulously are voluptuousness of dress and obscenity in allusion weeded out from the scenes! In Rome the ancient Christians only went to the theater when the savage mob, gluttonous of blood, raised the cry of Christianos ad leones. Then they were not spectators, but food for lions. Perhaps Protestants contracted a dislike to theaters from recollecting how the primitive Christians were torn and mangled by lions in the theater for the diversion of the mob!

The Methodists, of course, are much to blame for attaching any force and meaning to the scriptural injunctions: "Keep yourselves unspotted from the world;" "Be not conformed to the world;" "Be not carnally-minded;" "Avoid all appearance of evil;" "Self-denial, like the almanac of last year, is out of date."

These injunctions are nullities; but the Methodists foolishly regarded them as verities—as landmarks erected on purpose to warn them off from quicksands. It is but an affectation of singularity in a Christian sect to attempt to "keep itself unspotted from the world," and to draw a line between itself and the world by eschewing worldly pleasures and amusements. It is downright fanaticism! How a Christian can keep himself "unspotted from the world," if he partakes of all worldly pleasures and amusements, is something of a puzzle to plain men. And if he is carnally-minded and immersed in worldly pleasures he has ceased to be a Christian, since, according to the Scriptures, "the carnal mind is enmity against God." Sydney Smith should have picked a quarrel with Christ and his apostles for laying down the rule that Christians must not be "conformed to the world," and must "abstain from all appearance of evil," etc. It is difficult to treat this objection seriously, or to conceive that it was made seriously by a clergyman; yet to pass it by without notice might serve to give a handle to such as seek to bring about a compromise between religion and mammon, such as takes place between light and darkness at the hour of twilight.

Jeremy Taylor, in his sermon on "Righteousness Evangelical," lays down the correct rule respecting things that may be lawful, and yet should be abstained from by Christians out of a wise caution and a prudent fear. He says: "The Christian that resolves to do everything that is lawful will many times run into danger and inconvenience, because the utmost extremity of lawful is so near to that which is unlawful that he will often pass into unlawful undiscernibly. Virtues and vices have not, in all instances, a great landmark set between them, like warlike nations separated by prodigious walls, vast seas and portentous hills; but they are oftentimes like the bounds of a parish; men are fain to cut a cross on the turf, and make little marks and annual perambulations for memorials; so it is in lawful and unlawful: by a little mistake a man may be greatly ruined. He that drinks till his tongue is as full as a sponge, and his speech a little stammering and tripping, hasty and disorderly, though he be not gone as far as drunkenness, yet he is gone beyond the severity of a Christian.

2. "He that will do all that he thinks he may lawfully, had need have an infallible guide always by him, who should, without error, be able to answer all cases of conscience which will happen every day to be a life so careless and insecure as for if he should be mistaken, his error is his crime, and not his excuse. A man in this case had need be very sure of his proposition; which, because he cannot be, in clearity to himself, he will quickly find that he is commanded to abstain from all things that are certainly good, and from all disputable evils, from things which, though they may be in themselves lawful, yet accidentally, and from a thousand causes, may become unlawful. Saith Salvian: 'A Christian is afraid of every little thing; and he sometimes greatly fears that he hath sinned, even when he doth no other reason to be afraid but because he would not do so far all the world.'

3. "He that resolves to use all his liberty cannot be innocent so long as there are in the world so many bold temptations; so many scandals and so much ignorance in the things of God; so many things that are suspicious, and so many things that are of evil report, so many ill customs and disguises in the world, with which, if we resolve to comply in all that is supposed lawful, a man may be in the regions of death before he perceives his head to ache, and, instead of a staff in his hand, may have a splinter in his elbow.

4. "Besides all this, he that stands on his terms with God, and so carefully husbands his duty, and thinks to make so good a market of obedience that he will quit nothing which he thinks he may lawfully keep, shall never be an exemplar in his life, and shall never grow in grace, and therefore shall never enter into glory. He, therefore, that will be righteous by measures evangelical must consider not only what is lawful, but what is expedient; not only what is barely safe, but what is worthy."

Surely Jeremy Taylor has most effectually answered the objection brought against the Methodists by the Rev. Sydney Smith—the wit, the critic, the politician, the diner-out and the man of the world—that they "hate pleasure and amusement—theaters, cards, dancing, punchinello, dancing dogs," etc.

A Departing "Something."

Dr. Edward Clark's book on "Visions, or False Sight," contains one interesting statement about the moment of death from his own experience watching by a bedside. It must be remembered that Dr. Clark was not given to overmuch faith, and was a very cautious observer. He says:

"It was night. The departing one was a lady of middle age. Her death, though momentarily expected from cardiac disease, was not announced or preceded by the usual anæsthesia of the dying. During the night, when awake, her mental action was perfect. She conversed a few minutes before dying as pleasantly and intelligently as ever. There was no stupor, delirium, strangeness, or mortuhnil symptom indicating cerebral disturbance. Her cardiac symptoms alone foreshadowed the great change. After saying a few words she turned her head upon her pillow as if to sleep; then, unexpectedly turning it back, a glow, brilliant and beautiful exceedingly, came into her features; her eyes, opening, sparkled with singular vivacity; at the same moment, with a tone of emphatic surprise and delight, she pronounced the name of the earthly being nearest and dearest to her; and then, dropping her head upon her pillow as unexpectedly as she had looked up, her spirit departed to God, who gave it. The conviction forced upon my mind that something departed from her body, at that instant rupturing the bonds of flesh, WAS STRONGER THAN LANGUAGE CAN EXPRESS."

This is impressive testimony. It comes from no credulous enthusiast, no wonder seeking swallower of all that savors of the marvelous; but from a cool, clear-headed, "hard-headed" skeptic in spiritual phenomenon—a man who, while accepting the Bible, failed, like so many others, to see the "spiritualism" of which the Bible is full. "With reference to the last case," says Dr. Holmes (who knew the lady,) "Dr. Clark mentioned a circumstance to me not alluded to in the essay. At the very instant of dissolution, it seemed to him, as he sat at the dying lady's bedside, that there arose 'something'—an undefined yet perfectly apprehended somewhat, to which he could give no name, but which was like a departing presence." It seems, moreover, that Dr. Clark was not the only one who became conscious of that "departing presence." Another witness saw or felt the fact of the spiritual ascension. Says Dr. Holmes:

"I should have listened to this story less receptively, it may be, but for the fact that I had heard the very same experience, almost in the very same words, from the lips of one whose evidence is eminently to be relied upon. With the last breath of the parent she was watching, she had the consciousness that 'something' arose, as if the 'spirit' had made itself cognizable at the moment of quitting its mortal tenement. The coincidence in every respect of these two experiences has seemed to me to justify their mention in this place."

Religious Life in College.

Into the life of the students also, religion is thoroughly ingrained. Almost one-half of the twenty thousand men who are pursuing regular college courses are Christians. The proportion of the number of Christians and of those not Christians varies much with the different colleges. The lowest extreme is probably that of one to five, as at Harvard, and the highest nine to ten, as at Oberlin and a few other colleges. At Dartmouth and Bowdoin it is estimated that one from every three students is a Christian; at Yale two from every five; at Michigan University and Western Reserve College one from every two; at Princeton, Brown, University, Marietta and Ripon, three from every five; at Amherst, Williams, Wesleyan University, Middlebury, Iowa and Berea, four from every five. About ten thousand, therefore, it may be inferred, of the college men in the country are Christians.

The increase in the proportion of Christian collegians in the course of the last twenty-five years is very marked. In 1853, at Harvard College, only one man in ten was a professor of religion; at Brown only one in five; at Yale, Dartmouth and Bowdoin only one in four; at Williams one in two; and at Amherst five in eight. At Middlebury the ratio was, as it now is, four in five.—(Prof. Tyler's "Prayer for Colleges," page 136.) In those seven representative colleges, selected at random, the proportion of Christian students has in a quarter of a century increased about forty per cent. But, as compared with the religious condition of the colleges at the opening of the century, the advance is still more noteworthy. At the close of the last and the beginning of the present century the flood of French philosophy and infidelity was sweeping over the land, and the effects it wrought in the colleges were most disastrous. At Harvard and Yale the number of Christian students was probably fewer than at any other period in their history. A considerable proportion of the first class which President Dwight taught at Yale "assumed the names of the principal English and French infidels, and were more familiarly known by them than by their own."—(Memoir of President Dwight, page 204.) In the first eight classes of Bowdoin College was "but one who may have been deemed at the time of admission hopefully pious;" and in the first four years of Dr. McKeen's presidency, 1802-1806, not one of the students, so far as can be known, "believed and hoped in Christ as a Savior."—Prof. Smyth's "Religious History of Bowdoin College," page 74.) Only one of all the students at Williams College, near the same period, was a church member.—(History of Williams College, page 111.) But in the course of two generations so thorough have been the religious changes that it is safe to say that at the present time at least one-half of the students in American colleges are Christian men. C. F. Thwing, in Sunday Afternoon.

A correspondent of the New Orleans Picayune from Water Valley gives the following account of the origin of the fever in Grenada, Miss.:

"The origin of the fever at Grenada is attributed to an old sewer that the authorities, scared at the announcement that the fever existed in New Orleans, determined to have cleaned. In it was found the decomposed body of an old hog. The day after it was opened a young lady, daughter of a Mrs. Fields, was prostrated, and then those in the vicinity of her residence, and then it became general, and confined itself to no particular quarter. At first the situation was horrible. The terror-stricken inhabitants who could get away did so—many with first symptoms of the fever plainly visible. Man behaved to his fellow-beings as wild beasts could only do. Every man of family turned away from all save his own flesh and blood. It was a veritable situation, where every man was for himself alone. The sick were left to die, and the dead were left unburied. Now, thanks to the brave and noble gentlemen of the Howard Association, there is system, and the wants of the stricken and helpless are being attended to. Our brave city of Holly Springs, in this State, has crowned herself with glory by refusing to pass quarantine measures, and not only extending a cordial welcome to all who come, but yesterday and the day before dispatched to chairs of prominent citizens necessities for the sufferers.

Men who ought to know, says the Christian Intelligencer, say that the Christian world is indebted in a large measure to Rev. Dr. J. P. Thompson for the clauses in the Berlin treaty securing religious toleration in the provinces of the late Turkish empire. He presented the petitions of the Evangelical Alliance and some of those of other Christian bodies, and supported them in a plea of special ability. Dr. Thompson, who was formerly the pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, in this city, has been residing for some time in Berlin, and has acquired an enviable position among men of influence in the German capital. It is worthy of notice that the petition for religious freedom was sent by evangelical Christians. It did not proceed from scientists or Romanists, or skeptics of any class, or from any of our useless and talkative modern reformers, or from broad churchmen, or from the persons who are constantly advocating liberal views, as they are pleased to term them, but from Christians holding the doctrines of grace. The Jews were represented before the Congress, but they pleaded only for their own people. The event exhibits once more the superiority of evangelical Christianity, and may also be regarded as showing the importance given to it by such a company of astute men as that gathered at Berlin.

Never trust this heart of thine that it will be ordered and kept in good frame, if thou carry not always a strong hand and a narrow eye over it. If once thou let go the bridle of watchfulness it will run so far that it will be hard to bring it back again.—Duke.

From the Work.

SUGARTOWN CALCASIEU CIRCUIT, LA.—Mr. Editor: Thinking that it would not be out of place, though it may be out of space, I send you these few lines to let you and the readers of our mutual friend, the ADVOCATE, know what the Lord has been doing for us so far this year. As regards temporal things we can say but little. Our country, at its best, is far from being a rich one, unless we take into consideration our never failing supply of pine-knots, and clear, sweet, rippling creeks; and in the winter season we find the pine-knots very useful indeed; for they not only help to tinge our cheeks by their friendly glow, but they also lend a helping hand to aid us in diving into the oftentimes misty ways of theology. In truth, we could not get on very well without them; and we intend, by the help of God, to make good use of them at our camp meeting this fall. Mr. Editor, if you will come out to our camp we will promise you a goodly share of our pine-knots, and a hearty welcome from our people. But enough on temporal matters.

In spiritual things we can truly say the Lord has been gracious unto us. His Holy Spirit has been with us in convicting and converting power, and thirty were added to the church; and we believe that God will yet give us more of these people. We are looking for a great outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon this country. In the bounds of this circuit there is a large number of Roman Catholics who speak English very well; and some of them, having heard me trying to speak for Jesus, invited me to go and preach for them. I did so, one of them giving me the use of his house for that purpose. The presence of the Lord was with us, and at their request I gave them a monthly appointment, which I believe will result in much good. They seem to be "more than willing to hear the gospel." They want it explained unto them. To some of them I have read portions of the Bible, and prayed with them at their homes, and others have brought their children to our church to be baptized. There is a good field among these people if we only had the means. Cannot some of the readers of the ADVOCATE send us a few Bibles and tracts to distribute among them? They need spiritual food, and they are looking to us for it. Can we refuse it? They want light. Shall we refuse to send it to them? Brethren, while you are stretching a helping hand over the sea to those who dwell in darkness, forget not the black spots in Louisiana. In this parish alone we have hundreds who never hear the gospel of Jesus preached in its purity—men and women who turn the Lord's day into a day of worldly and sinful pleasures; and many of them might be brought to Jesus if we only had the men and means. The men, I believe, can be found if the church would only give the means. O may God arouse the church to her duty. Here is work for every reader of the ADVOCATE. How many will help us? Hoping to hear a response from many warm hearts, I remain

Your brother in Christ,

P. GALVIN.

CALHOUN CT., MARIANA DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We had several revivals on the circuit last year, which resulted in over one hundred additions to the church. The most of them are doing very well. We have had some thirty additions to the church this year. There seems to be a general interest taken in the church by the unconverted. We have nine Sunday schools organized in the circuit, which are proving a great blessing to the children. In some places in this country they have been destitute of the gospel for years. A lady told me last year that her children did not know what a preacher meant. There are grown people here in some places who have never heard a genuine gospel sermon.

I think that the Calhoun circuit will be all right in a few years if it continues to improve. We have several orange groves in the bounds of the circuit, which are very attractive. They draw people from Tennessee, Kentucky and various other parts of the United States. These groves are confined principally to what is known in this country as the Dead Lakes, at or near the mouth of the Chipola river. They are, I suppose, about sixteen miles in length and about three or four miles wide. They have some very fine fish in them, and a few alligators, which furnish fine sport for those who like it. Besides these lakes, there are other smaller ones scattered through the country, with fish and alligators in them. We have on the Dead Lakes some of the first citizens of the country. The most of them have seen better days, yet they seem to be cheerful and hopeful. They are planting out groves, and looking forward to the time when they shall enjoy the fruits of their labor. They have built a nice little log church, where they have service two months. I preach for them once a month when I am able. I organized a church there this year, which is doing very well. The people here are very much divided in creeds, but they unite in worship. Our field there is large, but laborers are few. We are needing more preachers in this country to help spread the gospel.

The prospect for an average crop this year is very favorable. The crops generally are very good this year all over my circuit. I think we will come out all right financially this year. We have collected our home mission assessment and some on the foreign.

Yours fraternally,

JOHN A. GREEN, P. C.

ARGUSTA, ARK.

ENTERPRISE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I must say it to the credit of my people and God's blessings that my family and horse have had the necessaries of life so far, and I have no reason to doubt but they will continue to do their duty in this regard. There are many noble spirits on the work. I must not forget in this the kindness of many mothers and sisters on the work, the remembrance of which is pleasant to the pastor.

We commenced a series of protracted meetings at Sageville. While there were no conversions that we are aware of, yet the meeting was a profitable one to the church, and trust that it will be as "bread cast upon the waters." At Zion Hill we had seven accessions to the church. God's power and love were manifested there. On the last day of the meeting the soul of my precious mother went to rest in the home of the good. She died suddenly, but in great peace. As her feet touched the edge of the river she waved her hand and exclaimed, "Jesus, receive my spirit." It was not my privilege to be with her and hear the sweet words she spoke to her kind friends were near her.

I have just closed another glorious meeting at Concord church. The power of God was among us, and greatly manifested. On the day of our experience meeting the good spirit was with us in gracious, heavenly influences. Many souls testified for Jesus. There were thirteen accessions, with happy experiences.

Bro. Warden, my worthy predecessor, rendered us valuable service at all three of the meetings. That old soldier, Rev. T. Y. Armstrong, rendered us good service at Zion Hill and Concord. We expect to hold six more protracted meetings. O Lord, revive thy work all over the circuit.

GEORGE BANCROFT.

Bishop Keener presided, and added much to the profit of the occasion by the ministry of the word, and the timely suggestions and practical advice given to the preachers of the district. The attendance on the part of preachers and laymen was good.

We gather from the reports that the district financially is doing well. The Sunday school interest is maintained with accustomed zeal, and decided results are being realized in some quarters.

We are sorry to have to note the fact that class meetings are so much neglected, and that family prayer is kept up by so few out of the number of families of the district.

The Conference offered resolutions of thanks and respect to our worthy presiding elder, Dr. A. H. Mitchell, and many prayerful hearts stand pledged to remember him in future fields of labor. With the close of this Conference year he will have completed four years of useful service on the district, and will leave behind him many hearts strongly endeared to him.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Smith, N. K. Ramsey, Richmond Allen, and A. W. Cockrell were elected delegates to the ensuing Annual Conference, with Prof. S. S. McPhen and Mr. Lee Terrell as alternates. Gainesville, Ala., was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

J. A. PETERSON, Sec.

ROCKY SPRINGS CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have had a protracted meeting at Center Grove, which closed yesterday. I will not attempt to give a full report of it. The Lord manifested his saving power among the people in convicting, converting and strengthening, and making glad many souls. It was a glorious time. Only a few of the older people in the congregation had ever seen such a move in a worshiping congregation as we had there on last Sunday evening. All that is implied in "intense respectability," was forgotten, and the shouts and praises of happy souls predominated. The good done by this meeting is incalculable. There were forty-eight applicants for membership in the church, thirty-five of whom have been received, and the others will be in due time. We could not get a full account of the conversions—about forty reported, and it is thought that some were converted who were absent when the count was taken. Some were still seeking when the meeting closed.

J. W. SANDELL.

DELTA DISTRICT, LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our District Conference closed a harmonious and peaceful session, at this place, on Saturday last, the seventeenth instant, at six o'clock P. M. No bishop present. The attendance of preachers and laymen was small. The preaching was earnest, practical and experimental. We are protracting. Gracious accessions to date, the church happy; the community deeply interested, and we feel that "the Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge."

The following brethren were elected delegates to the next session of the Annual Conference, viz.: Dr. James Moore, Rev. A. S. Hemlock, Maj. James B. Cuker and Col. Thomas C. [illegible]. Alternates—F. E. Bowman, [illegible] B. Powell.

A. W. WARREN, P. E.

[illegible] MISSION CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have had sickness to contend with all this year, and recently nearly every member of the household was sick, quite or less, and two of the children were dangerously ill—but, thanks to our heavenly Father, all are better now. Mrs. Sloan's health is very poor indeed. Have lost some valuable members on my charge by death. I am in pretty good health myself, and hard at work, and doing as well as could be expected with the drawbacks I have had. Some additions to the church.

J. W. SLOAN, P. C.

FAYETTE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have just closed a meeting at Shiloh, on the Fayette circuit, Mississippi Conference. On the second day of this month we commenced a protracted meeting there. The meeting resulted in seventeen conversions and twenty-one accessions, and the church wonderfully stirred. We were assisted by Bros. Morrow and Evans, and the local brethren.

Yours respectfully,

J. D. HAYS.

BAYOU SARA, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord has revived his work at China Grove and at Sarth's, on the China Grove and Franklinton circuit, Mississippi Conference. At each place several found peace and were added to the church, and the people were made to rejoice "over sinners that repented." A large missionary society was formed at each place, and steps taken to build a camp ground at China Grove. To God be all the praise.

Regret in Heaven.

MR. EDITOR: Will some of your readers solve this problem? In how many ways can we think of anything? It seems to me in only three: with satisfaction, with indifference and with regret. I have sinned. I cannot think of this with satisfaction. Can I think of it with indifference? Must I not think of it with regret? Then, will there not be regret in heaven?

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss,' etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. KATE FLOWERS, wife of Mr. J. J. Flowers, of Greenville, Ala., was born in Macon county, Ga., on the first day of April, 1842, and passed in peace to the bosom of her Savior on the morning of July 11, 1878.

Such is the simple chronicle of the dawn and close of a beautiful life, which has lately passed beyond the sphere of time and sense to enter on the conditions of immortality—a life beautiful because it had caught a radiance from the cross, and had been steeped in the loveliness of the skies. In the pure bloom of early maidenhood, while her affections were fresh and earnest, while her habits, unformed, awaited the fashioning touch of some directing spirit, and her heart, buoyant with a hope which sprang elastic from depression, sought some unshaken firmness around which to twine its clasping tendrils, the Sun of Righteousness arose upon her soul, and in a complete surrender to Him in whom alone the human soul doth find its perfect satisfaction, her young life was consecrated, a fresh and glowing holocaust, on the altar of God; and being translated, as it were, from a world of sense to a world of spirit, where grander thoughts and feelings stir than can be voiced by earth's dull vocabularies, by that inevitable law of assimilation she grew gradually like unto the beauty that dwelt round her. Her affections, in early life, having taken conscious hold on God, her soul grew beneath his gentle discipline as naturally as the flower expands its grateful petals to the warm wooing of the morning sun. With her religion was a living principle, not the casual awakening of dormant emotions, or the sudden effort of a momentary deed of heroism: it was something that pervaded her life—that mainly kept her mind and heart in the knowledge and in the love of God; something that stamped her life with a uniform grace and loveliness, which were ever proof against the tragic possibilities of the passing years. She had sat at the feet of Jesus, and there learned great lessons of wisdom and love—lessons by which she unraveled the perplexities of the household, as well as solved the startling problems and deeper passages of life. She there learned—and well was the difficult lesson mastered—that a child's reliance upon the promised grace of the Savior in the small perfection, as well as the threatenings of a greater peril, was the only training that would prepare the soul to give its unflinching testimony for Christ in the rude appallings of life's fiercest tempest. The same faith that buoyed her up amid the chill swellings of the Jordan of her daily trials dates a labor of love and underlies strong and gentle rule over children, reckoned in their spiritual relations, were taught to reverence their Father in heaven.

The memory of this good woman's life will long linger in the community where she resided, and the influence of her consistent life in Christ in walk will remain among those who knew her a living testimony to its power and beauty. Strolled as she is among those who are "the glad heirs of a happy immortality," gently were the fetters unloosed that bound her here. Calmly and confidingly she awaited the summons that would open the gates that confined her aspiring spirit, and bid her enter and enjoy forever the presence and the glory. As the beams of the early morning were gathering the amber folds of the east, the sun of the immortal day, that was dawning on her soul—the silver cord was gently loosed, and the weary spirit was at rest.

A. [illegible].

VICKSBURG, ALABAMA.

MRS. MELORA A. MARTIN [illegible] Hartman was born in Pike county, Miss., October 3, 1850, and died at Bogue Chitto, Lincoln county, Miss., August 7, 1878, after a brief but painful illness of three days. At home Dora was ever an affectionate and obedient daughter, and a kind, gentle and affectionate sister, always ready to yield her will to that of her brothers and sisters, and thinking of the welfare of others rather than of her own. She was thoughtful, too, beyond her years, and her early life betokened a bright and useful womanhood.

She was married, December 28, 1876, to Mr. John G. Martin.

At the early age of eleven Dora united herself with the Baptist Church, and she lived a consistent member of the same until her death. As a wife she was all that could be desired—loving and devoted, and ever solicitous concerning the welfare of her husband.

Young, beautiful and talented, surrounded by everything to render life desirable, we might suppose that death would have been an unwelcome guest. Not so, however. For some time before she was taken ill, while in the bloom of youth, and nothing to indicate that she might not live to a ripe old age, she told her friends that she knew she was not long for this world. She was, she said, prepared to die, and she hoped God would make her perfectly resigned to his will when the summons came.

On August 1 she became the happy mother of a son, whom, in the fullness of her joy, she named John—for his father. She seemed to be doing well until next day, when she was taken with a congestive chill, from which she never recovered. During her illness she talked but little, and said nothing concerning death, except to charge them to take good care of her sweet babe. Her sufferings were intense, and death was truly a relief to the poor tortured body; but we have reason to hope that her pure spirit is now mingling with the thousands around the throne of him she so earnestly strove to follow while in the flesh.

MINNIE E. BERRY.

LATE in the evening of May 30 last a cloud of sorrow, intermingled with tears and deep-heaving sighs, brooded over every household in Lower Peachtree, when "his boys" returned from the river, and with intense feeling announced to every one they met: "Mr. MCLAUGHLIN is dead." He had gone to the Alabama river with his pupils to bathe, according to his custom, and after some amusement in swimming he discovered that one of the little fellows, Ira C., had accidentally got beyond his depth, and was about to drown. With a full sense of honor, duty and sympathy, he sprang to the boy's relief. The boy was saved; but, alas! Mr. McLaughlin sank to rise more gloriously in the great resurrection.

On the third of June, by request of M. D. Thomason, principal of Montgomery Institute, the trustees and school assembled, and the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased an all-wise Providence to remove from our midst Mr. A. McLaughlin, who had been principal of Lower Peachtree Academy for a score of years; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deeply deplore the loss of so good and useful a man, yet we recognize the hand of God, and bow in submission to his will.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. McLaughlin the community in which he lived has lost one of its best citizens, the cause of education an able teacher, and the church, especially the Presbyterian Church, one of its strongest pillars.

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the sorrow-stricken widow and children, and devoutly pray that they may be sustained by him "who heareth the ravens when they cry."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Southwestern Presbyterian, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Baptist Record for publication, and also to his family.

MONTGOMERY INSTITUTE,
Wilcox Co., Ala., July [illegible], 1878.

MRS. REBECCA R. BANCROFT was born April 22, 1810, in Mobile county, Ala., and died at Sageville, Miss., near Meridian, Miss., August 7, 1878.

Her death was very sudden, yet she calmly and sweetly fell asleep with the precious words, "Jesus, receive me," lingering in accents sweet and heavenly upon her lips. She breathed her last just after dinner, and in the dining-room of her eldest son, Rev. George Bancroft, now preacher in charge of Enterprise circuit, Mississippi Conference.

Her last illness is supposed to have been paralysis of the heart, having previously suffered a stroke of that disease, which crippled the entire left side. Her mother was permitted to see all her children, four in number, grown and married. She had also the honor and pleasure of hearing two of her sons preach the gospel, and seeing her daughter wife to a Methodist preacher. Two of her three sons were called of God to the work of the Christian ministry, and the only daughter joined herself in marriage to a faithful and beloved herald of the cross.

At the time of her death there were points often and with feelings of the deepest gratitude to the consistent and pious life of the mother as the most powerful instrumentality of his awakening and conversion to God. Her life, and indeed her [illegible] were pleaded as a willing and perpetual offering upon the altar of her home, so that both [illegible] and [illegible] ever bore testimony that self was lost sight of in securing the comfort of her household. In temperament our mother was mild and gentle, ever possessing that charity which "thinketh no evil," and is not easily provoked," while she is endued with those superadded grace and industry that she was never known to "eat the bread of idleness." Her children and her grandchildren rise up and call her blessed. "My brother, Rev. George Bancroft, writes: 'We never knew when we did not have a pious mother. Our loss in heaven is great gaining. Her sun had a great setting. No cloud was there.'"

JOSEPH BANCROFT.

MRS. ANN M. ROSE [illegible] Shultz was born in Pike county, Ala., June 14, 1836, and died near the home of her birth, on Sunday, August 11, 1878, having just completed her twenty-second year. She was married last December, but after eight brief months of wedded happiness she has gone down to the brink of death, exchanging the marriage robe for the habiliments of the grave. She had been united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South since the autumn of 1874, and in all the relations of life had beautifully exemplified the Christian virtues. The day of her death was overshadowed by a deep sorrow, and so she left no death-bed expression of triumphing faith; but the gentle purity of her life, her love of God's church and his people, needed no dying confirmation. The writer had known her well from her childhood, and takes a sorrowful pleasure in recording her virtues, and adding his belief to that of all who knew her well: that she will shine as a star in that day when the Lord God shall come to make up his jewels.

F. J. GOWART.

DIED, in St. Tammany parish, La., May 18, 1878, Mr. STERLING DIXON, in the seventy-sixth year of his age.

The subject of this notice was a native of North Carolina; from whence he emigrated at an early day, and settled on West Pearl river, in this parish, and was married to his pious wife, who still survives him.

Mr. Dixon was an industrious, steady, uniform gentleman of unflinching principles and integrity; and though his house was long the home of the weary itinerant, where he always met a hearty welcome, yet he never formally united with the church, though there is no doubt but he was a firm believer in all her truths.

In his affliction, being paralyzed, he exhibited great patience, and was especially instant in prayer, that he might be ready for the change which he saw was so soon to come. His prayer was heard, and God graciously bestowed upon him a clear way and a perfect willingness to die.

G. T. VICKERS.

LITTLE MARY MOORE, daughter of Robert S. and Julia Moore, was born in New Site, Tallapoosa county, Ala., October 26, 1871, and departed this life near Douglas, Lincoln parish, La., July 31, 1878. A brief life, but full of beauty, did little Mary [illegible] on earth; yet this fair little flower [illegible] abiding promise of a love unfeigned [illegible] God came and took the sweet little [illegible] into heaven, there to bloom in all its [illegible] and loveliness—never to wither. Little [illegible] was the light and joy of the household [illegible] very picture of innocence and purity. [illegible] tle heart ever pouring forth love and [illegible] fulness in a sparkling stream, that [illegible] every one happy about her. She [illegible] ling very much. She would ask her [illegible] to sing for her. A little while before [illegible] breath left her she called for little [illegible] and kissed him. To-day little Mary [illegible] bright ministering spirit in heaven, [illegible] would find her we must look where [illegible] reigns and angels dwell.

JOHN FLETCHER was born [illegible] Wayne county, N. C., April [illegible] and died August 10, 1878, in Clark county, Miss. He was for fifty years a member of the Methodist Church. During these years he was a devoted, godly man, closing up his earthly career with prospects for eternal joy beaming before him. His aged partner and four children are left to mourn his loss. They, too, are stepping heavenward. A deep grief presses upon their hearts, but sorrow not as those who have no hope.

WAYS OF WORK.

...is a perpetual surprise ... He does a most amazing ... of work. He rarely, ... rarely preaches what any ... ns an old sermon; ... of his teachers' meet... what amounts to a lecture ... week; knows every family ... every child in his parish; ... ready at Sunday school ... and Young Men's Christ... tions; has a carpenter's ... shed and does all sorts of ... about his house, from ... work-box for his wife, or ... for the parlor, or wainscot... kitchen; and is engaged be... literary work of consider... proportions. "More than Dr. Dullard?" said I, ...gatively.

"Well, yes," said the parson, ...what rather, more than Dr. Dullard, ...e admit."

"How do you do it?" said I.

"Are you an interviewer?" said he.

"Yes," said I. "And I am going ...port your answer to the readers ...Sunday-School Union."

"Well," said the parson, "I sup... I must submit to be interviewed, ...ugh there really very little to ...nothing that is not quite famil... In the first place, my father ...ched me in the text: Whatsoever ...hand findeth to do, do it with ...th. He was willing I should ...as much as I wanted; but he ...did not suffer a lazy worker. "Next to these principles I put one that I learned of Lord Brougham years ago: that variety in work serves the purpose of recreation. A change of occupation is often just as good as stopping work altogether. I do not believe that Mr. Barnes was any way inferior as a pastor or preacher because he wrote an hour or two every morning on his commentary. I suspect Mr. Beecher's winter lectures have been just as good a vacation as going to Europe for a year would have been. I am sure that my systematic Bible studies have not hindered, but have helped me in my work. I can sit down to my sermon after breakfast just as fresh after two hours' work on my book, before breakfast, as if I had lain abed. An afternoon of social calling is often as good a rest as a ride or a row on the river. On the same principle a horse will travel further with less fatigue in a hilly than in a level country. The change of muscles is a rest."

"Is that the way you get so much carpentry work done?" asked the deacon's wife.

"Exactly," replied the parson. "My tool-shop is my recreation. And it is the best kind of recreation. It gives me just enough to think about to prevent my thinking about my sermon or my parish.

"I should add some other principles to these," said the deacon's wife; for the parson had paused, as though he were through.

"What are they?" said I; for the deacon's wife's opinions on this subject are well worth having. My friend, Mrs. Wheaton, has a nurse for each of her three little children, and yet finds no time to read, or take part in the work of the church, or help in the entertainment for the Lyceum; and, my friend, the deacon's wife, with no nurse at all, is always up in the latest magazines, can instruct her own children in the news of the day, has a class in the Sunday school, and is in the foreground of every church sociable and village entertainment."

"One is, to use all your fragments of time. Be careful not to cut your day to waste. Save the pieces and work them up into a useful patch-work. Some of my friends wonder how I get my time to read. One way is this: the deacon has put up a little shelf over the baby's cradle. I always keep a magazine lying there, and there is a kind of agreement in the house that it shall not be carried off from that shelf. When I rock the baby to sleep at noon, and when I arrange my hair at night, I take up that magazine. And I always get through Harper's and Scribner's every month in these fragments of time."

"A good principle," said the parson. "I saw the other day on the steamboat three young collegians. Two were flirting and talking nonsense with Miss Wheaton. The third was young Elmo; presently he dropped out of their company, and half an hour later I found him, book in hand, reading Lecky's History of England. And I thought I could readily understand why Elmo graduated second or third in his class this spring."

"Then," continued the deacon's wife, "I should emphasize the first half of the parson's text. 'Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might.' I am rather tired with the moralists' praises of system. It seems to me that I know a great many people who are slaves to their systems; they spend so much time in planning, arranging and fussing and talking over what they are going to do that they have no time to do it."

"There are lots of human hens," said the deacon, sententiously, "who cackle so much about the egg they mean to lay that they never lay any egg at all."

"You do not believe in laying plans, then?" said I, interrogatively.

"I did not say that," said the deacon's wife. "But I believe in putting plans for the sake of work. I suppose that is rather a wrong rule, though," she continued. "A minister can lay out his work and do everything with a system. But the best way for a woman is to work as she can, and do the work that comes to her when it comes."

"Well," said the parson, "I do not know but there is sufficient truth in what you both say to make it sure that this will be interesting enough to induce me to defer what I shall prepare to say about it a full month. If what you have said is not enough, I shall call on you both for more."

"Oh!" said the deacon's wife, energetically. "It is something anything but all and what I have said is a question that will not exhaust itself in a single conversation. It does not come to you, as do other work, simply asking, begging, urging anything. Do something! Come to work on the crying wants of the school rooms."

And suppose it does not come, said the parson.

Then preach, and the deacon's wife, the sermon that lies in the silence, patience and tenderness of God, who gives it to those who ask it. It is given them——

I shall have to leave you here, said the parson.

Yours, etc.,

The Adjutant

This grotesque bird is peculiarly ... ...ology of Calcutta, and ... ...cinity of ... and ... ...objects of public ... ...grown up, a fowl or ... ...being regarded with ... ...dill pity.

The adjutant is a most useful bird ... the scavengers which ... ...and it is protected with the ... ...wise, as it thoroughly cleans the ... ...streets of offal which would be ... ...to putrefy but for the constant ... ...bers of the adjutant and its ... ...of similar habits.

The attitudes assumed by the adjutant are varied and grotesque. It has a curious habit of sitting for a hot day by standing with its long beak dropping toward the ground and its wings stuck out straight from the body. Sometimes it squats in the sun, with its legs tucked under its body, and sits with an air of dignity. Sometimes it stalks menacingly along, with its neck stretched to the utmost, its head thrust forward, and its huge bill open, looking a most formidable creature; but it is a cowardly bird, as it will run away from a child if boldly faced. It will, however, attack snakes, knocking them over before they can strike, and after battering them to death swallows them whole. During inundations the adjutant follows the course of the rising waters, and makes prey of the reptiles that are driven from their holes.

The capacity of the adjutant's stomach is enormous. It has the power of dissolving the soft and digestible parts, and rejecting the indigestible, such as shells and bones. It is easily tamed, but it is an incorrigible thief.

The exquisitely flowing plumes, the "marabou feathers," are obtained from the adjutant and a kindred species, the marabou of Africa. The general color of the adjutant is a delicate ashen gray above, and white beneath. The great head and proportionately large neck are almost bare of covering, having only a scanty supply of down, instead of feathers. From the lower part of the neck hangs a kind of dewlap, which can be inflated at the will of the bird, but it generally hangs loose and dabby.

Dancing.

The chief of police of New York says that three-fourths of the abandoned girls in that city were ruined by dancing. Young ladies allow gentlemen privileges in dancing which, if taken under any other circumstances, these gentlemen would be reported as improper persons. I have a sister who has passed away. On a marble block is written: "Willing to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord." I had rather go there with my sighs, tears, flowers and prayers, and visit that little grave as a shrine, than have her present in the body, and see her one night in the dizzy and promiscuous hall-room. It requires neither brains, good morals nor religion to be a good dancer. It leads to bad society. I never saw such a vicious crowd of young men at our college as on a night when there was to be a ball. It won't mix with religion any more than oil and water will mix. As the love of one increases the love of the other decreases. How many eminent Christians are distinguished dancers? As certain as the atmosphere around the thermometer at zero will freeze things, as certain as the wind that is bellying the sail will drive the boat, so certain will dancing freeze the religious sentiments out of the soul; it will drive its devotee away from the church; it is a wind that blows in that direction. No dancing is spoken of in the Bible that was done by divine authority. In ancient times the sexes danced separately.

Alcohol is the "spirit" of beverages; take it out and the young men of the land would as soon seek a beverage in the swill-tub as in the saloon. So sex is the spirit of the dance. Take it away and let the sexes dance separately, and dancing would shortly be out of fashion. Parlor dancing is dangerous. Tippling leads to drunkenness, and parlor dancing leads to ungodly halls. Tipping and parlor dancing sow to the wind, and both reap the whirlwind. Put dancing in the crucible, apply the acids, weigh it, and the verdict of reason, morality and religion is: "Weighed in the balances and found wanting." Rev. S. T. Hamilton, in Indian Witness Journal.

Religious Intelligence.

—A Chinese Tract Society, organized on the principles of the American Tract Society, has been formed at Shanghai. Its board of managers is to be half of foreign missionaries and half of native Christians.

—Father Hyacinthe, in his closing lecture in Paris, advocated a reform of Roman Catholicism by the abolition of papal supremacy, popular election of priests, vernacular liturgies, and liberty of marriage for priests.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church in England has been strengthened by the admission, by Bishop Gregg, of seven candidates to deacon's orders. Several presbyters have also been ordained, and will labor at watering-places. A number of clergymen have applied for admission into the church.

—The Bishop of Madras, who is attending the Pan-Anglican Synod, announces that, according to a telegram he has just received, the number of Hindoos in his diocese who have renounced heathenism and accepted Christianity is 20,000. All these converts have been gained in less than a year.

—A day of thanksgiving has been ordered by the Bishop of Madras for the religious movement in Tinnevelly, where 18,000 since that time increased to nearly 20,000 natives are under instruction for baptism. We have seen in some English papers a pretense that there were no such conversions; but there can be no doubt that this large number of converts have lately been won over from heathenism by the missionaries of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

—The United Free Gospel (Independent Methodist) Churches of Great Britain have held their seventy-third annual assembly in Glasgow. Fifty representatives were in attendance, chiefly from Lancashire and Yorkshire. The Rev. A. Donovan, of Glasgow, who is eighty years old, was chosen president. The Union rests on an evangelical basis as to its doctrinal system, is Methodistic in forms and worship, and holds to the independence of each church in the transaction of its local affairs.

—The Southern Presbyterians are having serious difficulty this year in the publishing of the proceedings of the General Assembly. Enterprising men undertook to establish a daily ... its issue has more nearly corresponded with that of a weekly or monthly. Not all the proceedings are yet published. The statistics which are given in the Louisville ... show that there are 72 synods; 65 presbyteries—an increase of 2; 1,117 ministers and licentiates—an increase of 27; 145 candidates—a decrease of 41; 1,873 churches—an increase of 14; and 144,578 members—an increase of 2,098. The total of contributions was $[illegible]—a falling off of $80,000.

—No missionary society has been more enterprising than the London Missionary Society in opening new fields of labor. We have spoken of its new venture in Central Africa, and of that at Lake Ngami. The New Guinea Mission has been greatly extended by the addition of new stations on portions of the island previously unvisited. Accounts of the exploring trips of the missionaries have appeared, not in the missionary periodicals alone, but also in scientific journals. The peculiar character and habits of the people of New Guinea, who are lower in the scale of being than almost any other people known, are of great importance in the study of the archæology of the human family. Some tribes live on the highest hills, and build their huts in the branches of the highest trees they can find; others build their huts on the beach, below high-water mark, on piles driven into the sand and mud, like the lake dwellers of Switzerland. A picture of one of their villages in the Chronicle of the London Society shows fifty houses, looking like long thatched barns, open at the ends and stuck up on stilts. About six feet from the water is a large platform, which forms a sort of veranda to the house. From this a short ladder of two or three steps leads up to the house proper, the eating and sleeping-place of the family. This is covered in at top and sides by palm leaves or grass. All the houses are well floored with the sides of old canoes adzed down with stone adzes (for New Guinea is in the stone age until they are pretty flat. From the sea the houses present a very irregular, tumbledown appearance; but they are really well and strongly built. The London Society for a few years has had a station or two in the island on the southern point of the main portion of the island, by Torres Straits. Last October a missionary party, consisting of two English missionaries, with the wife of one of them, six native teachers from Raratonga, and four from the Loyalty Islands, started on an exploring trip to the east, and went a distance of six hundred miles, as far as the East Cape, at the extreme southeast end of the island. It must be remembered that New Guinea is a small continent, fifteen hundred miles long, and an immense field for missionary effort. The missionaries were received with the greatest enthusiasm by the natives, who were anxious to trade food, implements, stone hatchets, anything, for pieces of iron hoop. They also sold land for the ... of the native teachers who were to be left behind: the Raratongans, with Mr. and Mrs. Chalmers, according the south shore and the Loyalty Islands teachers the north shore of the southeastern peninsula. The mission opens under the most favorable auspices. The location is the most healthy yet occupied in New Guinea, and all are very hopeful. The region is so new to geography that the ... do not contain the names of the places visited. Thus the South Cape, near the end of the peninsula, was supposed to be on the mainland until, two years ago, the missionaries discovered that it was on an island, which they called Stacey Island.

HAPPY FIELDS OF SUMMER.

BY LEAH BACON.

Happy fields of summer, all your airy grasses
Whispering and bowing when the west wind passes,
Happy birds and insects, hid beneath the growing,
How sweet music are you, to the white clouds growing.

Happy fields of summer softly billowed over
With the feathery red-top and the rosy clover—
Happy little children seek your shady places,
Lark sings in their bosoms, sunshine on their faces.

Trees bend down to kiss you, breeze and blossom love you.

And we bless you playing in the field-paths mazy,
Swinging with the harebell, dancing with the daisy.

Happy fields of summer, tangled with deeper beauty
As your tall grass rippling tell the children duty
Is as sweet as pleasure; tell them both are blended
In the text this story well begins and ended.

St. Nicholas.

JACKSON, LA., Aug. 13, 1878.

DEAR DR. PARKER: I sold my missionary eggs, and now send you $1. This is so small a sum that I first thought of waiting to add to it; then remembered that even one dollar will send the ADVOCATE to some good preacher, who is now denied the blessing of such a pleasant weekly visitor. May our Father in heaven protect you and Bro. Harp from yellow fever. Your little friend,

MARTHA ANDREWS.

The Tortoise and the Deer.

FROM THE GERMAN OF GRIMM.

BY T. OSBORNE.

One day in the long ago, when animals and their ways were better understood and appreciated than they are now, an idle, low-bred tortoise, in his wanderings through the wood, found himself in the neighborhood of a beautiful high-toned deer. Now the deer could spring farther on his slender legs in a minute than the clumsy tortoise on his short, fat paddles could waddle in a day. It would seem as if the tortoise ought to have remembered his own shortcomings sufficiently to have bowed himself in the grass, and kept silence until the noble deer passed by. But that is not the way of the ignorant and low-lived. They are always forcing themselves in a frozen way into the company of their betters.

"Eh, deer," said the tortoise, impudently and familiarly, "what are you hunting for here?"

The deer, paying no heed to the rudeness of little Hard-Shell, answered politely:

"I am seeking something to eat. But, Tortoise, whither do you travel?"

"I go a little in all directions," said the tortoise, tossing his head, "and seek water when I am thirsty."

The deer looked down upon the little animal, who had to work so hard in his coat of mail to drag himself even a short distance, and his heart was filled with compassion for the toiler.

"How long may it be," said he, in a sympathetic tone, "before you will find water?"

This question and its tone vexed the pride of the tortoise, and he was not sufficiently well-bred to conceal it.

"Why do you ask such a question?" demanded he, in a snarling manner.

"Because," said the deer, smiling benevolently upon the indignant one, "you have such short little trotters."

With this open-hearted explanation the deer just knocked the bottom out of the tub, as people say. The tortoise was so angry he nearly moped out of his armor.

"My legs are quite short," said he, sharply, "but I can run as fast with them as you with your long ones."

This greatly amused the deer. He threw back his head and laughed heartily. As soon as he could speak he said to the tortoise:

"If it be true that you are so swift-footed, I suppose it wouldn't be unfair to propose that we try a race together, just for a little friendly sport."

"Suit me to a T," said the brazen tortoise. "When will we run?"

"To-morrow," said the deer.

"At what time?" asked Chimsy.

"In the early morning," replied his grace.

"Eng, eng" (yes, yes), snapped the tortoise, and waddled off to the wood without even as much as a parting nod to the deer, who good-naturedly stepped aside to let him pass.

Once in the wood, the tortoise called on all his relatives, a hundred or more, and collected them together. They were not a little surprised as he, in the most excited tones, gave vent to the following words:

"The deer, who lives in the forest not a mile from here, that stuck up, hateful beast, has got to die. I myself will kill him!"

Such a bold design from such a little fellow made the relatives tremble for his fate, and, shaking their heads disapprovingly, they murmured: "How will you bring it about?"

"Pay attention now," said the crafty creature. "The deer and I met together, and he at once picked a quarrel with me, as he does with every one. He passed remarks on the shortness of my legs, and treated me with great scorn. The upshot of the business was I offered to run a race with him."

"To run a race with the deer!" broke in his companions, excitedly.

"Hear! hear!"

The tortoise strutted before them for a minute or two, filled to the top of his shell with vanity. Then, looking down upon his little black propellers, he said, loftily:

"My legs, it is true, are much shorter than the deer's, but what does that signify? If fair means won't win the day for me, then I will resort to trickery."

And he gave a wicked, cackling, significant laugh.

"To trickery, Eng! eng!" "yes, yes," applauded the whole tribe of tortoises, spitting excitedly on their fore paws and rubbing them together. "To trickery. Eng! eng!" (good, good).

Elated by their comments, the tortoise proceeded to unfold his plan.

"Come to-morrow morning early," said he, "and place yourselves on the outskirts of the woods close to the open field, but sufficiently concealed. Don't stand too near together—a certain number of yards apart; and don't crawl about—remain quietly in your places; and don't whistle or sing, or even dare to catch flies. But when the deer passes by, and asks, 'Where are you, Tortoise?' the one that stands just ahead of him in the woods must then answer for me: 'I am already here.'"

Then all the tortoises broke out into a coarse laugh, threw hard springs for very joy, and looked wickedly into each others' eyes.

"Already here; already here, Eng! eng!" yes, yes, said they, and thrust their noses in the mud, another way they had of expressing their delight.

Punctually in the early morning the deer came bounding toward the tortoise, who had just returned from stationing his friends on the edge of the woods, according to his plan of the day before.

"Good morning, Tortoise."

"Good-morning, Deer."

"Are you still willing to race," said the latter.

"I am," replied the runner, "quite ready," giving the deer an evil look. "And what is more," he continued, "I will not only race with you, but I will let you run in the open fields along the border of the woods, while I travel just inside through brier and brush."

This offer created no suspicion in the mind of the honest deer, but nearly took his breath away for a minute, it so surprised him.

"What!" said he, "you little short-legged fellow, will you undertake to run through the wood?"

"Certainly; that's nothing," said the tortoise, carelessly. "I'm used to the woods. I like to keep my shell cool in the shade of the trees. I'll run in the field though, if you wish."

"Oh, no; suit yourself," said the deer; "I was only thinking of your welfare."

"You'll think of your own," muttered the tortoise to himself, "before you get through." Then aloud he cried: "Time's up. Let us start."

The deer took an easy pace; he did not wish to discourage the tortoise at the outset. But that tortoise, far from being disheartened, was sitting still in the dewy grass, and laughing contemptuously at his companion in the distance.

"Run to your heart's desire," said he; "you'll have a hard enough time before you get through."

When the deer had run a hundred yards or more, he called out:

"Tortoise, where are you?"

"Already here," sounded the voice of a tortoise, just ahead.

This surprised the deer. He took a little faster gait, but still did not exert himself. He did not want the tortoise to make too painful an effort. After running another stretch, he called pleasantly again:

"Tortoise, brave fellow, where are you?"

"Already here," sounded the answer, the same as before.

"Well, well," said the deer to himself.

"I shall have to bestir myself or lose the day." And the next hundred yards he traveled like the wind. Stopping for breath, again he questioned: "Tortoise, how is it now?"

"Already here," said the tortoise's substitute.

The deer could scarcely credit his senses.

"Never yet was a deer beaten by a tortoise," said he, excitedly; and he ran and ran, the foam flew from his mouth, his head grew dizzy, and he could no longer see. With full force he bounded against a tree, and, staggering for a few yards, fell lifeless to the ground, hearing in his dying moment the voice of the last tortoise on the line, who waddled forth and, croaking, cried: "Already here."

Thus a noble, honest, fleet-footed deer became the victim of the low-bred, deceitful, snail-paced tortoise. The deer could tell no lie, it is true. But any one can see at a glance that his life would have been spared had he kept out of bad company. Children's Hours.

THE CATTLE MISSIONARY. On the Sabbath, on an island in the Indian Ocean, a missionary was studying a sermon to preach in the language of the people. A little boy, about half clad, came in and said: "O I do so love my Jesus! May I do something for his house?" "And what can you do?" said the missionary. Blushing and stammering, as if afraid to say anything, he replied: "I will be always there; I will do it, look! Please let me ring the bell." While he was a boy he rang the bell that invited the people to church, and when he became a man he preached to his people the same glad news that he commenced calling the people to hear when he rang the Sabbath bell. Little boys, begin while you are young to call the people by bell, or mouth, or tract, or inviting children to a Sabbath school; and as you grow up you will be trained servants and soldiers to serve Christ anywhere.

A new theory of Polynesian ethnology is advanced by Mr. Fornander, an English official on the Island of Nami. He refers the people to the Aryan race, but separated from it in pre-Vedic times, their language being the oldest extant found upon the globe. He traces their ancestry to the shores of the Persian Gulf, and believes that he detects indentical ... of contact with Cushite civilization, modifying the character of the race.

The Voice of God.

God is speaking to the country in the prevailing pestilence. Death in the world is not only a testimony against sin and a fruit of it, but it is also a disciplinary dispensation. It has a moral end. Its purpose is to awaken sinners, to lead men to repentance, and to remind believers that they must be ready. "Thou turnest man to destruction, and sayest, Return, ye children of men." This is what God is saying through the appointment of death, and what he says with emphasis in times of special visitations. The inevitableness of death, and that it is no respecter of persons, coming alike to the rich and the poor, the old and the young, ought to suffice. But it does not. Men grow careless, indifferent, worldly. Even believers sometimes let their armor become rusty. They do not watch unto prayer. It is needful that God should sometimes speak in the sweeping pestilence, and that death should come even nearer and in forms more terrible than usual.

The admonition is pertinent to the times: "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Many, no doubt, will hear; some have already heeded the warning. But there is a disposition to harden the heart when God says in the destruction that is abroad: "Return, ye children of men." It is a chance that has happened to us. The natural causes are manifest. Sanitary measures have been neglected. The lines of approach have not been adequately guarded. The communities scourged are not worse than those that have escaped. God is not in the matter at all. Thus men think, and dispose of the subject. Then in times of peculiar peril people get used to the situation, and serious impressions, if ever made, gradually wear off, and they move about among the dying and the dead with little feeling of any sort. The recovered and the spared have made vows. Will these promises of amendment be kept? When the trouble is over, and health and prosperity smile upon us again, will there be a faithful performance? The thousands who have been bereaved, and whose homes have been made desolate—how is it with them? Some of them are impenitent, wicked, worldly. They have forgotten God, neglected his word, and lived only for the present world. Will they hear the voice of God, repent, and begin a new life? Some of them are negligent and lukewarm Christians. Will they arouse themselves, and return to their first love, and be more faithful?

The faithful and consecrated followers of Christ well know how to interpret the voice as it speaks to them. They have not escaped. Their children and other kindred have fallen. Some of the most devoted have been sorely touched. The vine has been pruned, that it may bring forth more fruit. "If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not?"

And the lesson should not be lost upon the ministry. As never before the preacher realizes that he stands between the living and the dead. It is always so, but the preacher does not always feel it. In ordinary times every sermon may be the last to the preacher himself or to some of his hearers. The tone and spirit which an epidemic inspires may very well be kept up always. Earnestness and directness in warning, instructing and in declaring the whole counsel of God are always in order. The school is a good one in which to learn how to preach. To minister through an epidemic is an experience and training invaluable to the preacher.

Sunday Diet.

A writer in the Watchman, Boston, strongly and earnestly objects to baked beans for Sunday diet, and for the sufficient reason that they are more soporific than other food. We had supposed that codfish was the chief end and food of man in Boston, and it may be still, except on Sundays. The reason why beans are eaten on Sundays is thus given:

"But," says one, "you know the reason why this food is eaten on Sundays is because no time is required for its preparation; and you certainly would not have the holy Sabbath desecrated by cooking a dinner?" I grant that the custom originated in the extreme piety of the inhabitants of New England, which is also the reason, I presume, why baked beans are such a favorite dish at church fairs in this vicinity. All honor to the worthy motive.

Notwithstanding the pious origin of bean-eating, it turns out to have been one of the devil's own tricks. It explains the Yankee phase of original sin, and we now know why the gospel has had so little effect at the "Hub" and throughout the Yankee-speaking section. The fact and philosophy of it are thus explained:

What shall we eat on Sundays? Not baked beans, certainly; although in this part of the country they are so universally consumed on the first day of the week that they may almost be said to constitute the New England Sunday menu. Why not? Because their tendency is to produce, in the great majority of people, a general stupefaction of the mental faculties, in many constitutions drowsiness, and in not a few actual sleepiness. It is exceedingly trying to a good minister, after he has labored and prayed over a sermon all of the week, to see his words fall upon nodding heads and stupid hearts. Not that his vanity is wounded, as in the case of a lecturer or singer, but his pious soul is grieved that his warning voice should not be heard by his people, and he deplores the depravity of human nature that closes the eyes and ears of his parishioners, and thereby dooms them to perdition. The fact is, originalsin resides in the bean-pot. Does not the devil laugh and chuckle with glee as he sees every Sunday morning in this village of mine, and in many other towns and villages, the people thronging the streets on their way to and from the bakery, with their baskets of beans?

But why are they more soporific than other food? Because all leguminous seeds, after they have attained maturity, are difficult of digestion. Baked beans are rendered more so by being saturated with fat, by reason of the pork which is cooked with them. In this condition they form an exceedingly rich, nutritious article of diet, well suited to repair the wear and tear of hard manual labor; for they abound in food for the muscles, but not for the brain, being very nitrogenous, but only slightly phosphatic. On any one of the other six days of the week, laboring people, and those of active habits with strong stomachs, can safely eat them. But on the first day, when the body should be at rest, and the mind should be active, they are not suitable ailment; for, being so long and difficult of digestion, the fullest amount of energy that can be given is required to enable the stomach to get through its work; and so much strength and vitality of the whole system is concentrated upon that organ that an indisposition and even incapacity for vigorous and sustained mental exertion is induced, and there ensues the stupefaction, and the drowsiness, and the sleepiness that sadden the hearts of so many of our good ministers of a Sunday.

It would seem to be bad enough for a clear-headed and lively preacher to be compelled to preach to a congregation stuffed with beans baked in fat; but what must not be the fearful climax of stupidity when the preacher and his hearers are alike weighed down with this drowsy pabulum? The people feed on beans from motives of piety, but with the clergymen it is an enforced consumption.

And now what shall I say of the enforced consumption of baked beans by clergymen? There are some healthy ministers; but there are so many who are suffering from some form of gastric trouble that it is safe to say the average ministerial stomach cannot well digest this article of food. At his own table one can avoid it. But a dyspeptic minister, who is enjoying the delights of "candidating," is at the mercy, dietetically speaking, of his entertainers. And as it is a lamentable fact that the majority of families who "take in" the minister "breakfast or dine on baked beans and brown bread, he is pretty sure to come to grief.

From this particular standpoint not much has been said or written on the subject of Sunday diet. The next Yale lecture might take up the subject. Something ought to be done. Probably much of New England fanaticism, her miscegenation notions, women's rights agitation, and her manifold erratic and heterodox ways and singular characters are due to gastric troubles engendered by baked beans. The head and heart are in vital connection and close sympathy with the stomach. In this latitude the favorite Boston dish is not in vogue—indeed it is rarely seen—but on this question of Sunday diet there is food for reflection.

The Howard Association of New Orleans is a benevolent organization that has been in existence for more than thirty years, and is devoted exclusively to the relief of the needy sick in epidemics. Its members give their time and personal attention to visiting the sick, and see that they are supplied with nurses, medicines and medical attendance. In other epidemic seasons their services have been given without stint, and the good done is beyond estimate. As in other days, they are now organized and at work, and are ministering to hundreds daily. Owing to the obstruction to business by the quarantines, and to the protracted prostration of trade, there is more poverty and destitution than heretofore, and the demand for help is greater in proportion to the amount of sickness than in previous epidemics. Up to this writing we notice that the association has received about $70,000 in money, donated by our own citizens and by people at a distance.

The Young Men's Christian Association is also organized for relief, and is doing much good in hunting out the destitute sick and having them supplied with things needful. Funds have been contributed to this association by other associations in other parts of the country, and by our own people. They need, however, more money, and funds intrusted to them will be faithfully applied.

In the midst of the sickness here and the large demands upon our local resources, the Howards and others have generously responded to the calls made upon them from Grenada, Vicksburg and Memphis, and have sent nurses and physicians to these and other points.

The liberal responses to the cry of distress by the West and North, and by all sections, speak well for human nature. "Blood is thicker than water," and in these exhibitions of benevolence there is the earnest of a true fraternity. Beneath the surface of so much selfish commercial rivalry, and so much sectional antipathy, there is a warm and generous current of sympathy and good will. The cloud has this more than silver lining, this more than golden compensation. The benevolent deeds which this distress calls out will do more to strengthen the ties of national brotherhood and to unify the sections than all other means.

We are at some loss to account for the fact that the yellow fever seems to be of a much more fatal type at every point where it prevails outside of New Orleans. Within about four squares of our residence there have been not less than sixty cases, and of these only six have died. Is it worse in Grenada, Memphis and Vicksburg because of the general alarm, or is the milder type here owing to our proximity to the gulf? Would it not be well for the people throughout the Southwest to acquaint themselves with the nature and treatment of the disease, and thus prepare themselves to meet it in a rational and sensible way? Yellow fever is always critical—the slightest neglect or imprudence may bring about fatal results—and yet the treatment is more simple than that of almost any other fever. We heard of a convalescent patient recently who ate a small piece of apple, and died in a few hours; of another whose clothes were changed on the third day, and in another day he was dead. Too much medicine is worse than none at all. The most successful treatment is to give scarcely anything beyond a single dose to act on the bowels. Complications sometimes arise requiring special remedies; but as a rule our most successful physicians give little medicine. They watch the patient closely, and see that a competent nurse is always at the bedside. It is unfortunately true that thousands cannot have the requisite care, and that thousands more, from ignorance, bring on fatal results by their imprudence. The yellow fever will occasionally invade this country, in spite of all quarantine regulations; and one of the best means of conquering its terrors and of resisting its ravages is for doctors and people to familiarize themselves with its character and treatment. With prudence on the part of the patients and their friends, with judicious medical attention, and with good nursing, not one in twenty would die.

The Weekly Clarion, Jackson, Miss., says:

The example of Rev. Dr. Palmer, of New Orleans, who was on his summer vacation in the mountains of Virginia, returning to New Orleans when he learned that the yellow fever had broken out there, is an example of rare self-sacrifice and Christian virtue.

All the objection we have to the above is that the instance mentioned is described as "an example of rare self-sacrifice and Christian virtue." It is the rule here that our pastors remain with their people during epidemics. We know of several who were away when the fever broke out, and who promptly returned. We had supposed that this was the case everywhere. A good soldier will not ask for a furlough on the eve of battle, and if absent he will hasten to the front and share the peril with his comrades in arms. Dr. Palmer is a faithful Christian minister, and has done as we hope all Christian ministers will do, and are doing, in these times of trial. There may be circumstances that justify a pastor in leaving his charge in epidemic visitations, but as a rule he ought to stay. We have thought that the church and Christianity could better afford that a dozen ministers die at the post of duty than that one should desert it. However this may be, we take sincere pleasure in saying that ministers in New Orleans, both Protestant and Catholic, with few exceptions, are at home and in the performance of their duties. We are not informed how it is at other points where the fever prevails, but we have no reason to think that there is any general disposition in the Christian ministry of the South to evade their manifest responsibilities. We believe the Clarion, in paying a just tribute to an eminent and everywhere revered pastor, has unintentionally reflected upon the Christian ministry of the country.

From Jackson, Miss.

We are glad to learn of the convalescence of Rev. C. B. Galloway, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Vicksburg, and that the pastors in Jackson have not left. May God bless them all and be their shield. The following note from Rev. Dr. Watkins, pastor of our church at Jackson, will be read with interest:

JACKSON, MISS., Aug. 24, 1878.

Rev. L. Parker, D. D., New Orleans, La.

DEAR BROTHER—I write mainly to say that our Bro. Galloway is in a fair way to recover from a sharp attack of yellow fever. He is now in the fifth day, with no unfavorable symptom. We are thankful for the preservation of a life so dear to us.

Jackson is almost deserted. I now count forty-six Methodist families, and there may be others, who have fled, and I think the same can be said by other pastors. None of the pastors have left.

We have organized a Howard Association, and have already received liberal contributions for the relief of our citizens in case the fever should occur. Every precaution has been employed, and at this writing the city is unusually healthy.

The news from Grenada, Vicksburg and Port Gibson awakens our sympathy and calls on us for help. May you and yours be preserved.

Your brother,

W. H. WATKINS.

P. S.—If we live to see the end of this sad history we hope to see the ADVOCATE again. I assure you that I miss it.

Maj. John Edward Austin, only son of Dr. W. G. Austin, died in New Orleans, of apoplexy, August 21. Maj. Austin was in the prime of life—thirty-eight years of age—and a lawyer of prominence at the New Orleans bar. He was among the first to enter the service in the late war in defense of his native South, and won distinction as a brave and capable soldier. He had also served with ability in the legislature of Louisiana. He was a man of generous and kindly feelings, warm personal attachments, and noble and tender impulses. His sun has gone down while it is yet day, and the last sleep has overtaken him at the meridian of life. We knew him in his boyhood, and cherish many pleasant memories in connection with his early years. A large audience was in attendance at the funeral services in the Carondelet Street church. We tender our sympathies to the bereaved family.

We regret to learn that David W. Jones, assistant editor of the Southwestern Christian Advocate, died in this city, of yellow fever, August 19. He was a Christian gentleman of great worth, highly esteemed by a large circle of friends in the community. The acting editor of the Southwestern, in announcing his death, says:

"Bro. Jones has been connected with the Southwestern Advocate for the past three years as associate editor. He was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a noble, kind-hearted gentleman. It is sad to have to chronicle any death, but when we are called upon to record the demise of a true and faithful friend, a beloved brother, it is a painful duty indeed. For many years the writer of this has been intimately acquainted with the deceased, and has always found him to be a true friend, a good man and a devout Christian. Quiet, unassuming, true and brave, ever ready to help the poor and friendless, always foremost in any good work, he won the respect and friendship of all who knew him.

How Stands the Account?

We are approaching the time of the third quarter, and are about to enter the fourth. The last stretch is before us. How stands the account with you and your obligations to the church of God? Stop right here and think for one moment, and ask yourself the question: Have I met my obligations to my pastor and his family? Have I met the responsibility that is upon me to support the institutions of the church? Ponder these questions prayerfully, and it will do you good. If you can say Yes, a joy will spring up in your heart. If No has to be the answer, it will do you good to be arrested and brought to the bar of conscience, and made to answer honestly for the neglect of a duty, the performance of which should have been the first and most sacred of all the obligations resting upon you. We are aware that there is a widespread disregard of these obligations, and a disposition to evade them upon the part of Christian people. Much of this is the result of imperfect teaching, and much arises from innate depravity, showing itself in the love of money. We know that the preacher has to pay for many losses occurring among his people, and frequently their subscriptions to other purposes. Very many say: "I will give five or ten dollars to aid this enterprise, but this is all I can give this year." This money was intended to pay the preacher, or for missions, but as it has been given to build a church or parsonage the preacher and missions must suffer the loss. We think we know a preacher who had to pay not less than two hundred dollars in this way by his salary being diverted to unneeded church work. This state of things is existing all round us. The conscience seems to be asleep. The missionaries in foreign lands are cramped and suffering. Our home evangelization is crippled. The pastor you love, and who is instant in season and out of season, laboring for your good, is crippled and cramped in his holy and high calling because the stewards of the church and the people of God, holding in their hands the purse of the world, will not loose him and let him go, but make him to serve tables, in that he is constantly concerned about: "What shall I eat, and what shall my family have when I am away about my Master's work?" A brother said to us a few days ago: "When I got home from a protracted meeting there was no flour, sugar, coffee or meat in my house. I had nothing to feed my horse or cow, and I had but sixteen cents in my pocket. If I had not a little private means I believe I should starve." Brethren, how stands the account? Are you up with your obligations to the cause of God? Many, very many of our noble people can meet this question here and hereafter with pleasure. But a large, very large number of our people shirk it here to meet it in all of its fearful consequences hereafter. Let every man, every woman, resolve that the stain of the past shall be wiped out, as far as possible, by the faithful performance of duty this year. Deny yourself, take up the cross, and it will become pleasant. What you now think a yoke will become a light and easy duty. May the mercy of God so rest upon the church that she may have grace to meet these solemn obligations. These things are sad facts to thousands of our people who do their duty; they are sad for us to write. In many instances they occur for want of thought, and in others for want of a proper appreciation of duty. "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."—Richmond Christian Advocate.

MEETING OF THE BOOK COMMITTEE.—The Book Committee, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, met in Nashville on Tuesday, the thirteenth instant, and held a three days' session. Present: Judge James Whitworth, chairman; Judge E. H. East, Dempsey Weaver, N. Baxter, Jr., Dr. William Morrow, Dr. W. H. Morgan, Rev. R. K. Hargrove, D. D., Rev. A. S. Andrews, D. D., and Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D.

The important matters before them were patiently considered by the committee. A basis of settlement with the former agent was adopted, after a laborious and thorough investigation. The details will be laid before the Annual Conferences and the church in due form and in due time. The reduction in the subscription price of the Nashville Christian Advocate was made after a full canvass of the facts. The committee speak to the church on this subject in another column.

Rev. R. B. Crawford, writing from Opelika, Ala., says:

We have been engaged for some time in a protracted meeting at this place (Opelika, Ala.) Results: thirty-five additions to the church and about as many conversions. This is the only item of news I have to send. We sympathize very greatly with you in your present isolated condition, and pray that the fever may not be so destructive of life as some seem to apprehend.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate has recently come out in a handsome new dress. It is a great improvement on the old. It is now about the best-looking member of the Advocate family. We are glad to see this evidence of prosperity.

We regret to notice that Mr. O. V. Shearer, city editor of the New Orleans Times, died in this city on Monday, August 26, of yellow fever. He was a brave soldier in the Confederate army, a good citizen and an able journalist.

The Fever Report.

The greatest mortality for any day is in the above report for twenty-four hours ending at 12 Friday, August 30. The fever but recently manifested itself in Third District and in Algiers. several weeks it was confined to few centers or infected localities. is now nearly everywhere, and most equally diffused throughout corporate limits of the city. It be seen from our dispatches that ravages of the fever in Memphis Vicksburg are truly fearful, and several other places, hitherto empt, have it. With us the mortal is greatest among the children.

A. H. Stephens to the Children

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens dressed the children of St. Jam Sunday school, Augusta, Ga., at c siderable length on Sunday afterno last, and gave them some excelle advice. In concluding he told boys if they had aspirations for pub position they should seek it only do good to others; that they sho have no other object than to con blessings upon their neighbors, a that they should never seek to greater than they are good. In course of his remarks he said: "No children, I want the humblest a youngest, and every one to unde stand that there is a spirit goi abroad in this age, inculcating in minds of the philosophers, so calle the idea that man, after all, is o made up of matter. They are call materialists. These teachers—I m be pardoned for calling the names some of them: Spencer and Huxley their whole philosophy is that the is no difference between a man a horse or a dog, and that all is m ter, and when a man dies his exi ence, life, passes away, becomes e tinct forever, and that he passes in the grave just as an inferior anim What I want to impress upon yo children, is that the oracles of G as given by Moses and handed do by time immemorial, teach no su doctrine. Little girls, little boy never entertain the idea that there no difference between you and t dog, or a horse, or the animal that ation you. Recollect that in t first chapters of the Bible you a taught that into man was breathe a living soul, an immortal spir that is to live hereafter. These p losophers that I speak of are at t time doing more mischief, more ha to the world than any other clas men ever did. They do not unde stand this doctrine that I wish impress upon these teachers s upon this age: the mistake th make is between the organization nature and the creation of man—th he was the highest type of creatio and that into him was breathed living soul that stamps upon hi immortality. It is the doctri taught in the Scriptures that it is t work of the Sunday school to e pound."

The many thousand readers "Stepping Heavenward" will ha heard with sincere regret, says t Independent, of the death of favorite and gifted authoress, M Elizabeth Payson Prentiss, of N York. She died on the thirteen instant, at her summer residence Dorset, Vt., in her fifty-fifth ye Her husband, it is well known, the Rev. George L. Prentiss, D. formerly pastor in this city, and no professor in Union Theological Se inary. The deceased wrote a la number of children's books, whi have found their way into ma homes. "Stepping Heavenward alone has had a sale of fifty thou copies in this country, and there hardly a Sunday school library th is not supplied with nearly all t other books of Mrs. Prentiss. H writings were fresh, attractive, a most wholesome in their influence.

Mrs. Matilda S. Page, widow of Re Henry Page, deceased, of the Loui ana Conference, died in New Orlea August 22. While on her way this city in 1848, on the steambo Yallabousha, the boat was burne and her husband and two childr were lost. Since that time she h made her home in New Orlea She was a woman of remarkab strength of character, of great intel gence and of deep piety. Letter from Texas.

HILLSBORO, TEXAS, Aug. 5, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: After a long silence we "communicate" again, hoping it will be pleasant to you and to friends of days now gone by. We would have written oftener, but succeeding our former letters came lots of letters from different persons inquiring about Texas. As we were not in an emigration agency we could not undertake so arduous a task as that of answering letters from people we never saw, nor ever expect to see. We have had letters all the way from Nova Scotia, Canada, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Missis sippi and Louisiana asking about Texas. One thing curious about these corresponding friends: they are considerate, and give you credit for omniscience. One invariable question: "Do you think Texas will suit me?" Ah, friend, how can I tell? How came I to know your disposition, your temperament, your affinities? You must do like every man or woman who has ever come to Texas—try it just once. If you are well-to-do, or can come overland, and bring your teams, wagons, feather-beds, dogs and cats, and other little indispensables, and will buy and stock, you will be sure to like it well enough to stay. But if you sell out everything for a song, come by rail and are with only a little money, go in debt for supplies, and don't like it, you might as well like it, for you will be poor to ever get away. This is exactly the case of thousands to day throughout Texas. People who came here with even a little means are doing well, and those who did not are not doing at all, and never will, I fear. Renting land is the great curse of agriculture in Texas. In some places it is rapidly passing away, but in other localities it will be years before the baneful system is extinct. Strange infatuation, too, we know men who have paid rent enough in the past six years to have bought the lands they worked, a dozen times over. As to "settling" in Texas, that is a consideration to be taken in hand after you arrive. It depends on your finding "a good place."

"Better country out West!" rings in your ears until you must go "to look at the country." You go—are pleased, perhaps, with many things you saw; there are many things you did not see, did not hear, did not know. So you move. One year you spend in "learning." Then you move again, and on the way meet a man who has land to rent—houses and water. You fall in and stay a year, and it is that while the great tide of emigration, like clouds of pigeons flocking to the great roost, is rolling into Texas, in Texas there is, living in horse and cow-hunting, removing than there is out of it, country does not call for this of idlers. Nearly any of it is enough for a man who was in the piny woods of Alabama, and Louisiana. It is better than the uplands of either of those, and many of the lands are better than their best creek bottoms, while the best class of lands equal to the Mississippi, Red and Teche bottoms, while they much greater extent and much per in price. There is however, that makes the people love. We often think of what old friend told us just before we home: "The blood in Texas will fever in thirty years." When Western States were settled they settled by colonies from New land and the Middle States, and were simply a reproduction of home society. On the contrary, as is cosmopolitan. New York or London are not more so. are right houses in our row, every Southern State is represented in those houses, and one or Northern States besides. But people out of Texas, especially in Alabama and Mississippi, have any of the growing power and importance of this great State. In 1860 counties of Washington, Smith, and Harrison contained one-fifth of the population of Texas. In the largest of them are far below, in spite of their increase, fifty counties, while a hundred other cities still have reached their dignity of 1860. She has two cities of fifty, fifty thousand inhabitants, and of twelve to twenty thousand, a hundred or more towns from a hundred to three thousand, has over two thousand miles of road, and others in course of construction and projected. She will a crop of cotton, grain, cattle hides worth in the aggregate $40,000, with abundance for home. Why New Orleans has been so blind to this trade as to be sleeping sing is more than we can solve. why she is putting forth all her gies to build a railroad to touch a little corner of the State, and in its most unproductive portion is another thing we cannot see. did they not strike boldly the Sabine from Alexandria, and reach out the iron arms to the Brazos between Fort Worth and Waco, and thence onward northwest to the immense cattle region, instead of crawling slowly along the backbone of western Louisiana for fear they would slip off. As it is, St. Louis and Galveston control the commercial interests of this country, while New Orleans is occasionally spoken of by some man in a joke or in half earnest.

We have five Annual Conferences in Texas, sending thirty-eight votes to the General Conference. Our Northwest Texas Conference is nearly double the strength of the Louisiana, has four times the territory, nearly twice as many members, a much richer country and several railroads; and yet, strange to say, the church east of the river seems oblivious to these facts. We have a bishop to see us when Conference comes round, but when Conference adjourns sine die, so does he, and the next we hear of him he is east of the river attending District Conferences, college commencements and other ovations, until Texas is almost accustomed to the idea that, as for bishops, we don't have any; and as to presidents of our Conferences, we can get them at home without paying anything for them—only the honor. Yet we are all certain the bishops will want to know of our elders: "Is he a good pastor?" Let us make a suggestive answer: "Yes, sir; he is on Bro. B.'s circuit; but on his own they never see him only on Sunday at eleven o'clock." No objection; his character passes. "We suggest one reflection of the famous Josh Billings to the church East: Treat your poor kin right, for they might get rich some day, and then things would be difficult to explain." Tell Bishop Keener if he will come out and visit around overland we will engage that he gets a better pair of ponies than those famous fossils he drove over the western department during the war.

There have been many interesting times religiously over Texas. Our District Conference, Rev. W. G. Veal, presiding elder, has just closed at this place. It was a time of great revival in the church and gospel power among the people. Bros. Shaw, Brown, Davis, Armstrong, and John R. Allen, of Mississippi, ministered with great zeal and power. Bro. Veal is one of the founders of Methodism in Texas, and is universally popular and beloved in these parts of the connection. Bro. Allen is the newly-elected president of Marvin College, and we affectionately thank the North Mississippi and Alabama people for letting him come, and we will not object to a few more. Our Waco Female College is under the presidency of Rev. Samuel P. Wright, and is doing an excellent work in the education of young ladies. Many of our girls go to Virginia, but they return satisfied, and their parents and guardians are ever after dissatisfied. Well they may be. We have always thought that Brookhaven, Centenary, Mansfield—and we now add Waco, Marvin and Southwestern University—were as good as Staunton or Emory and Henry; we will not offend Bishop Doggett by saying Randolph-Macon, nor the rest of the world by uttering—Vanderbilt.

We were much pleased with a letter in your paper of August 1, from Bro. W. P. Andrews, of Silver Creek, Miss., upon the "Seventh-Day Adventists." It is just six miles from here to Peoria, one of the main points they have gained in this part of Texas. The leader, Mr. Kilgore, came there and spread his tent, and collected crowds of people to hear him. He was attacked at various times, but succeeded in turning each one to some advantage, until he had gained a sufficient following to disturb the public mind, and to establish a church. While the other denominations were doing nothing but disintegrating, they have built a neat little church. Bro. Andrews has a very correct idea of them, whether theoretical or practical. This man sold more literature in three months than all our preachers in the district did in a year.

We are preparing to start to our protracted meetings, to be gone several weeks. When we return we will give you a short account of our trip. While we think of it, the doctrine of entire sanctification is exciting a great deal of interest, up and down, in Texas just now. Much fanaticism has prevailed on one side, and on the other side many hard things have been said. One side claims a separate and distinct work after regeneration; the other that it is only "a growth in grace," "a going on to perfection," commencing at the moment of conversion. It is a vital question to-day in Texas.

We have written at greater length than we intended, but "our heart is enlarged," and we know by past experience that, whatever you allow other men, you never allowed us to commit a public indiscretion since we have been contributing to your columns. With great regard,

Your brother,

RICHARD H. ADAIR.

DELAY OF OUR ISSUE.

The issue of the ADVOCATE has been delayed several times in the few weeks past. First, when the streets were being flushed from the waterworks above us, we had not water in the hydrant to run the engine; then the failure of paper to reach us in time; and lastly the sickness of part of our force and the family of the pressman. One of our writers on the mails is in Grenada nursing the sick; another is prostrated with the fever here. We found it difficult this week to get pressmen. If our friends will indulge us a little while, we trust that we shall be in time thereafter.

Periodicals.

—The Westminster Review, July 1878, American edition—the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, New York—contains the following articles: 1. The House of Lords. 2. The Mythology and Religious Worship of the Ancient Japanese. 3. The Saracenes in Italy. 4. The Late Yakoob Bey Kashgar. 5. George Eliot as a Novelist. 6. The Peasants of our Indian Empire. 7. Russia Abroad and at Home. 8. Cotemporary Literature. 9. India and our Colonial Empire.

—Scribner's Monthly for September has: Ready for the Ride, with an engraving; Hunting the Mule-Deer in Colorado, illustrated; Mercedes; College Fellowships; To South Africa for Diamonds, second paper, illustrated; Glimpses of Western Farm Life, illustrated; The Transportation Question; A Spool of Thread, illustrated; Days and Nights in Concord, and other articles.

—Wide Awake for September is to hand, fresh and beaming with good humor and beauty. Nothing could well be finer than this number. Some of the pictures are exquisite, and the articles are of the most readable kind. Our boys always wait impatiently for the monthly visits of Wide Awake, and thousands of others do the same thing.

—Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine for August, American edition—Leouard Scott Publishing Company—contains the following articles: Prince Bismarck; John Caldegate, part 5; Miss Cushman; Gordon Baldwin, part 3; Half Way to Arcady; Summer in the Hills; Englishmen and Frenchmen; Sheathing the Sword; The Treaties of Peace.

—St. Nicholas for September is a capital number. Besides the many fine and spirited engravings there is a wonderful array of articles calculated to delight and entertain our young folks. St. Nicholas still maintains primacy among magazines for the special edification of the girls and boys.

—We have received a copy of the annual catalogue of Emory College, Oxford, Ga., 1877-78. The last session was a prosperous one, and we are glad to learn that the number of applicants for admission, October 1, is greater than ever before in the history of the college.

—Appleton's Journal for September has: The New York Postoffice, illustrated; In Paraguay; Voices of Westminster Abbey; A Voyage with the Voyagers; Otsego Leaves; French Writers and Artists, and other articles.

—The Sanitarian, and organ of the Medico-Legal Society, for September, is filled with valuable matter—medical, scientific and literary.

—The Farm Journal for September has been received. W. H. Chambers, editor, Oswichee, Ala.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.—Time of Opening Postponed.—In view of the panic-stricken condition of the surrounding country, predisposed by the prevalence of yellow fever, it is thought best to postpone the opening of the college until Tuesday, October 1, 1878. Up to this date Meridian has kept clear of the plague, and we have but little apprehension of its appearance here as an epidemic.

AUGUST 26, 1878.

NOTICE.—To the Preachers of the Woodville District, Mississippi Conference: Owing to the excited condition of the country, arising from the yellow fever reports, the time of holding the District Conference has been postponed. Due notice will be given in the future as to the time of its holding.

WOODVILLE, Miss., Aug. 21, 1878.

A thick-headed squire, after being worsted by Sydney Smith in an argument, took his revenge by exclaiming: "If I had a son who was an idiot, by Jove, I'd make him a parson." "Very probably," replied Sydney, "but I see your father was of a different opinion."

MARRIED.

SARRA—WATTS.—August 18, 1878, at the residence of the bride's father, in Warrington, Fla., by the Rev. J. B. James, Mr. Lyman Sarra to Miss Martha V. Watts, all of Warrington, Fla.

QUINE—LOWDEN.—At the residence of Mr. Wilmer Young, in East Baton Rouge parish, La., on the 15th of June, by Rev. Ruffin T. Davis, Mr. William Quine and Miss Alice Lowden.

FRIDGE—GREENWELL.—At the residence of the bride's father, in East Baton Rouge parish, La., on the fifteenth of July, 1878, by Rev. R. T. Davis, Mr. Benjamin F. Fridge and Miss Mary Greenwell.

A Christian should be on the watch that, in the daily discourse of life and in its hours of relaxation, all do not run to waste and emptiness, but that there be ever a mixture of words wherewith one may edify another and of sound speech that cannot be condemned. It is well to go into society with a recollected frame, and a mental prayer that God would keep the door of our lips.

Men are apt to censure sharply in others what they practice themselves without scruple. Plutarch tells of a wolf, who, peeping into a hut where a company of shepherds were regaling themselves with a joint of mutton, exclaimed: "What a clamor would they have raised if they had caught me at such a banquet!"

Be thyself blameless of what thou rebukest. He that cleanses a blot with blotted fingers makes a greater blot.—Quarles.

Publisher's Department.

THE QUICKEST TIME EAST.—The Great Jackson Route is now making the quickest time to New York ever known, leaving New Orleans daily at 5:45 P. M., and arriving at New York at 8:35 A. M. Allowing for the difference in time between the two cities, the run is made in the unprecedented time of fifty-nine and three-quarter hours. This quick time is made only by the Great Jackson Route, and is the result of its enterprise in rebuilding its track with steel rails and new ties; at heavy expense, and the thorough system of ballasting that has been undertaken. This fast train will be of great advantage to the people in this city, which it is hoped they will show their appreciation of by their patronage. Only one change of cars, which is made at Columbus, Ohio, where breakfast is taken in the splendid dining hall at that place at 8 A. M.

This route also makes the quickest time to Boston, arriving at 2:10 P. M. Actual running time, sixty-seven and one-half hours. This makes it the most desirable route for all New England points. The fine local interchange points is correspondingly less. Bigs making this the favorite route of the Northern and Eastern cities.

Excursion tickets to Waukesha, Oconomowoc and all the Northwestern summer resorts, to Niagara Falls, Put-in-Bay, etc., are on sale at the lowest rates, with the quickest time made to any line, and only one change of cars.

VANDALIA LINE.—The attention of our readers and the travelling publicis called to the merits of the above line. For parties going East by way of St. Louis there is no better road. Comfortable, commodious and elegant palace cars; gliding noiselessly, swiftly and safely along over a track so smooth that one is almost unconscious of motion unless he chance to look out of the window, offer for the time a home unequaled in splendor and luxurious ease by anything the most fastidious traveler of the past generation ever dreamed of. The popularity of this old and reliable road is constantly and steadily on the increase. The efforts of the well known and highly respected general manager, Col. Simpson, are fully appreciated by the travelling public.

THE New England Organ Company, the advertisement of which will be seen on this page, is one of the most reliable of music houses to the North. The quality of their instruments is unexcelled in any respect. Our well-known and energetic fellow-citizen, Philip Werlein, is the agent of the company for this section, and will fill all orders satisfactorily. Churches and private parties needing organs should examine into the merits of the New England organs.

TRAVELERS who stop once at the Grand Hotel, Broadway and Thirty-First street, always make it their New York hotel in subsequent visits. The reason is plain. It is one of the finest and best of hotels; the location is convenient and the accommodations are unrivaled while the rates of charges are as moderate as in other first-class houses.

THE Ludlow-Saylor Wire Company, of St. Louis, advertise their Centennial Tie for our paper. These ties are suitable for cotton, hay, moss and other goods put up in bundles or bales. Being wire, they are much lighter than the hand ties, and should receive attention from cotton and moss shippers.

GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS are known the world over as being the best made. It is only necessary for us to call attention to the fact that they have achieved another triumph at the great Exposition in Paris. Dealers can order from the agency in New York or through any jobbing house.

THE OXYGEN TREATMENT of Drs. Starkey & Palen, of Philadelphia, is becoming better known and is increasing in popularity. Those who are troubled with any of the diseases mentioned in their advertisement should send 50c for pamphlets, giving full information.

H. A. CASSEBEER'S Hair Tonic, which is advertised in our paper to-day, is highly spoken of by those who have used it. Most druggists keep it for sale, and where this is not the case orders can be sent to Mr. Cassebeer in New York.

CRAWFORD HOUSE, CINCINNATI. This hotel, under the management of Lewis Vandegrift, is one of the most popular in the West. Parties going to Cincinnati should not fail to stop there. The terms are only $2 a day.

MESSRS. POOLE & HUNT, of Baltimore, dealers in machinery of all kinds, are reliable and clever men, and we can unhesitatingly recommend them to any one wishing to buy machinery.

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

MR. E. E. F. ROSS, one of the staff of this paper, is now travelling through the West and East on business connected with the ADVOCATE. Any attention shown him will be appreciated.

FASCINATING.

When a delightful odor surrounds the person by the use of Dr. Price's exquisite Perfumes, then it is that the utmost fascinations of beauty come in play and captivate its admirers. Dr. Price's Unique Perfumes are appreciated for their peculiar delicate fragrance.

THE CHEMISTRY OF TOBACCO.

The juice of fresh tobacco leaves contain ammoniacal salts. The existence of the volatile alkali in cured tobacco is shown by the action of the smoke of a cigar upon blue vegetable flowers, or vegetable colors, turning the reds to purple, and the purples to green.

When the leaves of the tobacco plant are subjected to distillation with water a weak ammoniacal liquid is obtained upon which a white, fatty, crystalline solid substance swims, which does not contain nitrogen, and is quite destitute of smell. But when the same plant, after being dried, is moistened with water, tied together in small bundles and placed in heaps, a peculiar process of decomposition takes place. Fermentation commences, and is accompanied by the absorption of oxygen; the leaves now become warm, and emit the characteristic smell of prepared tobacco and snuff. When the fermentation is carefully promoted, and too high a heat avoided, this smell increases and becomes more delicate; and after the fermentation is completed, an oily, exotized, volatile matter called nicotine is found in the leaves. This substance, nicotine, which possesses all the properties of a base, was not present before the fermentations. The different kinds of tobacco are distinguished from one another, like wines, by having very different odoriferous substances, which are generated along with the nicotine.

On a soil which contains potash, both wheat and tobacco may be reared in succession, because the latter plant does not require phosphates (salts which are invariably present in wheat,) but requires only alkalies and food containing nitrogen.

According to the analysis of Posselt and Reimann, 10,000 parts of the leaves of the tobacco plant contain 16 parts of phosphate of lime, 8.8 parts of silica; and no magnesia; while an equal quantity of wheat straw contains 47.3 parts, and the same quantity of the grain of wheat 99.15 parts of phosphates.

Now, if we suppose that the grain of wheat is equal to half the weight of its straw, then the quantity of phosphates extracted from a soil by the same weights of wheat and tobacco must be as 97.3 to 16. This difference is very considerable. The roots of tobacco, as well as those of wheat, extract the phosphates contained in the soil, but they restore them again, because they are not essentially necessary to the development of the plant.—Liebig's Organic Chemistry.

WALKING HORSES.

Walking is the most important gait for useful horses, yet little attention is paid to developing this most valuable quality. The fast walking gait is of immensely more importance than the fast trotting gait. An increase of one mile per hour in the walking gait of all the farm-horses of the country would represent hundreds of millions in the economy of labor for a single year. Yet this might much more easily be accomplished than what has already been done in increasing the trotting speed. The ordinary walking gait of a horse on the road is three miles, and on the plow two and a quarter to two and a half miles. Supposing this could be increased one mile per hour in each case—it would represent thirty-three per cent. extra travel or ten miles per day on the road, and about the same on the farm. The money value of this for the 5,000,000 working-teams would be enormous, yet it is perfectly capable of accomplishment. If the attention could be turned to this practical improvement as it has been to the pleasurable and fanciful one of trotting, it would in ten years add more than a hundred millions to the annual productive industry of the country.

In England the draft horse is not permitted to be driven faster than a walk on the public road. Heavy draft and steady movement go together, and any attempt to mix up trotting action with work must result in failure. But the useful horse should be trained with the same care and zeal for the special purpose to which he is devoted as is the trotting or running horse; and could the same enthusiasm be infused into the breeders of these faithful servants as the sporting fraternity give to the rearing and training of their pets, it would soon produce almost a revolution in the motive power of the farm and local commerce. The walking gait is the working gait, and the work of the world is more important than the pleasure; therefore let not breeders ignore the useful horse, that is connected with the highest progress of mankind.—Live Stock Journal.

WHAT RUINS COTTON GINS.

Thousands of cotton gins are heedlessly injured, if not entirely ruined, by one simple cause. That cause is permitting meat or lint cotton, that is, cotton that has been once ginned—to be mixed with seed-cotton and passed through the saws the second time. Such lint cotton catches in the teeth, clogs the saws, dulls the teeth, and bends or breaks the ribs, wears the boxes, and strains the whole gin so as to make it produce a bad sample, and readily becomes almost worthless. It likewise increases the draft so as to distress the mules propelling the gin, and creates so much friction as often to set the gin-house on fire. This can be explained the burning of many a gin-house by the supposed spontaneous combustion of cotton.

Hence every owner of a gin-house should be careful about where his meat cotton is placed, also about permitting the "flyings," or "hanglings" to fall on his seed cotton. Above all should he be particular in preventing the ginner or his assistant, when returning from the hat-room after "packing the cotton back," as it is called, from having any lint on his clothing. The usual assistant at a gin to hand seed-cotton and "pack back" is a playful urchin, who delights first to wallow in the lint-room, and then, without divesting himself of the lint adhering to his clothes, next to roll on the seed cotton. Oftentimes every boy, black and white, on a large plantation, after a general frolic in a lint-room, will immediately emerge therefrom and continue their wrestling, rolling and romping over the seed cotton, with a half pound of lint sticking to each one's ragged apparel. Such play is of course delightful to the boys, but it is dear sport to the owners of the gin. In many gin-houses, too, while packing cotton for market, much lint is mixed with the seed cotton either by carelessness or by the wind.

A gin is a costly machine, but it is not a delicate one, or put out of order if previously ginned lint is kept out of the saws. In fact a good gin, rightly managed, should, with little sharpening and small repairs pick fifty bales per year, and last a planter of average longevity his lifetime; whereas most gins become useless, or nearly so, in perhaps five years, from the single cause I have indicated. No child ever ought to be allowed to enter a lint-room where it can well be prevented.—North Carolina Farmer.

THE FUCHSIA.

PROPAGATING BY SLIPS.

For natural elegance and beauty I know of no flower which equals the fuchsia. In propagation, take your slips off with a heel—that is, pull them out where they branch out from the main stem, slipping, not cutting, them off. Have ready a box of very fine, nice soil, composed of sand, garden soil, and manure well rotted, or leaf mold, which is better; have it well mixed, plant the slips with two or more leaf joints under ground; water them with lukewarm water; never let the soil get dry, and nearly every slip will grow. From April to October is the best time to slip. Many people complain that fuchsias are hard to start from slips; this is owing to cutting off slips without a heel; they should never be cut, but slipped off with a heel attached. Having started them, they will need attention as to training, which can be done in any manner to suit the fancy. A neat little trellis may be made or bought, over which it may be trained, or they may be made into neat little bushes by nipping out the center shoot when about a foot high, which causes side shoots to start, which should have their tops nipped out again when of proper height. If a window or greenhouse is not convenient for saving the plants over winter, in October they may be taken up, the soil shaken off, and placed in a box of dry sawdust over winter.—W. C. L. Drew, in the Congregationalist.

CURE FOR SNAKE BITES.

Seeing several accounts of snake bites lately, I will give you a cure for all snake or any other poisonous bites—as sure a cure as Moses' brazen serpent was for the bite of the flying serpents in the wilderness. There is no place but what a part of the people use it. It is nothing but tobacco. I will give three cases. The first was my brother, bitten by a copperhead. Green growing tobacco was applied in that case. Beat to a jelly, put on the bite, and as soon as it gets dry and warm replace it with a fresh supply. The second case was a little grandchild too small to tell what hurt it. It cried from about four o'clock till about midnight before we knew what was the matter, and its father felt a lump on its leg above the ankle, and it was as hard as a green apple, and was swollen to its body. Manufactured tobacco was wet until perfectly soft, and applied on the bite as the other, and before day it effected a perfect cure. The third case was a young horse bit on the leg, and it swelled to its body, so that it could not walk. Leaf tobacco was boiled, and bathed it with the ooze from the body down, and repeated the application a few times, and in a few days it was well.—S. in the Central Methodist.

FRENCH TOAST.—For a family of five, take five slices of bread, the longer the bread has been baked the better, and have ready a bowl of water, into which a pinch of salt has been dropped. Take a piece of butter the size of a walnut, and thoroughly grease the bottom of a frying-pan. Then beat five eggs to a froth; dip each slice of bread into the water, then into the egg, and place it flat on the bottom of the frying-pan; pour over the bread the remaining egg which was left in the bowl; set the frying-pan over the fire, carefully turning the bread over when it becomes a light brown. Pepper and salt to taste, and rest assured that as often as it is brought on the table, just so often will your dinner be praised.—T. F. Humphrey, in Country Gentleman.

PROPER WAY TO COOK EGGS.—Butter a tin plate and break in your eggs; set in a steamer; place over a kettle of boiling water, and steam until the whites are cooked. They are more ornamental when broken into patty tins, as they keep their form better. The whites of the eggs, when cooked in this manner, are tender and light, and not tough and leathery, as if cooked by any other process; they can be eaten by invalids, and they certainly are very much richer than by any other method. If cooked in the shell they taste of the lime contained in them, and if broken into boiling water it destroys their flavor.—Country Gentleman.

KEEPING THE HANDS SMOOTH.—A writer in the American Grocer says that glycerine is not used in the right way. She says that to preserve the smoothness and softness of the hands you should keep a small bottle of glycerine near the place where you habitually wash them, and whenever you have finished washing them, and before wiping them, put one or two drops of the glycerine on the wet palm, and rub the hands thoroughly with it, as if it were soap, then dry lightly with a towel. Household work and bad weather will not prevent your skin from being smooth and soft if this plan of using glycerine is followed.

CURE FOR IVY POISONING.—Many persons are poisoned by contact with the wild ivy, and in some cases the poisoning is very severe. To such it may be of interest to know that Dr. Brown, of the United States navy, claims to have discovered a certain remedy for such poisoning. It is bromine dissolved in olive oil, cosmoline or glycerine. He used twenty drops of bromine to an ounce of oil, rubbing it on the affected parts three or four times a day, and washing it off occasionally with castile soap.

GERMAN PEA SOUP.—Prepare a thickening by gradually mixing in a stewpan three ounces of sifted flour with one quart of chicken broth. In another stewpan boil up two quarts of chicken broth, into which stir the thickening; add a little salt and sugar, and one quart of fresh-shelled peas previously well washed; continue stirring with a spoon till the soup boils, then simmer till the peas are done; skim, pour the soup in a tureen, and stir in an ounce and a half of butter.—Western Rural.

FRIED APPLES.—This is the season now for this wholesome and palatable dish. Don't fry them after the pork—they will taste too porky. Just drop a little lump of butter in the spider, heat it hot, and then pour in the dish of sliced apples. Add a half teacup of boiling water, put on the cover, and let them cook until so't without stirring. Give the spider an occasional shake, then take off the cover and let them fry until they begin to brown.

SOWING TURNIP SEED BROADCAST.—This is an operation of great nicety, as few succeed in getting just the right quantity on a given surface. A pound to the acre is enough, but more frequently two or three are sown. The difficulty is that the seed cannot be seen on the dark soil. Moisten the seed with a little water, and stir in a little flour; this makes each one as white as snow. After that it is easy enough.—S. Rufus Mason, in Germantown Telegraph.

CANNING TOMATOES.—To can tomatoes, pour boiling water over them, and in a moment or two the peeling will come off easily. Slice and stew in the shortest time possible. As soon as soft and done, fill your jars have them warm, to prevent breaking; while the tomatoes are boiling; fill them so full that they will bow over when the cover is pressed on. The quicker the tomatoes are cooked for the table the better.

Duty is a power which rises with us in the morning, and goes to rest with us at night. It is co-extensive with the action of our intelligence. It is the shadow which cleaves to us, go where we will, and which only leaves us when we leave the light of life.—Gladstone.

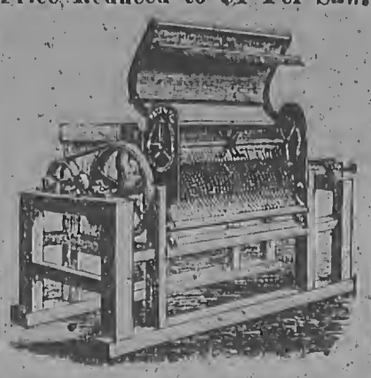
GENERAL AGENTS FOR

DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economizing steam or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

WHITWORTH

FEMALE COLLEGE,

BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

Will Reopen September 25 1878.

Pupils last term	203
Boarders	133
Music class	154
Graduating class	25

Board and tuition in English for collegiate year (see catalogue)	$180 00
Scholarship for ten years, board and tuition in English	1,000 00
Scholarship for four years, board and full college course	600 00
Same, and Instrumental Music	760 00
Same, Instrumental Music and Drawing or Painting	800 00

The object of the scholarship is to assist in erecting the new college building.

The unprecedented success of the college needs its best recommendation.

Bishop McTyeire writes in the Nashville Christian Advocate: "Several days spent in the delightful college family at Brookhaven left me in no doubt as to how this success has been achieved. The location is good, and the management better. * * * Long will I remember the morning hymns at chapel prayers. * * * Another fact noteworthy was the plainness of dressing—neat, tasteful, but plain."

The health record is as good as that of any school in Kentucky, Virginia or Tennessee.

The corner stone of the new college building will be laid in August.

Patronize this school, and you will assist in further developing an institution which has been rapidly growing for eleven years. Send for a catalogue.

An increasing patronage for the last term wrought the confidence of the educating public in this institution. In the midst of hard times and depression it has just closed its most successful year with a number that no other school in this section of the country can boast of.

The government of the school has been successfully directed to the suppression of the vices of the times.

The influence of Christianity has been so successfully brought to bear on the pupils that only with one or perhaps two exceptions they have been converted, and have obtained active and consistent connection with the church. The highest grade of scholarship has been commanded to the pupils of its charge, and those best acquainted with the history of this school accredit its present standard of scholarship as being higher than at any time in its past history.

Montezuma is a pleasant village four miles from Henderson station, on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, and ten miles from Medon, on the Mississippi Central, and is noted for the excellent morals and intelligence of its citizens. Students boarded free of charge from either of above stations on application being made to the Prin'pal.

Board and tuition for five months, including lights, washing, fuel and everything needed except books, from $55 to $75.

The next session opens on the first Monday in September.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

FOURTH SESSION opens September 1, 1878, and closes June 3, 1879.

Tuition as to other fees: Literary and Scientific Department, $65; Law, $100; Medicine, $65; Theology, $15.

Board and lodging per month, $16 to $20.

Cost of grounds, building and apparatus, $500,000. Permanent endowment, $500,000. Professors, 27. Assistant instructors, 8. Students last year, 445, representing nine Southern States.

SCIENTIFIC.

—The size which the Bengal tiger reaches is a matter of some discussion; but in Nature J. Fayrer mentions cases in which a tiger has reached the size of eleven feet nine inches, or even twelve feet measured from the nose to the tip of the tail, before skinning. Still a tiger is large that reaches ten feet.

—A very interesting contribution to American botany has been made, through the July number of the American Naturalist, by Mr. Edward Potts. It refers to the yellow dog-tooth violet (Erythronium Americanum). As it is generally known, many bulbs increase by offsets from the parent. Sometimes the bulb seems simply to divide; at other times as in some lilies, a short, thick rhizome is produced, the thickened point of which is the bulb for next year; and again there are some which, instead of a thickened rhizome, push the young bulb out from the parent by a horizontal slender thread. Mr. Potts finds in a locality in Fairmount Park, where he has had the Erythronium under his observation, that as soon as the leaves of this plant are formed several stolons are sent upward from the parent bulb, extending several inches above the ground, then curve over and penetrate the earth, the little bulb finally forming at the end. In this way little thready loops are seen on the ground where the plants grow. It was not known before that the plant had this singular habit.

THE TURKISH BATH.—Dr. Fleming, of Glasgow, has presented to the British Medical Association an account of some experiments made by the author upon himself, with a view to ascertain the effect of the Turkish bath, at the temperatures of from 100° to 170° Fahrenheit upon the weight, temperature, pulse, respiration and secretions. The results showed that the immersion of the body in hot, dry air produced loss of weight to an extent considerably greater than normal, amounting, on the average, to the rate of about forty ounces an hour. This was accompanied by an increase in the temperature of the body and a rise in the pulse rate, with at first a fall and then a rise in the rapidity of respiration. The amount of solids secreted by the kidneys was increased, and coincidently the amount of urea. The sweat contained a quantity of solid matter in solution, and, among other things, a considerable amount of urea. The most important effect of the bath, however, is the stimulation of the excretory action of the skin. By this means the tissues could, as it were, be washed by passing water through them from within out. The increased temperature and pulse rate pointed out the necessity of caution in the use of the bath when the circulatory system was diseased.—Scientific American.

MEDICAL.

ARE AT
No. 105 BOURBON St.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

All the medical preparations are put up from native growing herbs gathered fresh from the soil the year as they are wanted.
He treats all diseases and complaints, whether of the Afflicted of both males or females, and gives a youthful satisfaction, generally in two weeks' treatment.
Especial attention is called to

The Wonder Doctor's Indian Acclimating Bitters.

This Bitters is manufactured only from one of the herbs that grows plentifully in the material districts of the South. I have the two or three different kinds of herbs at one time. This Bitters will give a wonderful satisfaction to all humans suffering of general complaints, and it will be found to be the only safe remedy against YELLOW FEVER. Remember that the Indians never suffer of that dreadful disease. My Bitters will cure all such diseases as malarious complaints, such as Swamp Fever, Bone Fever, Chills and Fever, Typhoid, etc.
If nothing can be found in a drug store to give relief, or a cure in case of Dyspepsia, Yellow Jaundice, Liver complaints, Colic or Spleen, Heart and Kidney Complaints, Sick Headache, Enfeebled Nervous Debility, Loss of Appetite, Dizziness or Coldness in the Bowels, the use of my INDIAN ACCLIMATING BITTERS will give satisfaction. It is especially a wonderful satisfactory healing remedy for Female Complaints, such as Fluxing of the Womb, general weakness and periodical disorders.
This Bitters should be used in every family as a safe but prudent against complaints and diseases. It purifies the air before it penetrates the lungs, and gives refreshment.
If only one bottle of my INDIAN ACCLIMATING BITTERS, and I am will be satisfied to buy in a little supply for home use.

MILK OF MAGNESIA
IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pure white and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no per cent of carbonic acid to produce them. It effectively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part of a single drop magnified 22 diameters. The first one shows Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates in fact perfectly dissolved.
Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others get already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

On Preaching in a Vacuum.

Whatever space internal architectural rules may demand between the congregation and the chancel or "choir," the preacher when he preaches should stand close to his audience. The pulpit or preaching-stand should always be advanced as near as possible to the front seats. To compel the voice and the magnetic current to travel across a vacant area before they reach the first hearer is not only a waste of power, but it lowers the whole emotional tone and affatus of the discourse. In part it is so with the prayers and singing. Physical nearness is a means of sympathy and of success. Pack people together if you would have animated worship and a glow of feeling. Distance cools and hinders. Interposed space is a non-conductor of emotion. When Chrysostom preached in Constantinople, the Bema was so near the congregation that he could reach the first man with his hand. Probably the best effects of public speech are never attained when the speaker is far removed from those he addresses, whether he is before them or above them. The prevalent habit, where the seats are but partially occupied, of filling those farthest back near the door or on the sides first, leaving the minister to face a gaping vacuum, is injurious to religion. The regulation should be—and a resolute sexton should create the habit—for those arriving first suppose the occasion is one when the attendants can choose their seats, to go forward and begin to fill at the front, and so backward. No false modesty should be suffered to interfere with this wholesome arrangement. Those who have not tried the experiment have no idea of the difference to the service and to him who conducts it. Twenty persons close to him are, for the purpose of inspiration or encouraging suggestion, worth sixty by the door, or forty half way down the aisles.—Bishop Huntington.

Whoever thinks of life as something that could be without religion is yet in deadly ignorance of both. Life and religion are one, or neither is anything.—Macdonald.

Religious Notices.

THE camp meeting at George's Bethel will embrace the second Sabbath in October—beginning October 11. Preachers will be met at Chunchula on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, and conveyed to the camp ground. There will be arrangements made for the conveyance of other visitors from the railroad at moderate rates. The meeting will be conducted on the self-sustaining plan. All preachers are invited, and ample accommodations will be provided for them.

29 G. M. ROPER, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting at China Grove, Pike county, Miss., beginning on the third of October next, known as the China Grove and Pearl River camp meeting. We have plenty of good water and camping ground, which we offer to the public free of charge, and cordially invite everybody to come, and prepare for their own accommodation, as it will be strictly self-sustaining. There will be a lot for horses, and a boarding tent, for those who prefer paying the money on very reasonable terms. Ministers of the gospel are earnestly requested to attend—for whom, with their families, accommodations will be made.

P. HOWARD,
15 I. W. COOPER.

THE camp meeting for Spring Creek will commence on Friday, October 11, and continue until Thursday night following. The camp meeting is to be self-sustaining—by which we mean that all persons are expected to arrange for their own comfort. There will be a public tent on the ground, at which board and lodging may be had on reasonable terms. There will be a daily (except Sunday) market on the ground, at which corn, fodder, fresh beef, pork, mutton, etc., may be had on reasonable terms. Ministers are specially invited. Ample arrangements will be made for them and their families.

5 J. W. HEARN, P. C.

THE annual camp meeting at Asbury camp ground will embrace the fourth Sabbath in October, commencing on Thursday night before. The above-named camp ground is located in the bounds of the Sepulga circuit, Prattville district, Alabama Conference. The meeting will be conducted on the self-sustaining plan—that is, all are expected to provide their own lodging and lunch. Ministers and their families will be provided for. (15) ROBERT SMILIE, P. C.

WILLIAMS' CAMP GROUND is located on the Pensacola railroad—thirty-four miles from Pensacola. The time for holding the meeting will embrace the second Sunday in September, commencing on Thursday night. Ample arrangements are made for ministers. All are cordially invited. Arrangements are made for visitors. The meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan.

W. L. WILLIAMS, President.
W. W. RICHARDS, Secretary. 8

THE Marvin chapel camp meeting will embrace the fifth Sunday in September, commencing on Friday night before. The camp ground is located nine miles from Brewton, M. and M. railroad, where ministers of the gospel will be met with conveyance to the camp ground. The meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan.

22 JOS. C. JOHNSON, P. C.

THE Clanton camp meeting will commence on Thursday night before the fourth Sunday in September. The camp ground is situated one mile southwest of Clanton station, South and North Alabama railroad. Ministers are especially invited to attend.

22 JOHN D. SIMPSON, P. C.

THE camp meeting at the Holland camp ground, Jasper county, Miss., will commence on Friday before the first Sunday in October next. It is fifteen miles south of Hickory station, Vicksburg and Meridian railroad, and ten miles west of Enterprise, Mobile and Ohio railroad. We invite all the preachers who can come to do so. We will take care of you.

15 D. P. BRADFORD, Pastor.

THE annual camp meeting at Mount Zion, Haynesville circuit, Homer district, Louisiana Conference, will commence on the nineteenth of September, 1878, embracing the fourth Sabbath, and will close on the following Wednesday morning. Ministerial brethren are invited to come and help us.

15 JOHN A. MILLER, Pastor.

THE camp meeting at Siloam camp ground, Rochester circuit, Louisiana Conference, will begin on the evening of Wednesday, October 9, 1878, and conclude with the services of the following Sunday night. All are invited to attend, preachers especially. (15) F. T. RAWSON.

THE camp meeting at the Nelson camp ground, on Cypress Bayou, Caddo circuit, Louisiana Conference, will commence on Friday before the fifth Sabbath in September, 1878. Ministers are cordially invited.

15 J. M. JOHNSTON, P. C.

THE REST IN STORE.

BY ANNIE PROCTOR.

Thanks be to God, that thou hast kept
The best in store,
We have enough, yet not too much
To long for more;
A yearning for a deeper peace
Not known before.

Thanks be to God, that here our souls,
Though amply blest,
Can testify, although they seek,
A perfect rest;
Nor find it fully
Till they leap
On Jesus' breast.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 30.—The wet, cool weather has doubtless created many new cases, but how many it is impossible to say, as only two physicians have reported. The death-rate, however, will equal if not exceed that of yesterday, when 78 interments were reported. Up to noon to-day the undertakers reported 46 yellow fever interments. Fathers Quinn and Meagher are dead. Two brothers and two brothers at the Franciscan Monastery are down; also Rev. Dr. Thomas, pastor of the Free German Protestant Church. The fever is prevailing to an alarming extent among the negroes, many of whom have had no medical attendance for days.

VICKSBURG, Aug. 30.—One hundred and sixty new cases in the past twenty-four hours. Thirteen deaths from yellow fever, and four from other diseases.

Additional generous contributions have been received from Philadelphia, New York, Boston and other cities. Liverpool also sends $1,000.

JACKSON, Aug. 31.—The board of supervisors of Hinds county met at Raymond this morning to consider the suggestions which had been made to that body to so quarantine the county as to effectually stop all persons passing through it. Earnest protests and influential delegations from Jackson, Byram, Terry, Bolton, Clinton and Raymond remonstrated against such action, when the board unanimously resolved that it was not the wish of the people of the county that there should be any further interference with the railroads than exists under the present efficient quarantine regulations in the several towns.

The board further assured the people of New Orleans, Port Gibson, Vicksburg, Canton, Grenada and Memphis that no action shall be taken by it that will interfere with the rapid transit of relief to those afflicted communities. The proposition to stop trains aroused the deepest indignation in Jackson, and the governor and other influential citizens proceeded to Raymond this morning, with the result as stated. Since the action of the county authorities there has been one death from yellow fever in Jackson county, and a new exodus of its inhabitants.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 1.—The new cases reported to-day are 101, and deaths from yellow fever 76. Undertakers are pressed to bury the dead, and at last accounts good to-day dozens of coffined bodies were lying on top of ground awaiting for interment, it being a difficult matter to procure even colored gravediggers.

Information from Camp Joe. Wheeler is to the effect that six deaths have occurred there of persons recently removed into camp. The hospital contains about fifteen sick.

Reports from along the line of the Memphis and Louisville railroad state that there have been three deaths at Brownsville, and there are 17 cases there. At Millan 20 cases and four deaths; at Withe one case, at Mason one death.

VICKSBURG, Sept. 1.—Eight physicians report 98 new cases and 25 interments to-day.

Among new cases are Drs. Whitehead and Birchett, George Buena, Southern Express agent, and W. L. Lambridge, acting mayor.

Further telegrams confirm reports about yellow fever at Greenville, Miss. Twenty cases are reported.

GRENADA, Miss., Sept. 2.—There are eight new cases to-day and six deaths—three whites and three colored. The whites were Col. Butler Anderson, of the Memphis Howard, Postmaster Cole, and a young man name unknown. Anderson's arrived here at midnight on a special train for Memphis. Like nearly all the other cases, he appeared to be getting along nicely until very short time before his death.

BATON ROUGE, LA., Sept. 2.—To the Agent of the Associated Press: Seven deaths from yellow fever have occurred here; four in the last twenty-four hours. Many are down sick, and all business is stopped. Our financial resources are insufficient to relieve the distress, and we are compelled to ask the country to aid us. Our people are meeting the situation with great firmness.

LEON JASTREMSKI, Mayor.

PORT GIBSON, Miss., Sept. 2.—Four hundred cases, and 55 deaths out of 550 persons remaining in town. About 1,200 have fled. The distress very great—many dying with no one to give them a drink of water. Three nurses are on the way from New Orleans and Chicago. Help and funds needed.

JAS. A. GAGE,
President Howard Association.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3.—The Secretary of War to-day responded to the call for relief from Federal citizens in New Orleans by ordering rations for twenty days, to be issued to one thousand of the suffering poor of that city. If there is not sufficient rations there for that purpose, a special train with such supplies will be sent from Chicago.

While the secretary, in responding to the appeal, acts under the law of charity alone, he has no doubt that the act will meet the full approval of Congress. This relief to New Orleans, and that heretofore to Memphis, are, as he said this morning, exceptional cases, justified, it seemed, by the strongest appeals of humanity for all possible relief in that plague-stricken locality; and as the government cannot be depended on for continued supplies, he expressed the hope that private charity would continue to be exerted in that direction.

CHICAGO, Sept. 3.—Everything was favorable for the reception of the President and the firemen's parade this morning. At an early hour the principal streets were thronged. Toward noon the crush along the line of the procession became almost painful. The train in which the presidential party arrived was met at Kingston by a delegation of eminent business men, and reached here at eight o'clock.

The reception was brilliant. A salute from the battery at the Exposition greeted the arrival of the train, and an immense concourse of enthusiastic citizens greeted the President. The presidential party proper was composed of the President and Mrs. Hayes, Attorney General Devens, and Birchard, Webb C. and Reed Hayes.

VICKSBURG, Sept. 3.—Weather clear and warm. Thermometer, 93°. The city sexton reports 36 deaths in the past twenty-four hours. One physician reports 50 new cases. It is thought the number of new cases will go far ahead of any other day since the fever appeared.

Among the deaths to-day is John D. Roach, paying teller of the Vicksburg Bank. The Rev. Mr. Galloway, of the Methodist Church, is sinking rapidly, and no hopes are entertained of his recovery. Dr. Whitehead is also in a dying condition, all hope given up.

The fever at Greenville continues to increase rapidly. Seventy-five cases are reported there, and 11 deaths.

Twenty-six cases and six deaths are reported at Delhi. They call for medicines and medical aid.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—The House of Bishops adjourned sine die this evening. They unanimously resolved to depose Bishop McCoskery, of Michigan, from the ministry. No action has been taken, toward appointing a successor to the deposed bishop.

No action was taken in regard to the vacancy in New Mexico.

A special prayer was prepared by the assembled bishops regarding yellow fever, and was ordered to be read in all churches.

CAIRO, Sept. 3.—A telegram from Hickman, Ky., forty miles below here, reports forty odd persons sick and ten or twelve deaths from what is supposed to be yellow fever. None here yet.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 3.—Only two physicians had made reports of new cases up to noon to-day. They report 18 cases. Undertakers report 31 yellow fever interments up to noon.

A special dispatch to the Appeal from Brownsville, Tenn., says: Three physicians report thirteen new cases and four deaths.

DELHI, LA., Sept. 4.—To the Associated Press, Vicksburg: Our little town has been stricken with yellow fever. Almost every one is down with it—one out of two doctors. It is a terrible blight. Let the fact be known through the press that we are badly in need of assistance. Those who are up yet are nearly on the point of starvation. If any funds can be raised, let them be sent to Lewis D. Allen, Jr., Monroe, La., subject to the order of the relief committee.

J. M. BERRY.

MOBILE, Sept. 4.—Notwithstanding the case of yellow fever reported by Dr. Gaines last Saturday, there has been no spread of the disease. The city is enjoying excellent health.

GREENVILLE, Miss., Sept. 4.—Yellow fever cases to date, 901; deaths, 19. Many of the poor are in a destitute condition. Nurses and physicians are needed.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 5.—Only 39 new cases were reported to the Board of Health to day. Very few physicians making reports. There were 42 interments—whites, 61; colored, 41. Yellow fever deaths, 89.

Information from Hickman, Ky., reports 60 cases of yellow fever and 20 deaths to date.

CANTON, Miss., Sept. 5.—Total number of cases of yellow fever to date, 151.

Total number of deaths, 1. Sixteen new cases and six deaths have occurred in the last twenty-four hours. Weather cloudy, with some rain. ROBT. POWELL, Mayor.

BATON ROUGE, Sept. 5.—The official statement of the cases of yellow fever reported in Baton Rouge are as follows:

Number of cases to date, 503; number of deaths, 15; number convalescent and under treatment, 118; number taken sick during the last twelve hours, 10.

Many cases are so mild in character that physicians have declined to report them as yellow fever.

J. W. DUPREE, M. D.,
Health Officer.

GRENADA, Sept. 5.—Six deaths to-day and five new cases. The fever is extremely malignant. The greater proportion of deaths occurs from suppression of urine. Will. Ayres, a heroic citizen, died to-day. Dr. Woolfolk, of Paducah, is sick.

VICKSBURG, September 6.—Thirty-seven deaths—25 white and 12 colored. Among the deaths are George Burns, agent of the Southern Express Company; James C. Fitzpatrick, of Fitzpatrick Bros.; Sister Mary Regis Grant, of the Convent of Mercy; J. R. Levy, merchant. Estimated, 136 new cases during the past twenty-four hours. Rev. Mr. Galloway's condition is more favorable.

A telegram to-day from Greenville, Miss., reports 127 cases and 36 deaths to date. Fifteen or twenty new cases and ten deaths in the last twenty-four hours. Nurses and doctors are wanted badly. A suspicious fever has broken out at Lake, Miss., on the Vicksburg, Ohio and Mobile railroad, east of Jackson, Miss.

MEMPHIS, Sept. 6, noon.—Fifty-three deaths have been reported from six P. M. yesterday to noon to-day, making 105 for the last twenty-four hours.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 20.—The reports of revolutions in Mexico, published in Texas papers, are untrue. The country never was freer from anarchy than now, and no President has been so universally popular or so strong as Porfirio Diaz.

The reported rising at Jalapa was the work of a band of robbers under a pretext of restoring ex-President Lerdo. They took the garrison by surprise, robbed the town and fled to the mountains. They were subsequently pursued and the booty was recovered.

The government has sent a considerable number of troops to the Rio Grande frontier. The troops will first see that all revolutionary bands are broken up, and then proceed to the Rio Grande to suppress Indian raiding, and, if possible, capture the leaders.

President Diaz has issued two decrees for the suppression of smuggling on the Rio Grande. One decree authorizes any citizen to arrest smugglers, and seize the smuggled goods; the other closes the frontier ports of Mier and Camargo.

The yellow fever is very fatal in Vera Cruz.

VIENNA, Sept. 1.—Later accounts from Miskalcz, Hungary, show that the disaster by storm exceeds the worst that was feared. Over 400 corpses are already recovered, and 200 persons are still missing. At Erlau, the capital of the county of Heves, Hungary, situated on the River Eger, and about 67 miles from Pesth, the river rose during the storm and broke through the walls of the town. Whole rows of houses were demolished by the flood, and many persons drowned.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—The excursion steamer Princess Alice, returning from Gravesend to London this evening, with about 800 passengers on board, was run down off Barking, about eight o'clock, by a screw steamer. It is reported that between 400 and 500 were drowned.

HAVANA, Sept. 4.—The Board of Health of this city has been transferred from the control of the municipal corporation to the civil government. This is expected to result in great benefit to the health of Havana, as the Governor will personally supervise the acts of the board. Means of reducing the causes of yellow fever are being investigated.

About Methodism—Its Work and Its Aspersers

NUMBER V.

His next objection is that "the Methodists lay very little stress upon practical righteousness. They do not say to their people: Do not be deceitful; do not lie idle; get rid of your bad passions; or at least, if they do say these things, they say them very seldom." It is very unlikely that Sydney Smith ever listened to a sermon that was preached by a Methodist, or read half a dozen printed Methodist sermons, yet he condemns them before they are arraigned at the bar. Had he attended the preaching of a Methodist his own church would have shown its displeasure. But it is useless to dwell on his fourth objection, as given above, since he himself has refuted it by his fifth objection, which is that "the Methodists are always desirous of making men more religious than it is possible, from the constitution of human nature, to make them." This is a most frightful accusation. It is likely this "desire of the Methodists "to make men more religious" was precisely the thing that aroused the wrath of Sydney Smith. If those around him became "more religious," he himself would be forced by shame to lop off the pleasant vices which rendered his society so highly prized by fashionable circles—a self-denial he had no relish for. It is seldom a sect is accused of setting up too broad and conspicuous a landmark between itself and the world, and of raising the religious standard so high as to put it above the constitution of human nature. This is a tribute to the Methodist sect that ought to counterbalance a thousand envenomed aspersions.

Another accusation is that "there is not a mad-house in England where a considerable part of the patients have not been driven to insanity by the extravagance of these people." Of course the Rev. Sydney Smith, before launching this charge, had personally visited the mad-houses and satisfied himself that the patients had been crazed "by the extravagance of these people," and were free from all taint and tinge of hereditary insanity, or that mental weakness that on any great excitement is apt to run into insanity. No Christian should present an indictment against a large body of men without having the most indubitable proofs to sustain it. "Thou shalt not bear false witness" is not restricted to false swearing, but comprehends loose accusations, scandalous reports, disparaging and depreciatory statements, unjust railing and undeserved imputations. We might with equal fairness assert that the Church of England led men to commit forgery, because Dr. Dodd, one of its clergymen, was tried and hung for forgery; that it made men disingenuous and untruthful, because Bishop Atterbury acted disingenuously and untruthfully as to his connection with the Pretender; that it made men dissolute, because Lawrence Sterne and Charles Churchill were a disgrace to their cloth; that it led to insanity, because Dean Swift, as well as many of its clergy and laity, had gone crazy; that it promoted drunkenness, because many of its clergy and laity have been addicted to this vice.

But preachers are not to "declare the whole counsel of God," lest, peradventure, some person of ill-balanced minds in the audience may have their brains turned—that is the conclusion from Sydney Smith's premises. The fire-bell must not ring out an alarm in the night for fear it might throw persons of weak nerves into spasms; you must not proclaim that a disease is endemic, lest it frighten the weak-minded to death; you must not preach to men "temperance, righteousness and the judgment to come," lest the already tottering senses of men predisposed to monomania should lose their balance and perpendicular. But it is the "extravagance of these people" that is censured. They are too fervid and earnest—they appear to be terribly in earnest, and "are always desirous of making men more religious than it is possible, from the constitution of human nature, to make them." Extravagance is a relative term, about the definition of which no dozen men would agree. No doubt the scribes and Pharisees regarded the apostolic manner and style of preaching as detestable "extravagance," and cited the sermon on the day of Pentecost as proof of it. No doubt Luther and the early reformers were charged with "extravagance" by the vendors of indulgences to commit theft, rape and murder. At the outset all reform is dubbed "extravagance." The dominant sect is sure to claim a monopoly of orthodoxy, and to brand any divergence from it as "extravagance," as with lazy and weak minds this charge answers all the purposes of the best argument. The Methodists preached with warmth of language and earnestness of manner; they showed deep concern for the conversion of sinners; they used a style the people could comprehend, and this was termed "extravagance" by the Church of England men, who read their sermons, and are studious of dignity, as well as of fine writing. Intemperance of language is not the worst thing in this ruling. Its falsehood is plain. In no country has Methodism sowed, nourished and cultivated so baleful a crop as "meanness, prevarication and fraud;" nor have its doctrines, its institutions or its machinery of government the least tendency to promote the decay of "boldness and a rough honesty," and to stimulate the growth of "meanness, prevarication and fraud."

This specimen of the kind of attacks formerly made on Methodism will set in a more conspicuous light the great work which it has wrought in the face of the most envenomed hostility and the most elaborate misrepresentation. Well might John Wesley cry out, when he came to the front as a religious reformer: "Oh, what a work has God begun! Such a one as shall never come to an end till heaven and earth pass away."

The activity, zeal and earnestness of Wesley, Whitefield and their brethren gave an impulse to the human mind, and aroused all other religious sects from the state of torpor into which they had fallen. Earnestness is contagious—there is a charm in enthusiasm—zeal possesses a strange power. "I could scarce reconcile myself at first to this strange way (field-preaching,) having been all my life, till very lately, so timorous of every point relating to decency and order that I should have thought the saving of souls almost a sin if it had not been done in a church," was the feeling expressed by Wesley upon throwing off the conventional shackles and putting his hand to the work set apart to him by Providence.

The feeling that it was indecent and undignified—almost a sin—to save souls anywhere but in a church, was the sentiment of the Anglican Church. Thousands of poor and ignorant people never had heard the gospel—never had been inside of a church; indeed scarcely a parish church in England was capable of holding the adult population of the parish, had it been near enough for attendance. Few clergymen did more than to perform their parochial duties by proxy, or in a perfunctory manner, and in their occasional intercourse with the middling and poor classes repelled them—unintentionally, no doubt—by an air of dignity and patronage. Wesley was a missionary to these benighted people. His preaching stirred the public mind of England in a way that it had not been stirred since the days of Henry the Eighth. We see signs of this intellectual and moral upheaval in the occasional allusions in plays, poems, novels, and letters to the Wesleyans. Smollett pays them a compliment by representing Humphrey Clinker as a Wesleyan.

But to the American Union Methodism has been a blessing. It entered the wilderness along with the settlers, and stood in the place of law among wild scenes of lawlessness. It entered California with the hordes of gold-seekers, not to delve for "filthy lucre," but to toil for the salvation of souls. The itinerant and local Methodist preachers were in every settlement on the frontiers. They were often ill-educated, hard-visted men; but personal piety and zeal made them effective preachers to the rude frontiersmen by whom they were surrounded, and enabled them to act as moderators of the passions of the settlers at a time when no courts were in operation among them. The influence thus happily exerted was most beneficial on the first settlers and their children, as it kept them from plunging into barbarism. The present generation hardly realizes the great work wrought by the Methodists as pioneers of the gospel in all the new States. Many of the seed sown by them have been reaped by other sects, that came in at the "eleventh hour." The Methodists have never burnt incense on the altar of fashion; hence many have strayed off in quest of a more fashionable church and a higher round in the social ladder. Methodism has labored more for converts than for proselytes, and has converted many members for other churches at her derided camp meetings and revivals. Her ministers are integral parts of the population, mingling with them freely and sympathizing with them. The system of itineracy is not only a kind of missionary system, but it serves to smooth the angles of ministers and to relieve them of parsonical stiffness of manners. Thrown continually with strangers, constantly traveling over the country on horseback as circuit-riders, Methodist ministers have necessarily acquired no small knowledge of human nature, along with easy and affable manners. They are pilgrims and sojourners. This year they ride a circuit in the mountains far away from railroads and telegraphs, and preach to ill-educated and laboring people, who, but for them would be shut out from religion. The next year finds them stationed a hundred miles away in some flourishing town. Poorly paid and hard worked, often pressed by want, they seem never to be disheartened, never to slacken in their zeal, but push on their work till disease disables or death cuts them off in the midst of the harvest. This system prevents their contracting the prevailing love of money, and preaching as "hirelings" for large salaries. Education is a necessity in this age, yet no collegiate or theological curriculum can impart common, every-day sense and knowledge of human nature, without which no minister can be a good pastor. These qualities are picked up by Methodist ministers in their intercourse with the world. A minister may be too highly educated for his audience, and so may dress up his thoughts as to render them unintelligible to illiterate men. This is a fact which is often ignored. A razor is not so good as an ax for felling a tree.

Itineracy is the great leverage of Methodism, and its bond of union with the people.

A Doctor's Views.

Dr. W. C. Austin, of New Orleans is known to many of our readers as one of our most skillful and successful physicians. If not unprofessional, we should be glad if the doctor would furnish us with a synopsis of his treatment. In such times as these many, especially in the country, cannot obtain safe medical attendance. Dr. Austin's views were recently given to a reporter of the New Orleans Picayune, as follows:

A reporter of the Picayune yesterday met Dr. Austin, the veteran yellow fever physician, and obtained an expression of his views on the prevailing topic, which are presented below:

In reply to a question by the reporter the doctor said:

Dr. A.—It is the same identical yellow fever that we have had in every epidemic that has prevailed in New Orleans for the last thirty-five years. Yellow fever is a poison of the blood—a hemorrhagic disease. It is a disease sempor idem and sui generis, always the same poison and peculiar to itself. No other fever is like it, and no other fever will acclimate you to it. There may be a different type, but the poison is the same in every case of yellow fever. In the treatment there can be but one object, and that is to eliminate the poison as soon as possible, and with as little prostration to the patient. Now there are many ways to do this; every physician has his own way of doing it, and many of our best yellow fever physicians are equally successful.

Reporter—Then, doctor, you believe that it can be easily cured if taken in time?

Dr. A.—Most assuredly I do. Where there is no organic disease, I would rather treat yellow fever than any other class of fevers, and my experience is that there should not be as many deaths as there are from congestive, bilious, remittent, typhoid or scarlet fevers.

The reporter asked Dr. Austin's opinion as to the origin of yellow fever. He answered at length, ascribing the disease to a germ which is indigenous to the tropics. He believes that the germ may be brought here as early as May, and lie dormant until the conditions favorable for its development arise.

Reporter—Do you think that physicians who have had long experience with the yellow fever know as much about it as they do of other fevers?

Dr. A.—Certainly I do. I would rather treat it, so far as success is concerned, than any other fever. The percentage of deaths is much less if the patients are well cared for and nursed properly than in other fevers.

Reporter—Then the remarks made at the Board of Health last Thursday should not give the impression that the doctors do not understand the disease?

Dr. A.—By no means. They were talking about the germ that none of us knows anything about. Neither do we know what malaria is; but one thing we do know, and that is how to cure fevers. As to the origin of yellow fever, it does not originate here. It remains for the micro-scope to tell what it is—whether it is an animal or vegetable germ. Why trouble ourselves as to what it is? We have it among us. Let us fight it manfully, and cure all that can be cured. Use good common sense. Buckle on our armor and fight the dreaded monster in a brave, calm and devoted manner, doing our duty and leaving the results with God. I have fought this same terrible scourge for thirty five years, and I feel that I am fighting my last battle, for it cannot be expected that I should go through many more struggles such as I have been called upon to pass through this year. The people should follow your advice given in Monday morning's paper: "Be calm and resolute; there is no longer any fear of a panic." Let there be action everywhere—"determination which confronts the inevitable, and quails not." There are, as Dr. Choppin said, too many deaths. This death-rate has been increased by the large number of cases. If all the cases had been reported the death-rate would be found to be less than ten per cent., and that even is too large for this fever. It is, without a single exception, the easiest fever managed that I have ever seen in any of our former epidemics. Many die for the want of proper care and treatment. Some are walking cases, afraid to go to bed, fearing they will die. When one feels a little unwell, how easy it is to go quietly home, and remain there until we are satisfied of our actual condition. If one is sick send for a physician, and all will end well. I am satisfied that fear has had a great deal to do with killing our people off, and necessarily increased the death-rate.

Reporter—Speaking of your affliction in the loss of your son, Maj. Austin—did he have any symptoms of yellow fever?

Dr. A.—None whatever. He had the yellow fever in 1867. He had been sick with intermittent fever a week before. He was perfectly well two hours before he died. This was the third attack of congestion of the brain which he had had. I am glad you asked the question, as I wished to correct the impression which prevailed that he died of yellow fever.

The critic praises from the eye; the mother praises from the heart. With one it is a tribute to the judgment; with the other it is a gift from the soul.—Thomas Moore.

LOST AND FOUND.

I lost the brook as it wound its way
Like a thread of silver hue
Through greenwood and valley, through meadows gay,
'Twas hidden away from view.
But I found it again a noble river,
Sparkling and broad and free,
Wider and fairer, growing ever,
Till it reached the boundless sea.

I lost the tiny seed that I sowed
With many a sigh and fear,
And vainly waited through sunshine and cold
For the young green to appear.
But surely, after many long days
The blossom and fruit will come,
And the reapers on high the sheaves will rise
For a joyful harvest home.

I lost the life that grew by my own
For one short summer day,
And then it left me to wander alone,
And silently passed away.
But I know I shall find it further on,
Though not as I left it here,
For the shadows and mists will have passed and gone,
I see it fair and clear.

I lost the notes of the heavenly chime
That once came floating by
I have listened and waited many a time
For the echo, though distantly.
But I know in the hall of glory it thrills,
Ever by day and night,
I shall hear it complete when its harmony fills
My soul with great delight.

I lost the love that made my life
A love that was all for me
Oh! vainly I sought it amid the strife
Of the stormy, raging sea.
But deeper and purer I know it waits
Beyond my wistful eyes,
I shall find it again within the gates
Of the garden of paradise.

I shall lose this life! It will disappear,
With its wonderful mystery
Some day it will move no longer here,
But will vanish silently.
But I know I shall find it again once more,
In a beauty no song hath told,
It will meet with me at the golden door,
And round me forever fold.

Go to the Prayer Meeting.

If your faith is weak, go. If your love is chilled, go. If hope be clouded, go. If joy and peace fail to rise in your soul, go. Every professed Christian, be sure, if possible, to go, that the activities of the soul may be stirred up and drawn out in the service of Christ. If you have for a long time stayed away, and the Christian armor has got rusty, go. "Prayer makes it bright," burnishes the shield, the sword, the helmet and the breastplate of righteousness. Go, if only a few are expected to be there, for if you stay away the number will be less. Go, as did the good brother to a certain place, year after year, and often alone; and, like him, you may by and by find the place filled with anxious worshipers, and see souls converted. Go, expecting the presence and refreshing of the Holy Spirit, and expecting to meet Christ there, agreeably to his promise that where two or three are gathered in his name he will be in the midst of them. Be sure to go—always to go—to the prayer meeting, when possible, even at the sacrifice of ease and profit in worldly things, and you will find a rich reward in it to your own soul, and see blessings descend upon the church of Christ. Go—all go—and carry out these suggestions, and God's blessing will be to you, like his promises, sure. How sadly prayer meetings are neglected! Here is the reason why there are so many cold, formal Christians in the world: because they do not pray as they ought. A man who loves God will pray and attend prayer meetings; for when we preach we speak of God, when we sing we praise God in song, but when we pray we talk with God. Therefore we plead with all to go to the prayer meeting.

We organized a prayer meeting once under much opposition. We could get but one Methodist and one Baptist brother to help us pray in public; and the result was that in less than three months we had eleven young men on our roll who would pray in public, anywhere and under any circumstances. We need young, praying men in the church, and the prayer meeting is the place to train them up. It is painful to know that there are so many churches with not a man who will pray in public.

Men of God, go to the prayer meeting. Professed Christians, go. Sinners, go. May God help us all to go to the prayer meeting!

FOR THE GIRLS.

First, we will take the "girl of the period." It is she who would die rather than be out of fashion. She carefully avoids doing anything which is not laid down in books on etiquette as the proper thing to do. She has some eight or ten French words, and a few Spanish, as well as Italian, which she drags in and mispronounces, without regard for anything but what she looks upon as an urgent necessity for saying them; and they more than once have condemned her as being "horrid silly."

She is often the reflector of opinions she hears, without much regard or reference to their soundness. She wishes to be bright and vivacious, and echoes whatshe thinks "smart," without thought or even care for its correctness. Her nights are spent in heated rooms; her mornings in bed, and her afternoons on the street, parading the last cut of polonaise or the latest freak of fashion. She looks with a shrug and a curl of the lip at the hair and style of dress of the beauties of an age past; but are these more absurd than the "pin-backs," "tilting hoops," "frizzes" and "bangs" of the present age, all of which she eagerly adopts and wears? Now, girls, we'll look at

ANOTHER PICTURE.

Ah! how different is that pure and noble minded girl, who is ever gentle-mannered and helpful! She exerts an influence over the family like that of an early, beautiful morning—sweetening, refreshing, soothing, yet strengthening. Her presence, her attentions, the charm of her youth and the promise of her future womanhood comfort and console her mother and father for what they have lost in hope and gained in care, as nothing else ever could. She revives in her mother something of the old grace and attractiveness, and wins her father to gallantry and lover-like devotion.

She helps her younger brothers and sisters over their rough places, and is the "good angel" of the guests of the house, who find their wants anticipated by her ministering hands; and fills, in fine, a most useful and ornamental, as well as beneficient, position in social and domestic life.

Now, girls, I want you to study each of my pen pictures well, and decide wisely which you will take as a model through life. LEON.

Prattville District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Prattville District Conference convened at Autaugaville, Ala., August 8, 1878, Rev. T. F. Mangum presiding. J. S. Hansberger was elected secretary, and Rev. J. B. Anderson assistant.

Reports from the various charges on the spiritual condition of the church, when considered as a whole, indicate improvement.

The educational interest of the church was ably and earnestly represented.

A Sunday school meeting of great interest was held on Sunday afternoon, the religious training of children being the prominent topic of the hour. Much prominence was given to religious exercises. The word was preached with great power and effect, to large and attentive congregations, many penitents presenting themselves at the altar, asking the prayers of God's people.

On Sunday the house was filled with attentive hearers, and at the close of the morning service the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to ninety-eight communicants, eighteen of whom were preachers.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted, and by vote of the Conference the secretary was instructed to forward the same to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE for publication:

Resolved, That our sense of duty to the church, as well as our love of country and State, unite to commend to our attention and efforts our Conference colleges, and that this District Conference will strive to maintain and intensify a confidence in their ability to furnish all the advantages of education that are afforded by other institutions of learning in the South.

C. M. HOWARD.
J. B. ANDERSON.

Resolved, That we commend the institutions of the church in the bounds of the Alabama Conference to the patronage of the public.

W. A. MCCARTY.
NEIL GILLIS.

J. S. Hansberger, Moses Padget, C. M. Howard and H. F. DeBardeleben were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. R. W. Russell and W. H. Lloyd, alternates. Clanton was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

J. S. HANSBERGER, Sec.

In view of the fact that special favors have been shown to the members of this body by both railroads and steamboats in the way of reduced fare; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this District Conference tender to them our hearty thanks for the same.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to the people of Autaugaville and vicinity for the kind and hospitable manner in which they have entertained us while we were with them during the sittings of this Conference.

W. H. LLOYD,
R. W. RUSSELL,
A. C. HUNDLEY.

Things are saturated with the moral law. There is no escape from it. Violets and grass preach it; rain and snow, wind and tides, every change, every course in nature, is nothing but a disguised missionary. Emerson.

From the Work.

PLEASANT HILL CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: After some observation we have come to the conclusion that religion is on the increase throughout this work. The Quarterly Conference at Prospect resulted in a good meeting and twelve accessions to the church. On our way to this Conference we were struck with the awfulness of the mighty pines. We have never been filled with such feelings of awe as these mighty, mighty pines produced as we rode through them, while the winds sadly sighed through their majestic crowns. Here in the midst of these Sabine pines we turned aside to see in a deep defile a natural falling spring. The huge projecting rocks had caves beneath, the home of wolves. The gospel is now proclaimed almost within hearing of these dismal dens. A hickory log was pointed out to us, said to be petrified, but split and broken.

This circuit had the largest representation at the District Conference held at Keachie. There were more communicants on Sunday than we ever saw at any one time. May God bless the kind and hospitable people of Keachie and vicinity.

Bro. J. B. Cassity's four days' services at New Hope resulted in the unconditional surrender of ten. His first circuit Sunday school convention was held at New Hope. A flourishing Sabbath school was the result. We are rejoiced to see Bro. Cassity manifesting so much interest in the children of the church. His next meeting will be at Rocky Mount, and so on through his eight appointments. September 27 will be the grand religious rally at Beulah camp ground.

It was only a few years back since the forest was felled to make room for this village. Undoubtedly this forest grew over the graves of a departed people. On the hillsides the washing rains have exposed human bones regularly laid out. They crumble when touched. Numerous beads are gathered by the little negroes from the gullies after rains.

As we write, our seat is in the cool shade of sweet gum and pecan trees. A spring of cool, sparkling water gurgles up at our feet. Here the red man in days of yore, on his return from the chase, threw down his game and slaked his thirst. Here he excitedly related to his children the adventures of the hunt, and here on the hill above crumble their bones.

LAYMAN.

ATHENS, ALA., Aug. 26, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: Notwithstanding panics and stampedes on account of yellow fever in several cities, and dread and consternation in parts of the country from the same cause, the people in many places are seeking the Lord, and many are being added to the church, such as we hope will be saved. All around this district protracted or basket meetings are being held with more or less of success, and almost every church has received some accessions. Sickness has been quite common, but not generally fatal. Where meetings are discontinued at one place on account of sickness, they are at once resumed in an adjoining neighborhood, the forces, ministerial and lay, adjourning thither; and so the work goes hopefully on. Fifteen applied for membership here at Wesley chapel yesterday. We expect more to-day. All our preachers are at their posts. Fraternally,

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

PRENTISS, VAZOO CO., MISS., Aug. 20, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: I closed at Soule's chapel, Gainesville circuit, Alabama Conference, on the twenty-first of this month, a most interesting meeting of thirteen days' length. The Spirit was present in convicting and converting power through the whole meeting. The membership of the church was greatly blessed and refreshed. Twenty-two were "born of the Spirit;" thirty-two united with the Methodist Church. Rejoice with us and pray for us.

C. B. DE BOSE.

GAINESVILLE, ALA., Aug. 26, 1878.

There is a test-point about you somewhere. Perhaps it is pride; you cannot bear an affront; you will not confess a fault. Perhaps it is personal vanity, ready to sacrifice everything to display. Perhaps it is a sharp tongue. Perhaps it is some sensual appetite, bent on its unclean gratification. Then you are to gather up your moral forces just here, and, till that darling sin is brought under the practical law of Christ, you are shut out from Christ's kingdom.—Bishop Huntington.

An old man was on his knees at the roadside breaking stones. The minister, who was considered not over-devout, addressed him: "Ah, John, I wish I could break the stony hearts of my hearers as easily as you break those stones." "Ye should try the plan, sir," said John—"gang to your knees."

The brave man is not he who feels no fear, for that were stupid and irrational, but he whose noble soul its fear subdues, and bravely dares the danger which it shrinks from.—Joanna Baillie.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

JESSE M. WARREN was born in Baldwin county, Ga., April 27, 1811, and died at his residence in Coffee county, Ala., June 10, 1878.

Bro. Warren was converted at the Flat Woods camp ground, in Greene county, Ala., and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in the year 1837. Naturally diffident, he never was known, but in a few instances, to lead in public or social prayer until near the close of his life. As he ripened in Christian experience and under the influence of the baptism of the Holy Spirit, he was enabled to overcome his timidity, and pray and exhort with wondrous effect upon the church and people. He was an ardent lover of the church of his choice. He loved and read her book and periodical literature. Her ministers found their way to his warm and generous heart on sight. At his home the weary itinerant met with a hearty welcome. Bishop Marvin was his ideal of a minister, and he loved to read his book of sermons and travel. For many years he served the church as a steward, and only stepped aside as age and disease disqualified him to serve the cause he loved so well. He gave proof of his faith by his works, responding with liberality to the demands made upon him by the church and the poor. He enjoyed the confidence of the church and the world. Just and upright as a citizen, faithful and ardent as a Christian, and affectionate and tender as a husband and father, his loss is widely and keenly felt. His impress is felt deeply upon the family; and, though dead, he yet speaks. He was permitted to live to see them all in the church, honored with official recognition, and giving promise of faithful, efficient service. Oh, that the faithfulness of our ascended father may prove such an inspiration to them as that they may do valiant service in the cause of the Master.

His last illness was long and painful. In the early part of the past winter he found himself suffering with heart disease, and at times his sufferings were intense. The writer visited him frequently during his illness, and always found him trusting in Jesus, and desiring perfect resignation to his will, whether it were for life or death. On one occasion we asked him what were his prospects for heaven, and he replied: "I think I am ready for my change. If I can't in some degree recover my health, if it is God's will I prefer to die." When last we saw him he had somewhat rallied, and we all hoped that he would be spared to us for a little longer space; but, alas! the next intelligence we had from him was a summons to attend his funeral. On the twelfth of June, with Masonic ceremonies of which order he was an honored member, often bodily a large concourse of weeping friends, we laid him away in the church cemetery to await the resurrection of the just. We mourn not as those who have no hope. We expect to greet him in the home of the blessed. He leaves a widow and five children to mourn their loss. We tender the afflicted widow and children our sincere sympathy, and pray that God may so bind them by his Spirit and grace that they may meet together in the world above, where disease and death never come.

MRS. MATILDA S. PAGE, the subject of this notice, was a native of the State of Pennsylvania—Pittsburg, we think. We do not know her age—sixty-five, we suppose. She had been a resident of this city since 1818. In December of that year she was called to experience the appalling loss, in a single hour, of her husband and two children. The Rev. Henry Page, her husband, was a member of the Louisiana Conference, a man of singular goodness and consecration. She bore this appalling, threefold bereavement with wonderful resignation and unmurmuring patience. For many years she filled with signal ability and success important positions in the public schools of our city. She was intellectual, cultivated and read far above the average. It was, however, the spirituality and saintliness of Sister Page's character that made her most interesting to the church and her pastors. No one could be in her company and listen to her happy flow of conversation without feeling that she was one who was often saying in her heart: "Nearer, my God, to thee." There are some people that we visit who make us stay longer in their company than we intended. Sister Page was one of these. She was an excellent biblical student, and always talked pleasingly and instructively of the things of God.

For four years and more she has been confined, for the most part, to her room from a severe paralytic stroke. But she could and did read often, especially holding converse with the greatest Author in the greatest book. In all she was unmurmuring and cheerfully resigned. Some months since she received another paralytic stroke. From this she never rallied, but steadily and surely faded until the Master said: "It is enough; come up higher. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." We doubt not she has joined the loved, the first and wept for here in the immortal embraces of indissoluble love. Aside her death there is nothing to regret, save that the church and the world can ill spare such consecrated souls. We expect to meet her among the glorified. She died August 2, 1878. Her pastor, J. H. WALKER.

DIED, at Bls residence near New Iberia, La., May 12, 1878, JEREMIAH F. HOLLINGSWORTH. Bro. Hollingsworth was born in Todd county, Ky., August 30, 1807, and lived a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for forty years. He was educated at Elkton, Ky., and read law there, was admitted to the bar, but declined the practice and turned his attention to mercantile pursuits, which proved not only remunerative, but was the means of amassing much of this world's goods.

In 1832 he married Miss Sarah H. McCauley, only daughter of the Rev. John McCauley, by whom he has four surviving daughters. He moved to Madison county, Miss., in 1834, where he lived until the surrender, at which time he, with many others of the South, determined to seek a home without the limits of the United States, but was dissuaded from his purpose by friends who induced him to settle in south Louisiana, where he has lived up to his death.

From his wife's diary we learn that he joined the church in 1838 as a seeker of religion, and in 1837 he professed religion at a camp meeting held at Pleasant Grove, and became at once an active member of the church, being appointed class-leader. From that time he ever remained an unwavering member of the Methodist Church.

As a husband he was loving and kind, nourishing and cherishing his wife even as his own body. As a father tender and affectionate, which affection and complete possession of the hearts of his children; but he ruled his own house well, having his children in subjection under him. In this respect many households would be greatly improved and bettered, in electually and religiously, were his example imitated. As a neighbor he was generous, hospitable and obliging so much so as to make his death felt and much regretted. As a friend constant and sincere, but without hypocrisy.

In his business transactions of life he strictly adhered to the apostle's injunction: Owe no man anything, but to love one another. Hence at his death no administrator was necessary to arrange his business, settle with creditors, or lift mortgages on real estate. His death, though sudden, found his house in order.

Our brother is no more with us, his voice will no more be heard around our congregational altar in New Iberia; but, thank God, through our Lord Jesus, we sorrow not as those who have no hope of immortal union beyond the river with the sainted saved. With these words let us comfort one another, and feel that our loss is his eternal gain.

BRO. AMASA ELLIS PALMER was born in Green county, Ga., June 24, 1813, and was in the sixty-sixth year of his age at the time of his death, which was on the fourteenth of July, 1878.

He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when quite young. He married Miss Sarah E. McCoy January 17, 1839, who still survives him. In 1860 the fall he removed to this portion of Louisiana, and reconnected himself with the church of his early choice. He was a class-leader and trustee of the Pine Grove Methodist Episcopal Church South at the time of his death. He was true and faithful, so far as the writer knows. He was, it seems, ever at his post of duty unless prevented by sickness or absence from home. He was always ready to sing or pray at any of the services held for God's worship. On Saturday, July 13, he was at church, also on the next day, in which he attended the Sunday school in the morning; was at the eleven-o'clock service, and at its close took the sacrament of the Lord's Supper for the last time, though he knew it not. He went home and dined, after which he and his now afflicted widow sung several hymns. They retired, as usual, to sleep. Toward midnight she was aroused by his efforts to breathe. She arose hastily, and struck a light and went to his side, but he had ceased to live. The swift messenger could not tarry a single moment longer, but bore him hence without a parting word from her whom he had loved through a long married life.

Hoping that he had lived right, his death was doubtless right, and we have hope that he rests well.

MRS. ANNIE MONZIOD, wife of John W. Hanks, was born on the fourth of September, 1815, in Houston county, Ga., and died in Caddo parish, La., of typhoid pneumonia, on the eighteenth of June, 1878, after an illness of twenty days.

It is with mixed feelings of pain and joy that we record the death, or rather the new life, of our much-esteemed friend; for while we deeply sympathize with the sorely afflicted husband and five motherless little children, yet we cannot but rejoice in the knowledge that she triumphed over death, and is now reaping the reward of a long and faithful devotion to the cause of our Savior. At the tender age of eleven years she became a member of the M. E. Church South, and, never faltering, never wavering, she found the cross sweet to bear; and when the earthly shackles released her heaven-bound spirit, truly could she exclaim: "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Always gentle, ever kind, with a heart full of sympathy and prayer for the afflicted, she stood as a beacon-light in the church, and a guide to the erring who were enthralled by the darkness of impiety. Her devotion to her beloved husband and little ones was such as only a Christian wife and mother can experience, and second only to her love for Christ. Responding, while yet a child, to the call of the Savior, after a brief trial she was summoned by the loving Father to receive her eternal crown. T. A. R.

H. B. WAYNICK was born in Guilford county, N. C., in 1824; attended medical lectures at Cincinnati, O.; located at Brookhaven, Lawrence county, Miss., in 1851; moved to Copiah county in 1852; thence to Williamsburg, Covington county, Miss., in 1854; thence to Copiah county, Miss., in 1861, and in 1865 to north Mississippi, where he married and remained until 1867, when, like many others, he was totally broken up by the war. He again went to Covington county, Miss., where he remained nearly ten years, and where he engaged in the ministry. In July, 1877, he again moved to Copiah county, where he ended his earthly pilgrimage, June 17, 1878. During his ten months' stay at my house he appeared to be very much concerned about religion and his future reward. He was engaged in the practice of medicine, and he was very charitable. Cash or no difference with him who came to him for assistance he sent none away empty, whether he ever expected to get pay for it or not. E. M. ASHLEY.

SISTER MARIARET O. CONNERLY, wife of W. W. Connerly, and daughter of Price and Mary Connerly, died of paralysis, at her home in Tylertown, Pike county, Miss., June 5, and was buried June 6, 1878—her sixty-seventh birthday. A PROMISE FOR WEARY DAYS.

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

"My people shall dwell in quiet resting-places."

A message finds us at our work
In the sultry hour of noon,
And bears our thoughts to a shady spot
With many a green festoon;
And we can but ask,
While we toil at our task:
Is the rest-hour coming soon?

Through the streets and houses the undertones
Of the anthems among the trees
Come softly near into weary ears,
Brought by the truant breeze,
And we dream we see,
Though far they be,
The butterflies and bees.

In a vision the hours pass by,
Till the soft sounds hither reach,
The surging laughter of the waves
As they fall upon the beach,
And we can but deem
That the pleasant dream
Has earnest truths to teach.

Shall the promise of what shall be,
In our day of joy's increase,
Then sin and sorrow shall flee away
And we from toil may cease,
Has greater power
Than tree or flower
To bring to our spirits peace.

We thank thee, Giver of sun and shade,
For the mirth of the early morn,
For the silver light on the gladsome sea,
And the wealth of the ripening corn;
Excuse thank thee more
For the heaven in store
For such that have been forlorn.

For people are lifting up their eyes to thee,
Our Father, who lov'st us all;
We know that thy promise is meant to cheer
Thy children great and small;
And it is our creed
That we come to plead
At the summer festival.

We have patience to wait and to labor still;
And at last, in thy tender grace,
Give us the summer for which we long
In our far-reaching places,
Where the work is done,
And the crown is won,
And the light of the Master's face.

Oriental Heathendom.

BY REV. FRANKLIN NOBLE.

Several years ago the venerable Perkins, of Persia, gave the students of the Union Theological Seminary a vivid description of the beauty of the cultivated plains and valleys of that country, and the refined apathy of the people, whose courtesy is the most extreme and Oriental. At the same time he bore witness to the fierce barbarity of character underlying the forms of gentle and civilization. Illustrating the latter fact, he said that an English lady visiting the harem of the Shah, led by her guide through a room where a number of children of the royal family were engaged in a singular play. It was like our "blind man's buff" with this exception: that all the children were blindfolded. Asking what the children called their play, she was puzzled with the answer that they were "practicing." She was afterward horrified with the explanation that when a new Shah came to the throne he always blinds his brothers, as a necessary precaution of State security; and this custom was so well known that the unfortunate children fully understood, in their childish familiarity even with the basis of one of their plays, "practicing" in preparation for the blindness which they knew was the inevitable destiny of the victim.

One might suppose that some Oriental Mark Twain had been practicing upon the credulity of the English. But Dr. Perkins was then an old resident of Persia, where he has since ended his life, and the story had no improbability to him, and he declared that the then reigning Shah was the same who lately made so brilliant a tour in Europe—had actually, as that English lady told her incredible story, signalized his accession to the throne by this very atrocious taking exactly this infamous precaution against any usurpation or conspiracy by his own brothers.

Against such "wickedness in high places," and in such "habitations of cruelty," is the Christian warfare waged.

Dr. Perkins had known and studied the language under the teacher who had taught Henry Martyn when he was translating the New Testament. After their hours of study and translating they would mount their horses and ride, for exercise, to the exploration of some ancient ruin; and as they put his foot in the stirrup he would say to his Persian companion: "Now shall we discuss the question whether 'darkness was created?'" Often did at Tokat, on his journey through Asia Minor; but his translation of the New Testament is still shining as a light in a dark place, and that light it diffuses may not be measured, but may be imagined from a story which we heard from the lips of the Rev. Dr. Hamlin, of Robert College.

Among the mountains which look down over those Persian valleys and where dwell the tribes of Kurdistan, a wild shepherd race, of rough manners, living by herding horses and cattle from the lowlands, and struggling with their traffic not a little with stealing. A Kurdish chief, who had been selling for his tribe, and who had far more than usual intelligence and education, in one of his lowland visits came into possession of an old copy of the New Testament which he was able to read.

He knew of Christians by hearsay, but knew that they kept the first day of the week as their Sabbath. Otherwise he knew nothing of Christianity or the book he had secured. He read the gospel story; and, with no other instructor, became convinced that Jesus Christ was worthy of his love and service, and that Christianity ought to be the religion of all men. He at once embraced it in his heart, and began to preach his new faith, according to the light that he had. He taught his people the sanctity of the Christian Sabbath and the iniquity of stealing; and, using his authority as chieftain, he compelled his people to live honestly, and on Sundays to listen to his preaching. They became as famous for these practices as they had been famous for thieving raids upon unprotected horses; and a real reformation was actually carried out in that mountain region, without the aid of any missionary, and with no teacher of better things except that old copy of the New Testament and the superintending Spirit of God.

One matter troubled the converted Kurd. He read the command to "believe and be baptized," and while he could see that baptism was with water, he failed to find explicit directions as to the mode of application. Unwilling, however, to neglect the commandment because he found it imperfect in explicitness, he summoned his people to witness his baptism.

They gathered on one of the gentle green slopes of a mountain-side, looking out over a wide reach of country; while back of the place rose, almost vertically, a succession of steep cliffs, over which came tumbling, in three cascades, a mountain brook, pure and sparkling in the Sabbath morning sun, the last fall springing clear from the cliff at such a height that it reached the level broken almost wholly into spray. The Kurdish chief explained to his people, as well as he could, the meaning of the Christian profession and of the Christian baptism he was now about to assume, and then, folding his arms and meekly bending his head, he walked under the cascade and was baptized from the hand of the mountain crag, in the sparkling, iris-tinted drops of the falling stream.

New York Observer.

The Bible and Skepticism.

BY PRESIDENT TUTTLE.

There is good reason to believe that the careful study of the Bible is the best means of meeting skepticism.

Dr. Nelson, the author of the "Cause and Cure of Infidelity," was wont to assert, as a rule, that no person can carefully read the Bible through without coming to the conclusion that it is from God. He added that usually such a reader would be led to Christ before he had completed the perusal of the wonderful book.

Dr. Allen, of Lane, once related the incident of a young skeptic who, to relieve the tedium of a long voyage with a skeptical companion, began to read the Bible his mother had placed in his trunk. At random—as the world would say, but divinely directed, as a better authority would teach—he began to read the Evangelist John's account of the last discourses and scenes in the life of the Master. As he read aloud both he and his companion became deeply affected. At last the young invalid, for whose benefit the voyage was taken, burst into tears with the exclamation: "Is not this wonderful?" And the captain coming in the cabin just then, the young man said to him: "Just hear this! It is wonderful!"

Before the voyage was finished the power of God so accompanied "the reading of the word" that every soul on the vessel professed to have found "the Savior, who is Christ the Lord."

If a thrifty Western city resbles a lawyer of no mean gifts and learning. He once admitted that he had been a skeptic as to the claims of "the book" and of its central Person, while he was really ignorant as to both. To remove a condition so little creditable to his own reason, he resolved to examine the claims of Christianity as set forth in the character and life of its central Person, its Christ. For two years all his leisure hours were devoted to this business. The four gospels were his only text-book, and, as Coe he says, he "read between the lines." Every word and incident were carefully examined: "When done, he said to a friend: "If there were no other proof but that contained in these four gospels, I know that Jesus Christ is what he claims to be—the Son of God!"

The result was not merely the abandonment of his skepticism, but his personal conversion.

This may seem a long preface to two brief remarks, and yet I hope the preface and the remarks may be found of some service.

The first remark is that it is a matter of supreme importance for the church to assume once more its function as a learner and a teacher of "the word." Do I bring a railing accusation in expressing the conviction that ignorance of the word is a main source of skepticism as to its divine authority, and that the church is largely to be blamed for this?

If we who preach would more rigidly make "the word," "the web and woof" of our preaching, the infinitely full and divinely authenticated "major premise" of our arguments and appeals, would not our power to educate and win men to Christ be increased perhaps a hundred-fold?

The second remark is a special one that really ranges itself under the first. Inasmuch as the chief attack of skepticism is made on Christ, the author and central Person of Christianity is a matter of the greatest importance to learn who and what Christ is, and what he has taught.

It is very pretty to show our literary culture by quoting the "fine sayings" of infidel scholars, and thus "make them do service in the pulpit;" but we have a wiser than Solomon, or Emerson, or Goethe, speaking in the four gospels. Of him his enemies said: "Never man spake like this man." And surely one cannot afford to "trade off" his words for the sayings of men whose culture seeks to supplant the words of Jesus in the convictions of mankind.—Interior.

An old lady living in Stratford, Conn., who had never been on the cars before, recently rode by rail to New Haven. On her return, being asked what she thought of it, she exclaimed: "It's the most u-n-c-o-m-m-o-n nicest thing! Why, I believe coming back they went through the identical places they did when they went down."

FAIRY TALES OF REAL LIFE.—Queen Victoria does many gentle, womanly things. "I was never more delighted in my life," says Col. Henderson, "than at one of those charming actions of the Queen in which her kindliness of nature and good sense were admirably exemplified. I had had the honor of showing her majesty over Parkhurst Prison. Among the women there several had had children born during their term of imprisonment. Two days later I received an enormous box of toys for the little prison-born children." It sounds like a fairy tale: "And so the King set out to be married in a rose-wood coach, lined with embroidered satin, and drawn by eight horses with trappings worked in gold; and the chariot of the princess was of ebony and gold, and lined with brocade satin; and she wore a white satin, broidered with white roses." But it is all true of the young King and Queen of Spain. May they carry out the fairy tale, and "live ever after." The Spanish ladies, all in white lace mantillas, must have been good to look at. Nothing is more becoming to brunettes than white lace, especially if it has become invested with the tinge of age. Roses are admittedly the emblem of love. An old tradition says that a rose gathered upon midsummer eve, and kept in a clean sheet of paper until Christmas day, will be fresh enough for a maiden to wear in her bosom when he who is to be her husband will come and take it out. In Thuringia the rose holds a similar position as a love-charm; a maid who has several lovers will name a rose-leaf after each, and then scatter them upon the water, that which sinks the last representing her future husband. In some parts of Germany it is customary to throw leaves on a coal fire as a means of insuring good luck. In Germany, as well as in France and Italy, it is believed that if a drop of one's blood be buried under a rose-tree it will insure rosy cheeks.

PROGRESS OF TOTAL ABSTINENCE IN ENGLAND.—In England, where the theory and practice of total abstinence have always been scoffed at by the cultivated majority, the awful prevalence of drunkenness is leading to the formation of a public sentiment against drinking as strong as any that ever existed in this country. The clergy have hitherto maintained drinking practices, but now many of the ministers of the Establishment, as well as all the Dissenting bodies, with a large section of the medical profession and distinguished men from every walk in life, have united in a vigorous movement for the suppression of drunkenness. Canon Farrar, in a sermon preached a few Sundays since in Westminster Abbey, "declared alcoholic drinking and drunkenness to be the one glaring, disgraceful and perilious national vice, by which the nation stands enviably distinguished and seriously endangered." So strong a feeling of the evils of drunkenness as that which now prevails in respectable circles in England naturally leads to the adoption of the Christian rule of total abstinence. It does not require the imposition of total abstinence upon others as a rule; it only leads a man to say: "Because this evil is so great, and because I wish to save those who are ruining themselves by drink, and because I cannot very effectively urge them to abstain without abstaining myself, I therefore relinquish a luxury which I have not abused, and to which I deem myself entitled, that I may the more successfully persuade those to abandon it to whom it is proving a curse." It begins to be evident in England that this course of conduct is something very different from fanaticism; and the same truth ought to be equally evident on this side of the ocean.—Editor's Table, in Sunday Afternoon.

The Indian correspondent of the London Times calls attention to a tribe in Afghanistan, just over the Kashmir border, which would doubtless afford a fine field for missionary effort. On the border of Kashmir the Kafirs inhabit the slopes of the Hindoo Kush, west of the Cabul valley and down to the Cabul river. They number about a million souls and are independent of the Afghans. No Englishman has been allowed to explore this country, and the government has also restrained missionaries from occupying the field, for fear of giving offense to the clans of the Swat. The Kafirs "have never been subdued by the Afghans, but have supplied them with some of their best soldiers and generals. Their language has no affinity with the Persian, or Turkish, or Arabic, but with the Sanskrit, and they are thought to be the remains of the primitive Aryan race. They are remarkable for their fair complexions and blue eyes, for the strength and courage of their men and the great beauty of their women, and for their drunken and dissolute lives. But they are jovial, hospitable, law-abiding, and famous among all the tribes around for their truthfulness and the good faith with which they keep every compact they enter into. They are gross idolaters; but their idolatry, while closely allied to Hindooism, is not exactly the Hindooism of India. They are always at deadly and irreconcilable feud with their Mohammedan neighbors. In the Swat valley, and a young Kafir cannot marry until he has slain a Mohammedan."—Independent.

FIRE KINDLERS.—Take a quart of tar and three pounds of resin, melt them, bring to a cooling temperature, mix with as much coarse saw-dust, with a little charcoal added, as can be worked in; spread out while hot upon a board. When cold break up into lumps of the size of a walnut, and you have, at a small expense, kindling enough for a household for perhaps a year. They will easily ignite from a match, and burn with a strong blaze, long enough to start any wood that is fit to burn.—Correspondent of Germantown Telegraph.

Then comes reaction—this cold gray hour of moral indignation—the breaking of a new day.—Jet.

Religious Intelligence.

—The May elections in the old Prussian provinces of delegates to the General Synod of the State Church have been carried, with only two exceptions, by the Orthodox parties. The Middle party elected not a single delegate, but with their help the Liberals secured two delegates.

—The Association of General Baptists, one of the smaller Baptist bodies of England, has held its one hundred and ninth annual meeting, in London. A membership of 24,943 was reported, showing a net increase of about 250. The mission churches at Orissa, India, reported an additional increase of 73.

—An unprecedented movement toward Christianity has taken place among the natives of India east of Tinnevelly. Sixteen thousand have given their names to the English Bishop Caldwell, and have asked for instruction. The Bishop writes that "village after village is laying aside its heathenism and seeking admission into the fold of Christ." One reason assigned for this change of feeling is gratitude to the English for succor during the famine.

—The excitement raised over the Reformed Episcopal Church by the Bishops of the English Church has served to quicken the progress of the schism, as it is called. Several clergymen are said to have given in their adhesion to the church, and Bishop Gregg has admitted seven candidates to deacon's orders and ordained several presbyters, who are to labor at the watering-places. The Pan-Anglican Synod is considering a protest against the growing body.

—The clergymen of the Reformed Episcopal Church in England have held their first anniversary meeting at Newman Hall's church in London. The Rock thinks the selection of the church was an excellent one, and that no more suitable place could have been found for the introduction of the new denomination into the metropolis. Bishop Gregg conducted the services, assisted by a number of clergymen. He preached the sermon, in which he said the church now had congregations in nine dioceses in England.

—The London Watchman, in a review of the Wesleyan missionfield, congratulates its readers on the large number of converts reported for the last Conference year, and the many hopeful indications in nearly all the stations. It says also: "Some new fields are engaging the attention of the parent society: Japan, with its teeming millions, is open and asks help; Zululand, with three hundred thousand inhabitants, implores missionaries; the tribes which surround the Transvaal, and which are giving President Burgers so much trouble, would welcome the gospel; groups of people on the Gambia, Niger, and farther north in the direction of Timbuctoo, are accessible to Christian labor."

—From "Summary View of the Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church," May 1, 1878, we glean the following facts: The oldest mission, that to the Seneca Indians, was begun in 1811; the newest, that in Mexico, was begun in 1872. There are ten principal missions—the North American Indian, the Mexican, the South American, the African, the Indian, the Siamese, the Chinese, the Japanese, the Persian and the Syrian. These missions have about 80 stations, with many outstations. There are 124 American and 55 native missionaries employed, besides 109 native licentiates. Some 484 persons are working as lay missionaries, of whom 190 are Americans. 181 of the 190 are women. There are in all 10,391 communicants, distributed among the missions as follows: North American Indian, 1,348; Mexican, 2,619; South American, 977; African, 621; Indian, 802; Siamese, 182; Japanese, 477; Chinese, 1,623; Persian, 1,134; Syrian, 664. In the day and boarding schools there are 15,900 scholars, of whom more than half, or 8,136, are in India.

—The Methodist Conferences across the water are held in the summer. Three of them have been in session—the Irish Wesleyan, the Primitive Methodist, and the Methodist New Connection—and one, the British Wesleyan, is to meet soon at Bradford. The Irish Wesleyan Conference of this year, held in Dublin, will be remembered for two reasons: it admitted lay delegates and consummated the long-desired union with the Irish Primitive Methodists. President Pope, of the British Wesleyan Conference, presided, for the Irish Church is subordinate to the former. The first business of the Conference was transacted by the ministers, and then the laymen were admitted. They were welcomed by the president. This change in the government of the church having been accomplished, the chief obstacle to union with the Primitive Methodists was removed, and the debate on the subject was on the simple question whether the union should be consummated at once or delayed a year. Finally the motion to postpone was withdrawn, and it was resolved unanimously to carry out the project for union immediately. A delegation was appointed to declare the result to the Primitive Methodist Conference. The Primitive Methodists of England are a much larger body. It met at Manchester, and chose the Rev. Henry Phillips for president. The profits of the Publishing House were reported at $8,500, and the missionary committee stated that there would probably be a deficiency of $60,000 by the end of September. Greetings were received from the Methodist New Connection Conference, in session at Ashton-under-Lyne, and returned. Fifty-two candidates for the ministry were reported, of whom fifteen were rejected.—Independent.

RAIN.

BY EDGAR FAWCETT.

Oh, the rain has many lithe moods
Ere the merry summer closes,
From the first chirp of the robin broods
To the ruin of the roses.

Through the sunshine's gold her glitter steals,
In the doubtful April weather,
When the world seems trying how it feels
To be sad and glad together.

Now and then, on quiet sultry eves,
From her low persistent patter,
She would seem confiding to the leaves
An extremely solemn matter.

Then, again, you see her from the sky
Such a mighty flood unfolding,
That you wonder if old Earth knows why
It receives so hard a scolding.

Yet we learn in fancy, day by day,
As we watch her softly shining,
That she has no cloud, however gray,
But it wears a silver lining.

For in autumn, though with tears she tells
How the lands grow sad and darken,
Yet in spring her drops are thrilling bells
For the sleeping flowers to hearken.

And her tinted bow seems Love's own proof,
As it gleams with colors seven,
Like a stately dome upon the roof
Of her palace high in heaven.

From Our Little Friends.

GOODMAN, MISS., May 10, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Mamma takes your paper, and I thought I would write you a little letter. I go to school. I am a member of the Methodist Church. I joined the church when I was eleven years old. I go to Sunday school. Mr. Consert is our superintendent. Mr. Bachman is our pastor. We like him very much. I will close by asking two questions: Who sold the righteous for silver and the poor for a pair of shoes? What king's bones were burned to lime. Hoping to see this published, I am

Your little friend,

MINNIE MITCHELL.

LAKE CHARLES, LA., May 3, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a Methodist boy, and live far away in the country. We have no preaching of any kind here now. There was once a Methodist society here, but the members have all died and moved off. We use the church-house for a school-house.

"God made a garden eastward in Eden."—Genesis xi, 8. Snuff-dishes are mentioned in Exodus xxxvii, 23. Parched corn is mentioned in First Samuel xxv, 18. I will now ask a question: What king was driven from men and ate grass like oxen?

From your friend,

EDWARD FAIRCHILD.

OAK HILL, MISS., May 21, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: Papa has been taking the ADVOCATE nearly two years, and I am very fond of reading it, especially the column for the little folks. We have Sabbath school every Sunday. My uncle, Dr. T. C. Austin, is superintendent. We have preaching twice a month. Mr. John Lusk is our preacher. Where is "misused" mentioned in the Bible? As this is my first letter to the ADVOCATE, I hope it will not go in the waste-basket. Your little friend,

HALLIE SUSAN AUSTIN.

CANTON, ALA., July 20, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: As you were so good as to publish my first letter, I will write another to the dear old ADVOCATE. We have a very good minister this year. His name is Mr. Jones. He preaches for us once a month. I will ask the children a question: Where was Moses buried, and who buried him?

Ever your friend,

Boys and Their Mothers.

I am sure you would have liked the two things that Royal Lowrie did next—things that he was accustomed to do every morning of his life.

First, he went to the bureau and took up a picture that stood there upon an easel-frame—the portrait of his mother.

"Good-morning, my dear mother," he said gayly, and kissed the picture several times, tenderly and reverently, just as, a few years later, he might do that of some other woman whom he hoped to make his wife. Indeed Royal Lowrie was very much in love with the beautiful mother; so that no woman was fairer or dearer, or more worthy of knightly service than she.

O my dear boys—for it is you especially for whom I am writing this story—no matter how big you get, or how busy you become, or how manly you fancy you are growing, don't ever get too big, or too busy, or too manly, to be in love with your mother! She who loves you as no other woman ever can; she who would gladly die a thousand deaths for you—O never, so long as you live, turn her out of the first place in your heart. Never, so long as you live, let there be a time when, in the slightest attention ever—the quick offer of an arm or the stooping to save a step—you will prefer another to her.

I don't mean to moralize to-day, or preach to you very much in this story, but I can't help saying this: for I know too well how surely will come a time when you will thank me for it. You do not think very much about it now, as you go about the house with hearts singing, and feet that keep time to the home music. And when the day comes for you to go out from the home-life you will run lightly down the steps and ride away, scarcely looking for the last look at the loving mother who stands there in the door-way, with eyes that till so fast they can scarcely follow you as you go. And when you come back at Christmas, or Easter, or at midsummer, though you may notice perhaps that some little change has taken place in your absence—the dear mother-face has grown thinner, the step slower, or, may be, the gray hairs have become more frequent—yet still you will laugh and turn away and forget; until some time—late, I trust, but surely sooner or later—there will come a change which you will not laugh away or forget. Some time when you are far away, perhaps at school, or college, or in a distant city, while you study or sport or carouse, there will come tidings and a summons least expected, that will kill the laugh upon your lips in an instant and strike your joy dead.

And then, when you have hurried home again, aunt, standing once more by the hearth that can never again be as it once has been, you begin to realize, as you cannot at first, how very different everything is, and how empty and desolate home and the world, and life itself is, with that presence, that has made it all so beautiful, gone out of it forever; when you stand, later still, beside the sacred mound in the church-yard, and weep such hot tears as boys and men do weep over their mothers' graves—then it is that every little care and thoughtfulness and attention that you have paid her, and all the larger sacrifices you have made for her sake, will come back to you like ministering spirits, and bring you a comfort and a consolation that you cannot now understand; just as the remembrance of every sorrow you have caused her will be very bitter.

And if these words I am saying will only make you think of this now, and if the thought shall make you in any way more careful and considerate and affectionate now to the mother whom I am sure you love very much, I shall be glad, indeed, that I have said them; and some time you will be glad too, however dull and prosy you may think them now.

And as for your mother's picture, boys (for I want to say a word about that, too), never go away from her without it. Keep it by you always; not in your trunk or drawer, but on your bureau, or wall, or shelf, where you can see it constantly, and where it can see you. You will lead truer lives for it, believe me. For it is in the privacy of our own chambers, perhaps, that we think our meanest thoughts and do our meanest acts; and you will hardly care to think or act unworthily with those eyes following you about the room.

And the other of the two things that Royal did this morning? Well, with the thought of his earthly parent sobering and purifying his heart, he knelt beside the bed and poured out his soul to his heavenly Father. A simple, honest, straightforward prayer, whose words I would not repeat here, since they were meant for God's ear alone. Only I hope in this second thing also every boy who reads this will think Royal Lowrie worthy of imitation.—Wide Awake.

BIRDS AND FISHERMEN.—In a certain lake region of Lapland there is a very curious joint company, consisting of men and birds. They have organized for fishing purposes. Every morning early the hungry birds come out and sing, so to speak, though a more correct term might perhaps be come out and scream at the fishermen, telling them plainly enough that it is time to get up. The sleepy fishers leave their huts at the summons of these faithful servants, and they need no other alarm clocks. The boats are unmoored, and then the swallows "strike out." The men guide their movements entirely by the course of the swallows, who very likely have been out scenting early that morning. When they pause and hover over a spot, redoubling their cries, then the fishermen know that this is the place for them. They hasten forward and cast in their nets, and are well rewarded by finding them well filled.

When the game begins to get thin the birds hasten on to a new fishing spot. It would be a churlish fellow who did not reward such faithful service. Many a fish is tossed up in the air which the birds swoop down upon and catch with an easy grace. After they are so tame they do not stand on such little ceremony, but just step aboard and help themselves.

As evening comes both men and birds make for the shore, and after the best fish are taken out, they have only to leave the inferior ones in the boat, and they will be cleaned out for them in short order.

"What have my class done for Jesus since last we met?" asked the teacher of a large infant class one Sabbath morning.

One after another told, in a half-bashful, half-exultant way, of the little activities and self-denials of the week. At last a little four-year-old hand was stretched up, and moved hastily to and fro to attract the teacher's attention.

"Well, my dear, what are you doing to please Jesus?"

The little finger face flushed with excitement as the unexpected reply came: "I scrubs."

"She had done what she could" is the highest praise that can be spoken of any one.—Parish Visitor.

"I fear," said a country minister to his flock, "when I explained to you in my last charity sermon that philanthropy is the love of our species, you must have understood me to say 'speele,' which may account for the smallness of the collection. You will observe, I hope, by your present contribution that you are no longer laboring under the same mistake."

Heaven's canopy resounds not with the piercing cry of mortals only; angels fall prostrate before their Lord; archangels kneel before their God.—Thomas Moore.

Balm in Gilead.

The adequacy and power of the gospel to heal the sin-sick soul are attested by the experience of all true believers. The very worst cases have been cured by the grace of God. The guiltiest sinners have found pardon through faith in Christ, and the most corrupt and enslaved have been purified and made free. The presence of sin in the world is manifested in multifarious aspects, it is found as a deadly malady in persons of all ages and of all classes, and the divine remedy has saved some out of every class. In no race has the gospel proved an utter failure. Circumstances may make the application more or less difficult, but everywhere in this world of sin, and in whatever condition the sinner is placed, it is still true that there is balm in Gilead, and that a Physician is there.

The provisions of redemption are coextensive with the human family. If there is truth in the inspired declarations, Christ died for all, and "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The provision has been made, and the offer of life is tendered to all. Every good man desires the salvation of all, and does what he can to bring about the result. Of God, our Savior, it is written: "Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." He who will have all men to be saved doubtless does what he can to save them, and to bring them to the knowledge of the truth. Christ, as the true light, lighteth every man that cometh into the world. The Holy Spirit has a broad and universal ministry. He is given to every man to profit withal. In Bible lands the remedy is well advertised. Men are urged and warned. They have line upon line and precept upon precept. It is difficult, however, for them to realize that the plague is in their blood, and that unless speedily arrested it worketh death.

This is one reason why the hurt is not healed. A well man in these days is impressed with the apparent purity of the atmosphere, and feels the sense of a perfect health. But the subtle poison is in his system. When the fever begins there may be nothing serious in the earlier symptoms, and the patient concludes that there is nothing grave in the attack. But a few hours or days mark the developments of a fatal disease. Conviction and sense of sin must exist before the soul can realize its need of the great Physician. But for whatever reason the gospel is rejected, the cause of ruin is in the failure to accept the remedy. "Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life." There is balm in Gilead, but the sick refuse the healing gift.

There is in this, as in physical disease, a fatal procrastination. Prompt treatment is everything. Delay is not only dangerous—it is usually death. "While there is life there is hope." So the doctors are telling us daily concerning some of their patients. But in such cases they nearly always die. There may be some hope for the sinner who puts off the work of repentance. On the death-bed he may be saved. But where there is such delay the case is desperate. Men are not healed because they refuse the balm of salvation—because they will not come to the divine Healer, the great Physician. The world is not saved, and people die in the midst of gospel opportunities not saved, because they have rejected the mercy of God, and because they have neglected the great salvation.

It is a privilege to point the sinner in the dying hour to one who is able to save to the uttermost, but it is a solemn duty to warn the living against the forlorn hope of a death-bed repentance.

Literal Fire and Brimstone.

With the British Wesleyans the preachers are required to subscribe to Wesley's Notes and Sermons as their doctrinal standard and creed. In his sermon on Hell Mr. Wesley affirms that the fire of torment is literal fire. The Wesleyan minister is therefore required to believe and teach, according to their catechism, that "hell is a dark and bottomless pit, full of fire and brimstone, in which the wicked will be punished forever and ever by having their bodies tormented by the fire, and their souls by a sense of the wrath of God." From the account given below by the Independent, of the case of Rev. William Impey, it will be seen that he was compelled to withdraw from the connection because he could not accept the doctrine of the church concerning the literal nature of hell fire. It does not appear that Mr Impey was unsound in his views respecting the future eternal punishment of the wicked. We suppose he regarded the expressions of Scripture on the subject as figurative, and designed to describe sufferings of the most awful and terrific character. Mr. Wesley's view may be right that material fire is meant, but if a man believes that it is a figurative expression, and means something as bad or even worse than literal fire, it looks like a hardship that he should be cut off as heterodox. The doctrine of future punishment certainly may be held and is held by thousands who reject the notion of literal fire and brimstone. And yet, with its standards so clear on the point, we do not see that the British Conference could well do otherwise than insist upon Mr. Impey's retirement. Neither the Independent nor the Nonconformist may be free from bias, but we give the matter as we find it in the Independent:

We noticed last year that several Wesleyan ministers in England resigned, because they could not accept the doctrine that hell is a place of literal fire and brimstone. Some members of the Conference made an appeal for toleration, but the Conference took Dr Osborn's advice: "Let us have no open questions that were not open questions to John Wesley." This year the question has come up again, and in a form to attract more attention. The Rev. William Impey, a name known to every friend of missions, has been compelled to resign on account of being unable to accept with a good conscience the doctrine held by the church. Mr. Impey has been forty years in the missionary field. For the last twenty-five years he has been general superintendent of Wesleyan missions in the Grahamstown district, eastern Africa. He represented the authority of the Wesleyan Conference in matters of discipline, examined and ordained candidates for the ministry, and, on behalf of the society, selected mission stations in his province and distributed the funds. He was also chief of the Training Institution. "From this eminent position" (we quote from the Nonconformist) "and from the Wesleyan ministry itself, Mr. Impey, at sixty years of age, and with a character held in high repute, has been compelled by his conscience to retire, in consequence of inability any longer to enforce on his brethren, or on the Kaffir converts of the mission, the 'plain grammatical sense' of the words in the Methodist standards, which require it to be taught that 'hell is a dark and bottomless pit, full of fire and brimstone, in which the wicked will be punished forever and ever, by having their bodies tormented by the fire, and their souls by a sense of the wrath of God.'—'Catechism,' part 1, section 5.) Mr. Impey's difficulties were made known last year to the mission secretaries in London—Dr. Punshon, Mr. Killner, Mr. Jenkins and Dr. Osborn. He was summoned to London for examination and conference. The result was that he could propose no expedient which would enable him to continue his services on the terms of Methodist conformity, except by trifling with the obvious meaning of the language of the standards. This Mr. Impey would not do. He was, therefore, advised to resign his office and functions, in anticipation of the alternative of inevitable expulsion. This he at once did—with the result of finding his case dealt with by the Bradford Conference in silence. His name was struck off the rolls as having 'resigned,' without a word in recognition of his character or services. Nor does any report of his resignation, or of the cause of it, appear in the Methodist journals."

God's Method.

There are some who doubt that a revelation has been made, because the method adopted is not such as they would have selected. It is objected that the assumed revelations were made in ages remote and lands distant from ours; that long centuries have rolled away since God has spoken; that ages of unbroken silence have passed over the nations, and God has given no sign, uttered no voice. The reply is that truth does not decay with the lapse of years. If it was clearly in proof that God spoke to men, then it is still true that he spoke to them. The revelation is not less a revelation because it is old. But we have further to say: It is hasty to affirm that God's being and government may be doubted because we seem to have no visible and audible evidence. We insist that we have such evidence. Let us illustrate. We have many acquaintances, but we know that we have never seen one of them—only their external and material part; but we are satisfied of the intellectual and spiritual existence of these persons, because they have given so many proofs of intelligent thought, purpose and action—thought and purpose above all the possibilities of mere matter. So we insist that God's being and government are as fully and as clearly demonstrated by the exhibitions of intelligent thought, purpose and action in the phenomena of the universe.

Another doubt that God has revealed himself to man arises in some minds from the fact of the imperfect and gradual presentation of the assumed revelation. "If revelation is meant to enlighten and save, why was it imperfectly and gradually given? Why not complete and instantaneous? Why has it moved from dim twilight to perfect day?" We may not always know the reasons for the divine procedure; but it is certain that this gradual giving of revelation, this gradual unfolding of the divine purposes, is quite in harmony with the divine procedure in the material universe. The acorn grows by most gradual movement into an oak; the rivulet slowly widens and deepens into the river, and the dimness of early dawn into the brightness of perfect day. In man we see this same physical and mental progress. It might be asked: "Why are not children born full-grown, and capable of all physical and mental demands and duties? Why left so long weak, helpless, and dependent on the providence of others? Why not born in the fullness of intellectual power? Why left to grope in ignorance, and liable to mistake?" We may not know all the reason, but we can see great good to the parents in devolving on them all this toil and care. It improves them, and binds them more firmly to their children. We can see the good to the children in the gradual acquisition of various good habits of body and mind, and the inheritance of the wisdom of parental experience. We can see the wealth of tenderness and love, and consequent domestic happiness which grow out of the present arrangement, which could never be without it. If we could as fully understand the purpose of the divine method of communicating revelation we should no doubt see it to be equally wise and beneficent. Let us wait. "His purposes will ripen fast."

Oregon Correspondence.

ALBANY, OREGON, Aug. 16, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: We sympathize deeply and profoundly with you in your affliction. Your fair city doubtless is suffering greatly in all its branches of business by the paralyzing stroke of yellow fever. The churches and benevolent associations are intent on their noble work of ministering to the relief of the sick and destitute. A dark pall, I imagine, rests over the city. Many are called to their long home, and the "mourners go about the streets." Mourning and wailing are in many houses. The stranger is nursed and cared for with almost prodigal outlay of labor and means. The poor are buried decently, if it be only in the "potter's field." Tender hands, and sympathizing hearts, and soothing words cheer the dying. The ministers of religion, both lay and clerical, perform with unwearied diligence their holy offices as angels of mercy and love. The ranks of business and letters and religion and leisure are broken and thinned, while others rush in to fill up the gap. Multitudes are rushing down, down, down—many perhaps prepared for the change; but, O! too many "without hope and God in the world," and "dying as the fool dieth."

Your recurring epidemics present occasions for the higher sentiments and feelings of the heart to be brought out. We are better by reason of afflictions. They not only "work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," but they "work in us the peaceable fruits of righteousness." What a wonderful and heaven-devised process, this, to develop and maintain high Christian character! And, O! does not all this

"Commit us heavenly
And minister eternity to us"

Surely there is a great mistake if there is not a future for man—a future "according to the deeds done in the body," enhanced and intensified in good or ill in harmony with his character here. How reckless are men—rushing on furiously in sin—when the destinies of eternity hang on the moment! That God, the offended Father of all, can pardon and save is wonderful! That he, sitting on his throne of justice, can justify, and yet be just! Great mystery! It is only a doctrine of divine revelation. Here is the center to which the moral world gravitates: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Glorious words of the Son of God! How they girdle the world with light and peace! How they permeate and penetrate the races! But enough; and yet the theme is as inexhaustible as its unwasting Source.

That your neighboring cities and towns are quarantining is significant. I observe from our telegrams that some are already experiencing the dreadful scourge. May the good Lord be your "dwelling-place in all generations."

I have not much news to communicate from this far-distant land that would be profitable to your readers. A reasonably large yield of our main cereal (wheat) is being harvested and prepared for the markets of the Old World. Prices will likely rule low. War increases the demand for breadstuffs and lessens the number of producers. I believe we have universal peace, or nearly so. And yet all the important events in the fulfillment of prophecy are not worked out yet, according to the fixing up of some prophecy-mongers.

A considerable rain, attended with one perceptible thunder-clap, has occurred since I penned the last sentence. I had deferred my letter till I returned. It is a rare thing at this season—thunder at any time. It will likely injure much wheat, as it lies sacked in great heaps in the fields, waiting to be hauled. We were just prepared (horses and hack at the door) to make a little journey to one of my preaching-places, about twenty-five miles distant. We saw the cloud looming up from over the coast range, ocean-ward. As we were in Oregon we did not disengage the horses, or make any attempt to flee. It came copiously, and before E. and I could well collect our thoughts we were drenched. Now, as the evening is so near spent, we defer our journey till to-morrow. Such is life. This communication, however, so dry and prosy, becomes moist, and is being finished now.

Our Indian war has produced quite a stir. A number of persons have been killed—perhaps twenty—and much property destroyed, consisting of cattle, horses, etc. The people in an old and well-settled portion of Oregon are fleeing, panic-stricken, in the wildest terror, leaving everything to the mercy of the savages, and the marauding white men who availed themselves of this time to commit depredations. There are the usual number of stories of cruelty and barbarity. No doubt the trouble was largely the result of the present Indian policy; but whether any other policy would accomplish better results, where so much corruption obtains, is questionable. Many of these Indians—most, perhaps—were from reservations where missionaries are employed and operating. And it seems that under the present regime Christian civilization lacks much of effecting the object contemplated. These renegades from the various reservations have mostly gone back to receive rations and blankets for winter. The American Indian problem is still an open question.

Some of our brethren were traveling and preaching in that region of country. Here in the Willamette valley we feel as secure against Indian raids as you do in New Orleans.

I have nearly closed my district work—one more quarterly meeting and several extra meetings, and our Conference year is out. I have had some precious seasons, like old times.

We have quite an increase to our membership at several points. But, ah! where we have sowed in tears we have failed you to reap. "God giveth the increase."

I expect to go down to southern Oregon, three weeks before Conference and hold meetings. Roseburg, the seat of our next Conference, is in that region. I hope to have a good time.

The APOCALYPSE is always a comfort to us. "Finally, farewell." Be perfect, be of one mind.

Affectionately in Christ,

T. B. WHITE.

The book editor informs us that the new Discipline and the Journal of the General Conference are now stereotyped, and we suppose both are ready for delivery. Concerning the Journal, Dr. Summers says:

"No one can imagine the labor bestowed upon this work. We have prepared a copious index, which will facilitate reference. We need not say that the Journal of the General Conference should be in the hands of all our members and friends, especially ministers and other office-bearers in the church. The journal makes a partly octavo pamphlet of 280 pages, and is put at the low price of seventy-five cents.

The pamphlet of the venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce, bearing the title, "A Miscellaneous Essay on Entire Sanctification," has also been stereotyped. The object proposed by the author is to show "how the doctrine was lost from the church, and how it may and must be restored." The General Conference at Atlanta invited Dr. Pierce to preach during the session on entire sanctification, but he was too infirm to do so. He gives his views now to the church in pamphlet form. Dr. Summers says:

He does not go into a set dissertation on the subject; nor, indeed, does he give us a formal sermon on his text—First Thessalonians v, 23, 24. But he gives a history of the doctrine, so to speak, in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, "showing," as he says, "how it was lost from the church." He seems to be a good deal like Elijah, who thought that he was left alone in his attachment to Jehovah. He fears that the doctrine is not preached as it once was, and that this great blessing is not experienced as it used to be. This gives him an opportunity to reprove the church for its defection. If he cuts deep and close, bear in mind, that "faithful are the wounds of a friend"—faithful in that the surgery goes to the bottom of the complaint, and faithful in that the design is not to give pain, but to effect a cure. After pointing out the cause of our defection, he shows us the cure.

We are not favored with a copy of the Methodist Advocate, published by the Methodist Episcopal Church at Atlanta, Ga., but we meet with very striking references to it now and then. This last is from the New York Methodist:

We have received no copy of the Methodist Advocate containing an article on "Acan." A friend who has seen it sends us the following remarks: "The article in the Methodist Advocate, entitled 'An Acan in the Camp,' strikes me as, to say the least, anything but 'dignified' or 'high-toned.' To draw it mildly, it is not a great many removes, it seems to me, from dirty blackguardism redolent of the manners, wit and dialect of the stump, or of the average ward politician. Think of a great church putting out money and employing men at this late day to conduct new-papers in this vulgar manner! A poor cause, truly, that which can be maintained only by smart sneers, cheap wit, flippant hits and wholesale denunciation. Is it any wonder that unbelievers, under the circumstances, become disgusted with religious journalism, not to say with religion itself? There is a decent, gentlemanly, Christian way to conduct controversy; and respect for the cause of religion, a decent regard for the good opinion of the community, not to say sentiments of self-respect, suggest the propriety of conducting it this, or otherwise, abstaining from it altogether."

A GOOD WAY.—Dr. Linsley, in a notice of his fourth round, among other things, says: "Subscriptions received and forwarded to ADVOCATE by preacher in charge and by presiding elder." We trust the interests of the ADVOCATE will not be forgotten at any of the quarterly meetings. The paper was never more in need of money than now. It cannot be much longer issued unless the receipts are increased. The fever is not hindering, only as it cuts off receipts. Money is the need. It is the want of it alone that embarrasses the publisher. Will our friends make what effort they can at once. Where the fever does not prevail something can be done.

Rev. J. T. Sawyer, pastor of the Southern Methodist Church in Baton Rouge, writes us, September 2, that yellow fever is increasing there, and that he is busy from morning till night, often late at night—visiting the sick and attending funerals. Sister Sawyer is also engaged in ministering to the sick. May God bless them and preserve them in the heroic performance of their arduous duties. Let special prayer be made for them, and for all faithful Christian ministers and their families, in these days of trial and peril.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, Sept. 3, 1878.

DR. PARKER: The corner-stone of the new college building was laid according to appointment. The work is progressing satisfactorily. The sound of the trowel is heard all the day long. The building will be completed at as early a day as possible. The health of our city was never so good at this season. Bro. Heard, our pastor, is having a fine revival. The college will not open till October 9.

Yours fraternally,

H. F. JOHNSON.

A correspondent of the Southwestern Presbyterian says:

Among the faithful pastors who have stood at their posts, at the peril of their lives, in this day of pestilence, our excellent brother at Grenada, Rev. John McCampbell, D. D. (whose death is announced by telegram), is a noble example. It seems sad to us that one so richly endowed with grace, and so much honored and beloved in the church, should be sacrificed on the altar of duty; but the sacrifice is doubtless honoring and well pleasing to God.

The Nashville Christian Advocate publishes the following from Bishops Pierce and Keener:

NOTE FROM BISHOP PIERCE.

MR. EDITOR: Let me answer many letters in one brief note.

I have been quite sick; the doctors say I must lie by a week or two. Bishop McTyeire has kindly consented to hold the Western Virginia Conference for me. God willing, I expect to meet the other Conferences of my district.

All work between Conferences must decline, "until I see how it will go with me."

G. F. PIERCE.

SPARTA, GA., Aug. 30.

NOTICE.

MR. EDITOR: Please say that the very rapid spread of yellow fever in Mississippi has rendered the change which I made recently in several appointments of the North Mississippi Conference wholly impracticable, and they will therefore return to their original position, viz.: Rev. W. Kendall, presiding elder of Starkville district; Rev. W. P. Barton, presiding elder of Greenville district; Tilman Page, preacher in charge at Greenville.

Yours truly,

J. C. KEENER.

Mr. J. H. Keith, the leader of the singing in the Carondelet Street church, died on Wednesday night, September 4, of yellow fever. He had for several years been in charge of the music department of Mr. Werlein's establishment in this city. He was an upright and generous-hearted man, a gentleman of refinement, loved and esteemed by a large circle of friends. It is with sorrow that we chronicle his death. The last time we heard him was at the funeral of Maj. Austin, when he sang with great sweetness, solemnity and power:

"Jesus, lover of my ...
Let me to thy bosom ..."

His illness was of short duration, but we learn that he died trusting in Christ.

The Southern Methodist, published at Louisville, Ky., Dr. A. H. Redford, editor—has begun its career, and we trust a long and successful one. The first number has reached us, and gives earnest of an excellent, well-conducted journal. It is a sixteen-page weekly, about the size of the New York Methodist. Price $2 a year. Dr. Redford is a practical writer and has large experience in journalism, and will doubtless make a paper that is worth paying for. We wish him abundant success in the enterprise.

We deeply regret the death of Mrs. Julia R. McAnally, wife of Rev. H. McAnally, D. D., editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate. She died in great peace, August 29. She had been in failing health for several months, and much of the time was in great but most patient suffering. We tender to the bereaved our sincere condolence in their severe affliction.

Rev. J. E. Foust, of the Alabama Conference, will have the sympathies and prayers of his brethren and friends in his bereavement. His estimable and saluted wife, Mrs. Martha Louisa Foust, died at her mother's residence, near Brookeville, Miss., September 2. Her obituary, written by Rev. R. G. Porter, will appear in our next number.

Rev. N. W. Wilson, D. D., pastor of the Coliseum Place Baptist Church of New Orleans, died of the prevailing fever on Friday, September 6. Dr. Wilson was in the prime of life and a devoted and useful preacher. He has fallen at his post while nobly and heroically laboring for the welfare of his people.

Centenary Female College, Summerfield, Ala., opens October 1. We learn that the prospects of this institution are flattering. President McVoy has done well in the past, and his efforts deserve to be crowned with abundant success. See the card of the college in another column.

The latest dispatches from Vicksburg announce that Rev. T. B. Conaway is very low, but improving. We earnestly pray that his life may be spared.

We know of no other way by which to keep the love of the world out of our heart than to keep in our hearts the love of God; and no other way by which to keep our hearts full of this love of God than building ourselves upon our most holy faith. That denial of the world which is not possible to him that is dissevered from the gospel testimony is possible, even as all things are possible to him that believeth. To try to live without faith is to work without the right tool or the right instrument. But faith worketh by love; and love is the way of expelling from the heart the love which transgresseth the law, and to admit to its receptacles the love which fulfilleth the law.—Chalmers.

If we talk with the world for the pleasure it affords, we shall be likely to be among the first to be reconciled to the freedom and laxity it allows. The world is not brought up to God, but we sink down to the world; the drop becomes of the consistence and color of the ocean into which it falls, the ocean itself remains unchanged.—Dr. James Walker.

The Publishing House.

To the Creditors and Friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

At a meeting of the Book Committee, August 15, 1878, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted, viz.:

Whereas, We have ascertained that the indebtedness of the Methodist Publishing House is about $300,000; And whereas, From the experience we have had in operating the house, we are satisfied that the house is self-sustaining, and that we can, by the application of strict business principles, make a profit annually—the amount we are not prepared to state; And whereas, We are satisfied that we cannot pay the interest on this debt at its present rate, and pay any part of the principal, with or out of the present business of the house, but do believe that we could meet the interest on the above amount if fixed at four per cent. per annum, in addition to the annual expenses of the house; And whereas, We have requested the creditors of the house to postpone their debt for a period of twelve months from the first of July, 1878, and we have responses from so many as to leave no reasonable doubt as to the action of the remainder of the creditors; And whereas, We do not believe that we shall be able, at the maturity of this paper, to pay one dollar of the principal of said indebtedness; but shall be driven to the necessity, when it falls due, of asking another extension, and so at the end of the next twelve months, if indeed we should be so fortunate as to secure another extension, and so on indefinitely, until the patience of our creditors shall have become exhausted by a succession of broken promises; And whereas, We believe that the inevitable result of this policy will be certain ruin and bankruptcy if persisted in, in which event we believe that the property of the establishment will be sacrificed, to the injury of the house and creditors; And whereas, We believe that if this debt is to be paid by the Publishing House, it can only be done by degrees, at the end of many years of successful operations; and in order to do this we are satisfied of the necessity of extending the debt for a term of years, at a low rate of interest; And whereas, We believe that the present property, and all that the Publishing House may acquire in the future, should be pledged to the security of all the creditors of the house, equally and alike (which they would not have if we should pay one; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the opinion of this committee the only practicable method of dealing with this vast indebtedness is to issue bonds of the denominations as follows: $50, $100, $500, $1,000 bearing interest at the rate of four per cent. per annum, payable at Nashville, Tenn., on the first days of January and July of each succeeding year; the principal of the bonds to be payable as follows: 30 10s, and to be secured by a mortgage to be executed on all of the property of the Publishing House, both real and personal, and the house and property kept insured by the agent; for its value, in two or more good insurance companies, for the benefit, in case of its destruction by fire, of the holders of these bonds.

Be it further resolved, That the agent have printed circulars embodying the sense of these resolutions, and have the same advertised in the central and all the local papers of the church, inviting the friends and editors of the church and house to subscribe to this loan, and that he have prepared for this purpose subscription papers, which he will cause to be properly distributed and circulated, asking friends and creditors to subscribe, on condition that the amount subscribed shall in the aggregate reach the sum of $300,000 the same to be due and payable on the first day of May, 1879, at which time the bond is to be delivered.

And be it further resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee that the agent, the said J. B. McFerrin, should visit, in person, as many of the Conferences, soon to meet, as possible, and to be represented at such as he cannot attend in person by some suitable agent, and impress the ministers and members of the different Conferences with the fact that, unless this loan meets with favorable consideration from the friends of the house and church, and creditors, the committee is satisfied that there will be no alternative but to surrender the property to the trustees under present mortgages, to be sold by them for the benefit of the holders of the bonds, and leave the remainder of the debt, which will be large, to be paid by the church when and in such manner as the General Conference in its wisdom may provide;

And be it further resolved, That the agent be instructed to have prepared a form of mortgage and bond in accordance with the foregoing resolutions.

This plan will make an annual interest not exceeding $12,000. This, we believe, the house can and will pay, as well as create a sinking fund with which to take up the principal.

On the foregoing the agent makes the following statements:

First. He believes it to be in the interest of those holding claims against the Publishing House, in the shape of notes, open accounts, or second mortgage bonds, to exchange these for the proposed four per cent mortgage bonds, for the reasons: (1) That the house, machinery, fixtures, and all that we have, are covered by first mortgage bonds and prior liens; and if the payment of these be enforced—and they will be if some arrangements are not made—it will take all the property to satisfy these claims, leaving nothing for unsecured creditors. (2) He believes that with the change of all the liabilities into a bonded debt, drawing only four per cent, that the house will be able to pay the interest and create a sinking fund that will finally extinguish the principal. (3) He fears that with the present heavy debt, principal and interest, the house will never be able to meet its liabilities. Four per cent. bonds upon negotiable securities is a good investment. Here is a fair chance for the creditors to save themselves and sustain the house.

Second. The agent suggests that here also is a good opportunity for the church and its friends to relieve themselves of a most oppressive burden. The church cannot repudiate; the church cannot bear the odium of bankruptcy in her great connectional enterprises; the church must meet her pecuniary responsibilities. Here is an obligation which by general consent is binding upon the whole church, as recognized in a resolution of the late General Conference. There may have been mismanagement or prodigality; no matter—the church contracted these debts through her authorized agent, and she must shoulder the responsibility. A few hundred brave souls can meet and overcome the present embarrassments, and yet have a handsome income for themselves and their families after them. The bonds of the house, put on the footing proposed, will be equal to any four per cent. bonds in this country. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars will remove all the first mortgage bonds and liens, and this amount we propose to raise without delay. Then the creditors exchanging their claims for four per cent. bonds, the work is about done, and the house will go forward without impediment and become a great power for good. We cannot afford to give up the Christian Advocate, the Sunday school literature, our Discipline, hymn-book, and other standard works. The Publishing House must not go down. Nearly eight hundred thousand members and a million of friends cannot stand by and see it topple into ruin. Send your name for ten thousand, one thousand, five hundred, one hundred dollar bonds, and the work is done.

Understand, the bonds will not be issued for the money expected till the amount is fully pledged to free the institution from all its liabilities, and put it fairly on the ground indicated in the foregoing preamble and resolutions. Let the members of the church, and the friends of sound Christian literature, and of the laboring classes, rally to the standard, and a noble work will be accomplished.

Please send your response to the undersigned designating how many bonds, and of what denomination you will take.

J. B. McFERRIN, Agent.

Periodicals.

—The Church Offering is a collection of anthems and chants adapted to all the exigencies of the church, together with a variety of pieces for special days. So says the title-page. We begin, from a circular from the publishers, that "the church" referred to is the Protestant Episcopal Church. Why it is not so put on the title-page we do not know. The collection, however, is a valuable one, and will commend itself to other churches as well as the church, although specially adapted to the Protestant Episcopal Church service. A glance at the index shows that in this book there is a full chant service covering 20 pages, a full anthem service covering 20 pages, and anthems, etc., for occasional use, covering 44 pages. And of each kind there is a variety provided. Christ is there are beginning Gloriosa, etc. The work is by L. O. Emerson. Published by Ditson & Co., Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

—The September-October number of the North American Review contains the following articles: Is the Reformer any Longer Needed? by George W. Julian; The Readjustment of Vocations, by William T. Harris, LL. D.; Torpedo Warfare, by D. D. Porter, Admiral U. S. Navy; What is Inspiration? a symposium, by Rev. F. H. Hedge, D. D., Rev. E. A. Washburn, D. D., Rev. Chauncey Giles, Rev. M. P. Newman, D. D., Most Rev. James Gibbons, D. D., Archbishop of Baltimore, and John Fiske; Civil Service Reform, by John Jay, chairman of the commission on the New York custom-house; Alfred de Musset, by T. S. Perry; Kin Beyond Sea, by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M. P.; Contemporary Literature. Published at 30 Broadway, New York, and for sale by book-sellers and news dealers generally.

—The London Quarterly Review, July, 1878, American edition the Leonard Scott Publishing Company—contains the following articles: 1. Martin Joseph Routh. 2. The English Woman at School. 3. The Duke of Wellington and the Aristocracy. 4. Lambeth Palace. 5. Madame du Deffand. 6. The Block in the House of Commons. 7. Catherine of Russia. 8. The Crown and the Army. 9. The People of Turkey.

—The October magazines are beginning to appear. First to hand received is Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine. It is, as usual, profusely illustrated, and abounds in fresh and entertaining articles. No better number has been issued than this one for October.

—The American Agriculturist for September is profusely illustrated and filled with valuable reading matter. This periodical is equally welcome to the country and the city home. It is entertaining and instructive to all classes of people.

—Golden Shore is another little book of songs for the Sunday school, and of about the average merit. By J. F. Kinsey. Published by F. W. Helmick, Cincinnati. Price, 30 cents.

—The Farm Journal for September is replete with seasonable information for our Southern planters.

—The Southern Cultivator for September is an unusually fine number of this excellent periodical.

—Vick's Illustrated Monthly for September is a very beautiful number of this publication.

—On the Profit of Adversity.—It is good that we have sometimes some troubles and crosses; for they often make a man enter into himself, and reconsider that he is there in banishment, and ought not to place his trust in any worldly thing.

It is good that we be sometimes contradicted, and that men think ill or unduly of us; and this, although we do and intend well.

These things help often to the attaining of humility, and defend us from vain glory; for then we are more inclined to seek God for our inward witness, when outwardly we be contemned by men, and when there is no credit given unto us.

And therefore a man should settle himself so fully in God that he need not to seek many comforts of men.

When a good man is afflicted, tempted or troubled with evil thoughts, then he understandeth better the great need he hath of God, without whom he perceiveth he can do nothing that is good.

Then also he sorroweth, lamenteth and prayeth for by reason of the misery he suffereth.

Then he is weary of living longer, and wisheth that death would come, that he might depart and be with Christ.

Then also he well perceiveth that perfect security and full peace cannot be had in this world.—Thomas A'Kempis.

Suffering well borne is better than suffering removed. When we reach the blessed garden above we shall find that out of the very bruises and wounds over which we sighed and groaned on earth, have sprung very best graftches, bearing most precious fruit for eternity.—Bushnell.

VANDALIA LINE. The attention of our readers and the traveling public is called to the notice of the above line. For parties going East by way of St. Louis there is no better, more comfortable, accommodations and elegant palace cars, gliding noiselessly, swiftly and safely along over a track so smooth that one is almost unconscious of motion unless he chances to look out of the window. Offer for the time a home unequaled in splendor and luxuries each by anything the most fastidious traveler of the past generation, or even dreamed of. The popularity of this old and reliable road is increasing rapidly and steadily on the increase. The efficient and well-known and highly respected general manager, O. Simpson, are fully appreciated by the traveling public.

The Crescent Mutual Insurance Company is the oldest local one of any fire insurance company in this city, having been organized in 1849. Its president, Thomas A. Adams, has been at the head of its affairs; this vast experience in insurance science and careful management have made him the highest authority on all questions touching underwriting.

The secretary, H. V. Ogden, is well known in the commercial community as an able and competent business man, and has made most judicious selections.

The capital fully paid, surplus and reserve, with assets as stated in the statement on this page.

During the summer months many of the wealthy families who live at the Grand Hotel, New York, during the winter, go active to Newport, the pride and boast of their country seats. At this time a part of this great hotel, with its many rich rooms and fabulous suites, are thrown open to the humbler visitor to New York at a very reasonable rate of charges. Of all New York hotels the Grand, on Broadway and Thirty-First street, is the best located for the summer visitor.

Crawford House, Cincinnati. This hotel, under the management of Lewis Vanden, is one of the most popular in the West. Parties going to Cincinnati should not fail to stop there. The terms are only $2 a day.

The Great Jackson Route is now making the quickest time to New York ever known, leaving New Orleans daily at 5:45 P. M., and arriving at New York at 6:35 A. M. Allowing for the difference in time between the two cities, the run is made in the unprecedented time of fifty-nine and three-quarter hours. This quick time is made only by the Great Jackson Route, and is the result of its enterprise in rebuilding its track with steel rails and new ties, at heavy expense, and the thorough system of ballasting that has been undertaken. This fast train will be of great advantage to the people of this city, which it is hoped they will show their appreciation of by their patronage. Only one change of cars, which is made at Columbus, Ohio, where breakfast is taken in the splendid dining hall at that place at 8 A. M.

This route also makes the quickest time to Boston, arriving at 2.45 P. M. Actual running time, sixty-seven and one-half hours. This makes it the most desirable route for all New England points. The time to all intermediate points is correspondingly less, thus making this the quickest and best route to all the Southern and Eastern cities.

Excursion tickets to Waukesha, Oconomowoc and all the Northwestern summer resorts, to Niagara Falls, Put-in-Bay, etc., at reduced rates, with the quickest time ever made by any line, and only one change of cars.

We refer parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 42 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

Mr. E. E. F. Ross, one of the staff of this paper, is now traveling through the West and East on business connected with the Advocate. Any attentions shown him will be appreciated.

COOKING CHICKENS.

For broiling, split a chicken down the back, clean and wash thoroughly, twist the tip of the wing over the second joint, wipe the body dry, inside and out, with a clean meat cloth (never with a wiping towel,) spread it out, and with a rolling-pin or potato-masher break the projecting breast bone, so that the chicken may lie flat on the gridiron when ready to broil. Set it in the ice-chest for several hours after cleaning; still better if it is left there all night, and thus be sure it is well aired.

About an hour before time to cook the chicken put the giblets into a small skillet with a little pepper; pour in a cup and a half of boiling water, and set it where they will boil gently till quite tender. Then salt them, take up and chop very fine; sifting over a little flour. When sufficiently fine, return them to the water in which they were boiled, stirring occasionally as it thickens. Beat to a smooth paste three tablespoonfuls of butter and one of flour, ready for use when the chicken is cooked. Put the gridiron over a clear but not fierce fire. When hot rub the bars with a clean cloth dipped in nicely-clarified drippings or butter, and place the chicken over. Sprinkle on a little black pepper. Turn often to prevent scorching. When of a delicate brown on both sides, but not more than half cooked, sprinkle on both sides what salt is needed and a little more pepper. Leave it over the fire a moment for the seasoning to penetrate, then put it into a steamer or farina kettle (a steamer is much the best large enough at the bottom to keep the chicken in good shape. Spread over it the butter and flour that has been made ready, and then cover or "smother" it in rich cream, if plenty, or add more butter and cover with milk. Cover very close, if a farina kettle is used, so no steam may escape, and set it into the receiver or lower kettle, in which there should be enough boiling water just to touch the bottom of the upper kettle. Let it simmer or "smother" in the cream and seasoning from fifteen to twenty-five minutes, according to the size of the chicken.

When about ready to take up, pour the gravy in which the giblets are simmering over it; then take the upper kettle out of the receiver, set it over the stove, let it boil up briskly two or three minutes, stirring the liquid gently, without disturbing the chicken, till it all thickens; then lift it carefully to a platter on which are slices of nicely-toasted bread, and pour the gravy about it.

These directions are long on account of the minute specifications, but the whole work can be done in thirty-five minutes, and if on a faithful trial this is not conceded to be vastly superior to the common specimens of dried-up, tough broiled chicken we shall be disappointed. For those who like highly-seasoned food a very small sprinkling of savory herbs or a little tomato catchup may be thought an improvement.

Fried chicken should be prepared in a similar manner. Fry carefully in hot butter or lard till delicately brown on both sides, then treat as broiled chicken.

Until chickens are full-fleshed and suitable for baking this double cooking is the only way we are acquainted with to secure a wholesome and palatable article.

When old and tough, baking chickens may be prepared in a similar way, only reversing the order—"smothering" first, an hour, if very tough, in water, instead of cream, and bake till well browned.—Christian Union.

COWS HOLDING UP MILK.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman summarizes the physiological peculiarities of the mammary glands of the cow in the following manner, thus explaining why cows can hold up their milk:

The bag or udder is divided into four parts, entirely distinct from each other, except as they are held together by membranous ligaments. The milk in each is held in coalmont tubes, which, like the roots of a tree, are all concentrated into one, just above the teat—the milk entering that funnel-shaped organ by a single channel. Just at the upper end of the teat the walls of this channel are contracted, and the contraction is surrounded by a band of muscular fibers. The will of the cow can operate on this band, contracting or expanding it at pleasure, making it operate like a valve. At the junction of each smaller tube with a larger one is a similar contraction and band, also under the control of the will. Ordinarily these bands are contracted as in the neck of the bladder, so that the milk has to crowd its way through them to get from the smaller into the larger tubes. This is an admirable arrangement for sustaining the weight of the milk equally in all parts of the udder, preventing it from pressing heavily upon the teats. When the udder is full, if the milk is drawn out of the teats, relieving the pressure in them, it requires a vigorous effort of the will of the cow to prevent the pressure above from crowding the milk down to fill the vacancy. If the udder is only partly filled, she can hold the milk back more easily, and the less there is in it the more easily she can maintain the tension of muscular bands necessary to prevent entirely the milk from flowing through them. When the milker first takes hold of the teat and begins to milk, the excitement causes the cow to contract the bands so firmly as to hold back the milk perfectly for a time. But presently this vigorous contraction will begin to slacken, and the milk will pour through, and if all is quiet she will relax the bands fully, when the milk settles down upon the teats, and it quickly drawn it can all be milked to the very last drop. But this perfect relaxation will only last for a short time. If the milk is not soon extracted she will soon begin to tighten up the muscular bands again, and the last part will be held back and permanently retained when the milker probably thinks he has got it all, because it stops coming. A cow should, therefore, be milked quickly as well as quietly. A calf will draw her milk in three minutes, and a milker should come as near that time as possible. If the time of milking is much prolonged she will become impatient, and be sure not to "give down" perfectly. The quietest and quickest milker gets the most and best milk, because he gets all the "strippings," which are the richest part.—Kansas Farmer.

STEWED POTATOES.

Your potatoes must have been previously boiled and cold, and before going farther let us tell you how to boil the potatoes in their skins. First wash them well; use a small scrubbing-brush to get all the dirt out of the eyes and eyes. If this is not well done there will be an earthy, disagreeable flavor, which will spoil all. We emphasize this, for no succeeding pains in cooking will or can remedy it. Put them on in salted boiling water. Let them cook quickly, but not furiously; try them with a fork, and as soon as they are done—not a moment before—take them from the fire and pour off the water at once. Set the pot back on the fire again, without the cover, to dry any moisture which remains.

If potatoes are put into cold water they will be soggy, and the same result will follow if they are left in the water after they are done. For stewed potatoes, they must be done in the morning or on the previous day. They will not taste the same if warmed up when just boiled. Pare them nicely, taking off the skin only, not with a great piece of the potato to throw away. There is often great and unnecessary waste in peeling potatoes. Cut them up into dice and put them into your stew-pan or use a porcelain omelette pan, add a teacup of good milk—cream is better if you have it—a good piece of butter, salt and pepper to taste. Let them cook slowly, stirring often. They cannot be cooked in less than ten minutes, and fifteen is better. Serve them hot. They should be rich and creamy when done; if thin and watery, depend upon it you have not followed the directions carefully. We have been so minute in our directions that we must reserve the remainder until next week. In the meantime let us hear from you if you care for our "hints," and if you find them helpful to you. If you desire information on any other points, we will gladly do our best to assist you.—Intelligencer.

THE TOAD.

Not only are toads harmless, but they are absolutely and directly useful to us, perambulating our fields and gardens at night, and devouring vast quantities of injurious insects which could never be destroyed by the hand of man. The mode in which a toad takes his prey is very curious. The singularly beautiful eye of the toad is as quick as it is bright, and if within the range of its vision an insect or a grub should happen to move, the toad is sure to see it, and nearly certain to catch it. First, the toad holds its head as high as possible, so as to make sure of its prey, and then crawls slowly toward it, preferring to get under it, if possible. When it is nearly within reach it gazes intent at the insect, its mouth being brought nearer and nearer; something pink then flashes from its mouth, and the insect vanishes as if by magic. The pink flash is the tongue of the toad, which is formed in a rather curious way. The base of the tongue is fixed close to the lower jaw, and is long and tapering, the tip pointing down the throat when it is at rest. When, however, it is used for catching prey, it is thrown out with a sort of "flick," and the tip, which is covered with a glutinous secretion, adheres to the insect and conveys it down the toad's throat before the prey has time to make an effort for escape. When the toad swallows its prey it does it with a mighty effort, during which the eyes almost disappear, the size of the insect having little to do with the vehemence of the demonstration. Sometimes, when a large beetle is swallowed, it does struggle, but too late, and for some time its struggles may be seen through the thin and ribless sides of its captorer, the toad sitting the while in perfect composure, not in the least affected by the scratchings and kickings that are going on in its interior.—The Lancet.

RAISING POULTRY FOR MARKET.

In an article on poultry the Philadelphia Times says:

As a general rule we do not think farmers pay enough attention to the production of poultry for sale. Carefully kept accounts will demonstrate that one pound of poultry can be produced at about half the cost of the same weight of beef or pork, and always meet with a ready market. Another advantage is that it can be attended to quite as well, if not better, by women and children than by men; thus economizing the labor of the whole family, and directing it into the production of profit for the general purse.

Try the experiment of allowing the children, if large enough, to take care of the poultry for a share of the products, either in eggs or in dressed poultry. Charge them with all the food consumed, and credit them with all the eggs and flesh consumed by the family, and note your percentage in the speculation, and the benefit it has been to them.

The Maryland Farmer puts it in this way:

If farmers who think poultry does not pay would give their feathered stock to their sons or daughters, with permission to enjoy and own, any profit that might accrue from them, they would soon be convinced that "there is something in it." There certainly is no more health-promoting exercise than that afforded by caring for or having the management of a flock of poultry; and if the flock is one of any of the pure breeds, there is, in addition to the exhilarating influence, an enthusiasm that causes what might otherwise be considered a task to become a pleasure, and therefore profit and pleasure are combined. A young lady of Bethel, Pa., during the year of 1871, kept a strict account of all expenditures for feed, etc., for her yard of fowls, and at the regular market prices for eggs and chickens, and she cleared above all expenses $300, besides having more stock on hand than she started with. Is not this an incentive sufficient to awaken an interest among the numerous fair readers of the farmers in favor of gallinaceous stock? It is certainly worthy of emulation.

ACREAGE REQUIRED FOR A COW. How much land is required for the support of a cow? This question depends so much for an answer on the circumstances of the soil as not to admit of a very definite answer. In a dairy competition in Jefferson county, N. Y., in 1857, the first prize dairy, of sixteen cows, was kept on thirty acres of land; the second premium dairy, of eighteen cows, on sixty acres; the third dairy, of thirteen cows, on thirty acres; the fourth, of twenty-nine cows, on fifty-five acres; the fifth, of twenty-eight cows, on ninety acres. Mr. Schuli, of Little Falls, N. Y., estimates that the land in pasturage and hay requisite for the support of a cow is three acres; and this is the estimate of Mr. Carrington for moderately good dairy farms in England. In Belgium ten acres of land support two cows, one heifer, and one yearling or calf; but when the calves are sold off young, and cows in full milk are only kept, the proportion is two cows to seven and one-half acres. Colman estimates three acres of pasture as requisite for a cow in Berkshire county, Mass., while in some towns two acres of pasturage are sufficient. Mr. Farrington, in the report of the American Dairymen's Association, thinks that on the average four acres are required per cow, for summer and winter keep; while Mr. N. A. Willard thinks that in Herkimer county, N. Y., one and one-half to two acres of pasture per cow will answer, and in some exceptional cases one acre.—Scientific Farmer.

HUNGARIAN GRASS FOR COWS.—The following is the testimony of Dr. Lorlug respecting Hungarian grass: "I believe I can make more milk with this grass, cut and mixed with corn meal and shorts, than I can with the best timothy hay cut and mixed in the same manner. And when you remember that you can raise on ordinary land, by sowing the seed of Hungarian grass late in June, from two and a half to three and a half tons of good fodder to the acre, and that this crop can be sown after we have ascertained whether we are to have a good crop of hay or not, you will see the value of this grass. I have such a high opinion of it that on my own farm I have this year and last year raised from seventy-five to one hundred tons of it for the purpose of feeding to my milch cows during the winter."

CHARCOAL FOR FOWLS.—There is one thing which Nature does not supply, and which civilization renders quite necessary to fowls. It is charcoal. Charcoal made of wood does not answer the purpose. It has no taste of food, is not attractive to the fowl, and is seldom eaten. But if any one will put an ear of ripe corn into the fire until the grains are well charred, and then shell off the corn and throw it to the flock, he will see an eagerness developed and a healthy constitution brought about which will make a decided improvement. All pale combs will become a bright red, that busy song which precedes laying will be heard, and the average yield of eggs will be greatly increased.—Germantown Telegraph.

SPICE SALT.—You can make this very nicely by drying, powdering and mixing, by repeated siftings, the following ingredients: One quarter of an ounce each of powdered thyme, bay-leaf and pepper; one-eighth of an ounce each of marjoram and cayenne pepper; one-half of an ounce each of powdered clove and nutmeg; to every four ounces of this powder add one ounce of salt, and keep the mixture in an air-tight vessel. One ounce of it added to three pounds of stuffing, or farcemeat of any kind, make a delicious seasoning.—American Agriculturist.

POTATOES PLANTED DEEP.—We tried the experiment this year, on several alternate rows of potatoes about thirty rods long, of planting a part about two or three inches deep and another part five inches deep. The latter invariably produce about twenty to twenty-five per cent. more potatoes, the treatment in every other respect being the same. They were cultivated flat, which always give more than when ridged.—Rural Home.

FISH FRITTERS.—Take salt codfish and soak it over night. In the morning throw the water off the fish, put on fresh, and set on the range until it comes to a boil. Do not let it boil, as that will harden it. Then pick it up very fine, season with pepper, mace, and perhaps a little salt. Make a batter of a pint of milk and three eggs, stir in the fish, and fry in small cakes. Any kind of cold fish makes nice fritters.

IT IS WELL KNOWN.

Many grocers sell Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder at the same price of the cheaper kinds, and, as they pay more for it, make less money; hence they never sell it unless the purchaser demands it. Pure articles cannot be made as cheap as those that are adulterated.

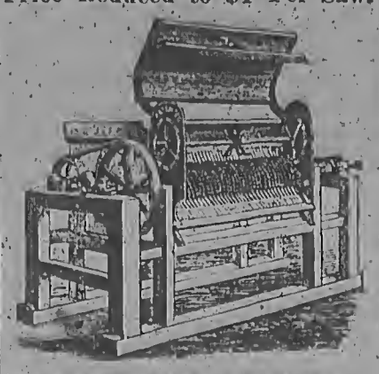
JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
COTTON FACTORS,
59 Carondelet St., New Orleans,
GENERAL AGENTS FOR
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.
PATENTED JULY 18, 1873.
Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same time, while economizing steam or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very clean, the length of the staple is increased producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. WHITWORTH
FEMALE COLLEGE,
BROOKHAVEN, MISS.
Will Reopen September 25, 1878.

Pupils last term	203
Boarders	133
Music class	151
Graduating class	25

Board and tuition in English for entire session year (see catalogue) $150 00
Scholarship for ten years, board and tuition in English 100 00
Scholarship for four years, board and full college course 60 00
Same, and Instrumental Music 70 00
Same, Instrumental Music, and Drawing or Painting 80 00
The object of the scholarship is to raise funds for erecting the new college building.

The unprecedented success of this College is the best recommendation.

Bishop McTyeire writes in the Nashville Christian Advocate: "Several days spent in the delightful college family at Brookhaven left on me no doubt as to how this success has been achieved. The location is good, and the management better. . . . Long will I remember the morning hymns at chapel prayers. . . . Another fact noteworthy was the plainness of dressing—neat, tasteful, but plain."

The health record is as good as that of any school in Kentucky, Virginia or Tennessee.

The corner stone of the new college building will be laid in August.

Patronize this school and you will assist in further developing an institution which has been rapidly growing for eleven years. Send for a catalogue.
